No official decision in the case has been made and there likely will be none. This is unfortunate because it places the Senate in the position of being asked to promote a man where there is serious doubt as to his ability and a man against whom very serious charges have been made by fellow members of his profession. I think it fair both to General Clark and to the Senate that this matter be settled before his promotion is voted. I, for one, am not willing to vote to place lives of our soldiers in the hands of any general where there is the slightest doubt of his qualifications.

I am willing to observe further that public reports describe a tense and uncooperative situation existing in the military zone now commanded by General Clark. Several incidents have been reported which indicate beyond question, if these reports are true, that the Russian commander opposite General Clark has little respect for him. The Russian refuses to answer protests made by General Clark and continues further provocative incidents.

Mr. President, such actions can start wars. It is my opinion that General Clark should be transferred to some other zone of command and a new commander placed in his stead—one of unimpeachable ability, and one whom the Russian commander might have respect for. I fear that if General Clark is left in this tense situation that we may have, because of his mishandling of the relations with the Russian commander, another fiasco far more tragic than the Rapido River. We may have one that will start another war.

Mr. President, I take my stand with the Thirty-sixth Division and request that the RECORD show me as voting against the confirmation of Mark Clark. I am opposed to rewarding incompetency with promotion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who is absent on official business in Paris, sent a cablegram that he desired also to be recorded as voting against the confirmation of the nomination of General Clark. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the telegram from Senator CONNALLY be inserted in the RECORD at this point, and that he be recorded as opposed to the confirmation.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The cablegram is as follows:

JUNE 20, 1946.

Pair against Clark and have statement made on floor to that effect.

TOM CONNALLY.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I want to say a few words about Gen. Mark Clark. I, of course, am not in position to pass any judgment in respect to the military competence of General Clark. I did visit the Cassino battlefield last fall and saw the Rapido scene and the general situation with respect to which this controversy has arisen. I will say that I have talked to many officers and men who were still in Italy in our armed forces, and they all expressed the greatest confidence in General Clark, and none of them seemed to feel that General Clark was responsible for the loss of life which occurred at the Rapido crossing. As I said, I am not competent to pass judgment upon that subject.

But I will say that I had occasion to visit Vienna where General Clark has been and still is in command, and to learn from many sources there of the utmost confidence in which he is held, and the reliance that is felt in him, and the excellent job he has been doing as our commanding officer. I believe he has the confidence of all the United States representatives there who are familiar with the work he is doing.

I think the way he has gotten along with the Russians has been creditable and commendable, and that his responsibility there has been discharged in the most soldierly manner and in such a way as to reflect credit on himself and upon his country.

I hope the Senate will see fit to confirm the nomination of General Clark to be major general.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not understand that the message received from the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] or the statement made by the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. O'DANIEL] indicate any desire on their part to bring about any delay in the action of the Senate on this nomination. I understand they wanted their position made known in the RECORD. I know nothing about the incident or episode concerning which complaint is made regarding General Clark. I know that during the activities of our forces in Europe General Clark attained a very high reputation as a commanding officer, for initiative and decision, and he has been recommended for this promotion by the War Department and by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

I hope the nomination will be confirmed without delay.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. THOMAS] was unable to be here this evening. On behalf of the Military Affairs Committee I should like to make a brief statement with respect to the gallant Thirty-sixth Infantry and Gen. Mark Clark.

A detailed analysis of the casualties suffered by the Thirty-sixth Infantry Division for the period January 20–31, which involved the follow through of every man's case by name, developed the following: Killed 319, wounded 800, captured and missing 731, total 1,850.

General Clark graduated from the Military Academy April 20, 1917, and at the time of the Rapido River battle had been a professional soldier for 27 years. He is a graduate of the Infantry School, the Command and General Staff School, and the Army War College. His service includes 4 years on the War Department General Staff, and his record is outstanding in efficiency and superior performance of assigned duties.

The point of attack was selected because it alone offered the possibility of complying with the directive from higher headquarters—Fifteenth Army Group—which called for the Fifth Army to make as strong a thrust as possible toward Frosinone. The only avenue of approach practicable was up the Liri River Valley. The terrain selected would have permitted the maximum exploitation by armored forces of any success attained in establishing a bridgehead and breaching the German defense lines.

The II Corps—General Keyes, commanding—weighed the relative merits of crossing north of Cassino—front of the Thirty-fourth Division—and crossing in the vicinity of St. Angelo. In view of the directive to exploit with armor toward Frosinone, General Keyes recommended the attack in the vicinity of St. Angelo—front of the Thirty-sixth Division.

In selecting the point of attack both the Fifth Army and the Second Corps commanders considered the area assigned the Thirty-fourth Division. The idea of a major attack in this sector was rejected because:

(a) This could not be considered a critical area for the enemy. The natural strength of the position insured its invulnerability with a minimum number of troops committed to its defense. Any local successes which did not include possession of Cassino and its controlling heights would not menace his defensive positions nor facilitate the contemplated link-up of the main Fifth Army elements with the enveloping forces to be landed at Anzio.

(b) The terrain in this area was unsuitable for the employment of armor. The river, split into several courses, meanders through a flat marshy valley. Immediately to the west of the valley lies the mountain mass dominating both the Rapido and Liri River Valleys and presenting a tremendous obstacle to any further advance of armor once it was across the river.

(c) The complete lack of roads leading to and through this rugged terrain made it impossible to provide logistic support for a major effort. The Thirty-fourth Division was forced to delay making a major attack until January 24, when an improvised road had been constructed. Even then the supply difficulties limited the strength of their attacks to one regimental combat team. It would have been impossible to move the Thirty-sixth Division into this area and deliver a coordinated major attack in time to assist the scheduled landings at Anzio. A delay in the Anzio landings was impossible as most of the landing craft involved were committed for use in the Normandy landings and their transfer to England could not be further postponed.

The experience of the Thirty-fourth Division in crossing the Rapido River in the area in question during the period January 24 to 29 demonstrated the impracticability of attempting a major thrust at this point. The division attacked January 24, without armored support but the attempted crossing failed in the face of strong German defenses. A second attack on January 26 also failed when an entire tank battalion, supporting the attack, bogged down in the flat, flooded river valley. The third attack on January 29 was successful in obtaining a foothold across the river due to the support given by 23 tanks which successfully crossed the river well to the north of the division sector and moved down the right bank of the river.

However, operations of these tanks were limited to a very restricted area some two to three hundred yards in width between the river bank and the hill mass to the west. The attempts of the infantry to force a passage through Cassino could only be supported by one tank at a time due to terrain restrictions. As is well known, the German defenses in Cassino successfully resisted all our efforts from this direction for many weeks.

The time available was limited by instructions from Fifteenth Army Group. On January 12 the Army group commander directed that "these operations will culminate with an attack by the United States Second Corps across the Rapido on or about January 20." All river-crossing equipment available to the Fifth Army was placed at the disposal of the Thirty-sixth Division.

General Clerk as Army commander assigned the task of gaining a bridgehead across the Rapido River to the Thirty-sixth Division through the Second Corps commander. The second attack was ordered by the corps commander in an effort to accomplish the assigned mission. The third attack ordered by the Second Corps commander was canceled on orders of the Army commander, General Clark.

As a point of fact the transfer of troops from the transports to the landing craft took place 8 or 9 miles seaward of the landing beaches instead of 12 to 14 miles, as stated. The decision as to where the transfer of troops from large transports to the landing craft will be made is not within the province of the Army commander of troops. It is a decision made by the naval commander of the amphibious force. The point of transfer is governed by the presence of marine mine fields and by enemy artillery and air capabilities. Transfer of troops to the smaller craft decreases their vulnerability to such enemy defensive measures.

The regiment of the Forty-third Division—One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Infantry—had not been forced out of the area but had been moved to the left on orders of the Sixth Corps commander to close a gap which existed between the British Tenth Corps and the United States Sixth Corps. To replace this unit and fill the gap thus created the corps commander ordered the only unit he had available, the Second Battalion, One Hundred and Forty-third Infantry, Thirty-sixth Division, to take position between the Sele and Calore Rivers.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 20, 1946

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Heavenly Father, that back of all the issues of life are infinite wisdom, power, and goodness. As Thou hast dignified Thy children with choice and holdest us responsible that the seed we now sow will be the harvest of some subsequent tomorrow, with faith in Thy providence, help us to submit ourselves to the vicissitudes of life. We pray that the kingdom of earth may become the kingdom of our God, with no more tumult and strife, when all honest toil shall be a fruitful vine and the leaves of the tree shall be for the healing of the nations. Let there be a replenishing of our ideals, strengthened by the spirit of penitence and prayer. We pray that we may be generous, distributing the treasures of encouragement for those who have failed, and at the last may it be said that we labored, toiled, and achieved, for it is better to have saved a life than to have founded a kingdom. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the time for requests that Members be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD or to address the House for 1 minute has passed. We will have two votes in connection with unfinished business, and we have a full program for the remainder of the day.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I believe it would be well for the Speaker to state for the information of the House the two matters of unfinished business immediately pending and the order in which they will be taken up.

The SPEAKER. The first order of business is the vote on the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole that the enacting clause be stricken from the bill S. 324, the national cemeteries bill. The next unfinished business is the vote on the passage of the bill H. R. 6579, the flood-control bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is the final vote on that bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

NATIONAL CEMETERY BILL

The SPEAKER. The question is on the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union that the enacting clause be stricken out of the bill S. 524.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. As I recall, that is the so-called cemetery bill.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I understand in Committee of the Whole the motion to strike out the enacting clause was adopted by both a voice vote and a teller vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not state a parliamentary inquiry.

All those who favor taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-three Members have arisen. In the opinion of the Chair, that is not one-fifth of those present.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SIKES) there were—ayes 168, noes 82.

So the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union that the enacting clause be stricken out was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will notify the Senate of the action of the House.

FLOOD-CONTROL BILL

The SPEAKER. The next unfinished business is the question on the passage of the bill H. R. 6597, the so-called flood-control bill.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Ohio) there were—ayes 202, noes 38.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACTS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1362) to amend the Railroad Retirement Acts, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1362, with Mr. PATMAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. For the information of the Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] has 45 minutes remaining, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] has 43 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] has 1 hour and 24 minutes remaining.

The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RABIN].

Mr. RABIN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important bill. I am a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; I am a new member; this is my first term, and this was the first bill to come before the committee during the period in which I have been a member.

The Congress is the legislative branch of our system of government, but I find from listening to the testimony and listening to the reports on this bill that the duties of a Congressman are not only legislative in nature; they are quasi-judicial in nature. We listen to the testimony of witnesses and try to form a decision. That part of our duties is quasi-judicial. Now, I tried to approach this bill in a judicial manner. I had no preconceived notions as to whether the bill proposed by the gentleman from Ohio was a good one or a bad one; I had no idea whether it was feasible or not feasible; I arrived at a conclusion after listening to the testimony of the witnesses. The testimony was quite complicated; it involved a great many facts; it involved a great many figures; we had the testimony of actuaries and we had to consider their testimony very carefully. I am no actuary. I do not pretend to be able to give you an analysis of the figures presented by those actuaries. I could if I took the time and effort to do so but I would not attempt to do it on the floor here today. Let me say, however, that after listening to the testimony of the witnesses, I came to the conclusion that the Crosser version of the railroad retirement provisions was the one that I was ready to support and willing to support. I came to that conclusion despite the fact the majority of the committee thought otherwise.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABIN. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has made reference to this matter as being complicated and involved. I certainly agree with him that it is. In view of that fact does not the gentleman believe that the careful study given to the matter by the subcommittee and then by the committee with the recommendation coming from a great majority of the committee should carry great weight with the House of Representatives in determining what ought to be done?

Mr. RABIN. Yes; I agree with the gentleman, I think it should carry great weight; but I do not accept the proposition that the majority is always right. The minority could be right and the majority could be wrong. That is why we have minority opinions and minority reports. I do not think we must accept as a basic proposition that the majority is always right. If we did there would be no need for debate on the floor. After listening to the testimony I believe in this instance the majority is not right.

I shall not now enter into a debate on social philosophies. I believe in the liberalization of the Railroad Retirement Act. I believe we are making progress in social security.

The issue between the majority and the minority is merely one that goes to the matter of feasibility. Is the Crosser bill a feasible bill? Is the Crosser bill practical from the standpoint of cost?

The majority dissent—if I may put it that way, because the Crosser bill was the one originally introduced, is based on the theory it is actuarially unsound. That is the chief point at issue. The report of the committee turns on that point primarily.

Sitting as a judge, what did I hear? I heard the testimony of Mr. Latimer in support of the Crosser bill. Now, who is Mr. Latimer? Mr. Latimer is the Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board. He is also an economist. He was chosen by President Roosevelt to prepare the figures on the basis of which this Board was founded and he has been in charge of the work of the Railroad Retirement Board from the time of its inception. He testified—giving figures—that the Crosser bill is sound, that the Crosser tax requirements can support the liberal features that are contained in the Crosser bill. However, we are told that Mr. Latimer is a partial witness. After a judge listens to a case, and decides it for one party, I think it is hardly fair to say that the judge is partial because of his decision. Only on that ground may Mr. Latimer be deemed to be partial. After he had worked on the Railroad Retirement Board for the number of years he did—from the date of its inception—he made his finding, based on the figures produced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. RABIN. Mr. Chairman, we cannot properly say he is partial merely because of his conclusion. However, the majority of the committee thought it wise to employ the services of another actuary.

The committee employed one Robert J. Myers, an actuary, and asked him to give his opinion. The report of the majority of the committee is based on the opinion of Mr. Myers. Now, let us look at Mr. Myers' opinion and see what he says about the testimony given before the full committee. Mr. Myers did not testify before the full committee. He did not testify at the open hearings at all. He was called in merely to report. What does he say? He said that—

> In general, extensive cost estimates were presented only by Mr. Latimer and Mr. Corbett, the latter dealing solely with the retirement system. All other discussions of cost were based on these figures or modifications thereof. Expert testimony of two prominent actuaries, Mr. Williamson and Mr. Booth, was taken in regard to retirement cost data. These witnesses primarily affirmed that Mr. Latimer's estimates were adequately prepared and that the results fell within a reasonable range, but they did not specifically set forth their own views as to the likely costs.

Mr. Myers upon whom the committee relies, states that Mr. Latimer was the only witness who testified to the figures from an actuarial standpoint and that his figures were supported by men whom Mr. Myers calls prominent actuaries—Mr. Booth and Mr. Williamson.

Who is Mr. Williamson? Mr. Williamson is an actuarial consultant with the Social Security Board and has been associated with that Board since 1936. From 1910 he was with the Travelers Insurance Co., of Hartford, Conn., and since 1916 assistant actuary of that company, specializing in pension plans.

Who is Mr. Booth? Mr. Booth is connected with the actuarial department of the Travalers Insurance Co., of Hartford, Conn., and has been with that institution for more than 30 years. He is a fellow by examination of the Actuarial Society of America and the American Institute of Actuaries.

I shall not discuss figures. I shall not discuss the pros and cons. After all, an actuary's estimate is based upon prognostications. He may be wrong in some degree. He may be a degree to the right or a degree to the left, but we must rely on those figures.

Here we have the testimony given by the Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board supported by eminent actuaries—Mr. Williamson and Mr. Booth.

We have the testimony of Mr. Myers, who was called as an expert by the committee, in support of their qualifications.

As a judge, I accept their testimony. Accepting that testimony I must assume at the outset that the Crosser bill is a feasible bill; that the Crosser bill is practical; that the Crosser costs are correct, and that the proposed taxable features contained therein are sufficient to support the Crosser bill. I urge you to support it.

BLIND AIDED BY RANDOLPH ACT

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the subcommittee of the House Labor Committee on aid to the physically handicapped, it was brought to my attention that today is the tenth anniversary of the enactment of the Randolph-Sheppard bill, a measure to effectuate the rehabilitation of the blind. During that period between 7 and 10 thousand blind persons have been placed in profitable employment. I thought that the Members might wish to know about this matter in order to join with the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], the coauthor of this bill, in the satisfaction he receives from the enactment of this high hype legislation which has done so much for blind persons.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in the past there has been a good deal of discussion about the method that was used to get expeditious action on this legislation. It is true that the first bill, the Crosser bill, was introduced over 2 years ago. Soon after the introduction of that bill hearings of a brief nature were held. Then from time to time during the entire 2 years there has been devoted to this legislation a great deal of attention. I know at one time over a period of about a month we met every day to hear witnesses for and against this legislation. The proposals have been very thoroughly studied. There came a time when some of us even on the committee wanted to get action on the legislation. Also, there were some Members of Congress not on the committee who wanted to get action on the legislation. Accordingly, the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] placed a petition on the Speaker's desk and invited Members to sign that petition.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Is it not true that at the time the discharge petition was put on the Speaker's desk the committee had completed its labors on the bill and directed the Legislative Drafting Service to put it in order to report it to the House?

Mr. BECKWORTH. That is substantially correct. It is also true that up to the time the petition was placed on the Speaker's desk we never had been able to get out a bill, and about 2 years had elapsed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Considering the fact that for more than 2 years the committee had failed and refused to act on this important legislation, does not the gentleman think the fact that the petition in question was finally placed on the Speaker's desk and quickly signed by 218 Members, might have had something to do with the committee's decision to report out its substitute for the Crosser bill?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I want to finish my statement. I will yield in just a moment.

The petition was placed on the Speaker's desk and about six or seven members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce signed the petition. At least six signed it; incidentally, one of them was and is a member of the transportation subcommittee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS]. To my certain knowledge he had studied the legislation a great deal.

But this situation is not without a parallel. It so happened that more than 2 years ago I introduced a terminal leave bill. I asked for consideration of that measure by the House Committee on Military Affairs, and from time to time they did work on it. I was told they were busy, and I am sure they were busy. The point I want to make is this: A member of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS], a very able and fair-minded man, who did a good job of work with reference to the terminal leave legislation, placed a petition on the Speaker's desk about the same time. It was signed by 218 Members of Congress. Incidentally, if I am not badly mistaken, it was signed by at least one member of the House Committee on Military Affairs. To assume that anything strange has taken place with reference to getting this legislation before the House is an incorrect assumption. The parallel runs true also in this connection. Soon after both petitions were signed we got action. I am not alleging that anybody has done anything wrong—not at all—but the petition method is one of the methods that is used to get expeditious action on legislation from time to time.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I asked the gentleman to yield to correct a very subtle and a very unfair suggestion made by the gentleman from Oklahoma that the filing of the petition had something to do with this bill's being reported by the committee. The committee had already ordered the bill reported before the petition was ever filed. Therefore, such a charge is unfounded, and I resent it.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I am not trying to reflect on anybody. I am simply stating that the parallel does exist as between our committee and the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I will yield in just a moment. I want to make one or two observations about the legislation.

There is one particular phase of this legislation in which I am very personally interested, because I happen to know something about an individual case which I am sure is not dissimilar to a good many other cases. It so happened that when I was at home last summer a friend of mine came to see me. He has worked for the railroad 18 years. He apparently is suffering from cancer. He told me that he had spent all of his savings, has sold his home and spent everything he had been able to get together trying to cure the disease he has. I seriously fear under the provisions of the committee amendment that this friend of mine cannot get any type of aid. Yet he writes me often as to how badly he needs help. The reason I say what I have said is this—and I hope I am incorrect because the man ought to have help and those like him ought to have help—if I understand the committee version of the bill that has been reported, he would have to show that the cancer was occupationally caused; in other words, that the disease came about because of his occupation. I do not know this positively, but I believe the legislation will be so interpreted. If that is true, he would not get any help whatsoever because it is very difficult to show in many instances that a given illness or injury came about as the result of one's occupation.

It is for this purpose that I took the floor to say something about the legislation, because I do hope somewhere along the line we will be able to get a provision in this legislation to take care of just this kind of case. If a man who has worked for the railroad 18 years and has contributed to the retirement fund cannot look to that fund for help when he gets in a situation like that of the friend I am talking about, where can he expect to get any help?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief observation?

Mr. BECKWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I desire to say that I think the gentleman's interpretation of the committee bill is absolutely correct. I do not believe any lawyer would seriously question that. I will add that I have several cases in mind similar to the one mentioned by the gentleman from Texas. The heartless manner in which some have been treated, after years of faithful service, is shameful.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I am sure the gentleman is correct in making that statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. With the gentleman's permission, I would like to add a word with reference to the petition that forced this bill here for consideration. Some members of the committee feel outraged that anyone should even intimate that the petition signed by 218 Members within less than 24 hours had the slightest connection with the sudden action of the committee. We were told the same about other bills. The committee was just about ready to act on this bill to pay enlisted men terminal leave, according to members of the committee. But Members know that in that instance, as well as in regard to the pending bill, it got action. If the petition did not get results, it proved to be a powerful factor in reminding the committee that Members of this House meant business and was tired of delay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Ohio will use his time in proportion as time is used by the proponents of the amendment, because we must reserve a sufficient amount of time to close the debate. If the gentleman from Ohio does not desire to use time further, then at the proper time I shall ask that the Clerk read the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST].

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I think the House is fully aware of the very complex nature of the legislation before us. At this time, however, it might be well to cite one or two instances that will further emphasize the fact that we are not dealing with legislation that can be properly handled in an easy manner.

As a member of the subcommittee that worked for many weeks on the pending bill, I can state that personally I have spent more time and effort on this bill than perhaps any other proposal that has come before our committee in many months.

It has been stated in this debate that the present retirement system resulted finally from collective bargaining between the carriers and employees.

The present bill was an exception to that earlier procedure and it places on the committee and the Congress the greater responsibility to proceed with care in an effort to bring out sound legislation.

It is difficult to write a bill of this nature on the floor, because of the complexity of the proposals before us. For example, the Crosser bill as it was introduced proposed, as you know, 92 amendments to existing law. Now, keep that in mind. There were 92 amendments proposed to existing law by the Crosser bill when the hearings were started before the full Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. As the hearings proceeded on the bill before the committee we heard the testimony of Mr. Latimer, Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board, for several consecutive days. Mr. Latimer gave a very comprehensive actuarial progression to the committee, based on his assumptions and with his conclusions that followed after projecting these figures into the year 2000. But during the course of Mr. Latimer's testimony he proposed—and I hope you will get this—he proposed 76 amendments to the Crosser bill. The bill, as I said, proposed 92 amendments to existing law, and then Mr. Latimer in his testimony proposed 76 different amendments to the bill that was before the committee. If you care to check the hearings on his proposals for amendments to the Crosser bill, you will find them in the hearings beginning on page 1067.

I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, that the consideration of this bill has run into so many cross-currents of opinion and so much controversy within the committee and on the floor of the House. I believe that every Member of the House shares with me and with the committee a desire to accomplish by legislation those things that will most assist the men who work on railroads and that will do this in keeping with our general program of social security in this country.

I have found and I believe others have found by checking with the men and women who work on railroads that among the things they most desired in the very beginning were, first, a reduction in the number of years of service required for permanent and total disability benefits. The Crosser bill proposed to reduce that to 10 years. The committee bill makes a similar provision but requires that the disability shall grow out of service in some manner. In other words, the committee bill does not provide total and permanent disability after 10 years of service, regardless of age, for any sort of disability that might result in no way related to the occupation.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Just to make inquiry along the line that I spoke about a moment ago; does the gentleman feel that the legislation as it is now written would prohibit the man I described getting anything?

Mr. PRIEST. I am sorry to say to my colleague from Texas that I did not hear all of his remarks. I came from a telephone call at the time he was discussing the matter and I did not hear what he said about this particular man.

Mr. BECKWORTH. If the gentleman will yield, the man worked for 17 years for the railroad. He now has a bad cancer. I am just wondering, under the provisions of the bill, whether or not he would get anything. He is absolutely disabled.

Mr. PRIEST. May I ask the gentleman in connection with that case, is this man employed at the present time?

Mr. BECKWORTH. This employee cannot work at the present time, but he has got nothing.

Mr. PRIEST. Unquestionably there are instances such as the gentleman describes.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Suppose he were to find tomorrow that he was entirely unable to work any longer?

Mr. PRIEST. That would depend on whether or not it could be shown that this condition had some connection with or was aggravated by the employment. I think the gentleman is correct there. It would depend on that showing and on the interpretation given it in my opinion.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Does the gentleman not agree that very often it is difficult to associate a particular injury or disability with a given line of work because there are so many diseases like heart disease, arthritis, and so forth, that cannot be attributed to anything definite, yet that are disqualifying?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Answering the gentleman from Texas, he should remember that there is no disability under social-security laws. This goes further than social security even in the committee bill.

Mr. PRIEST. I was about to say further in response to the gentleman from Texas that I think there would be very little difficulty to show that an injury was connected with the service. When it comes to the matter of some other types of illness, it would be more difficult, but as the gentleman from North Carolina has stated, this does go further than social security.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Is not this true: That any war veteran has to show that his disability was service-connected in order to draw a pension, and that if this man were a veteran under the circumstances he would not draw benefits?

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I wanted to comment that I think that the veterans of the Spanish-American War and World War II receive pensions for total disability whether service-connected or not.

Mr. PRIEST. For total disability; yes.

Mr. RABIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RABIN. Is not the requirement that the disability be service-connected merely a principle of workmen's compensation as distinguished from self-insurance?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BULWINKE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Tennessee one additional minute.

Mr. PRIEST. I am sorry my time will not let me go into these questions fully. I had a few more words I wanted to add. The men who work on the railroads are interested in this disability provision, are interested in an increase of the minimum annuities which are provided in the bill. They are interested in widows' and survivors' insurance which also are provided in the bill. These are things they have been fundamentally interested in. Under existing law, a widow or survivor has no benefit except as it may be by election of the employee himself.

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield.

Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON. Is the committee bill satisfactory to the men who work on the railroad?

Mr. PRIEST. I am not sure whether it is satisfactory or not. I think it is fair to say that to some it is and to others it is not. The original bill was not satisfactory to two of the brotherhoods in the beginning—two of the major brotherhoods opposed it, but later changed their viewpoint.

Mr. Chairman, I hope, out of the consideration of the proposals now before us, we will be able to enact amendments that will properly liberalize the benefits and that will maintain the railroad retirement system on a sound financial basis. Our first responsibility is to see that this is done, and then we may proceed to liberalize benefits to the extent of the ability of employees and employers to pay under the taxing provisions of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, it is certainly not my desire to take any part in any recriminations about this legislation. I am certain that everybody connected with it has acted with worthy motives; and it is from that viewpoint that I am going to speak. But I am going to speak in favor of the Crosser bill, and I do it for reasons that run pretty deep in my thinking.

I do not think anyone will deny that it is the Crosser bill upon which the major portion of work has been done, that it is on the Crosser bill that the most of the actuarial study has been made; that it is the Crosser bill that has the support of the men in this industry. It was not so many days ago that this House heard a message from the President of the United States and voted upon a piece of legislation vitally affecting every railroad worker in the country. I do not know how the rest of the Members voted, but I voted in favor of that bill because I believed it was a basic principle in this country that the Government of the United States had to be able in an emergency to assure the Nation of the continuous operation of absolutely vital services. Regardless of whether the means taken were altogether correct, and I do not believe they were, I felt that way then and I feel that way now.

I believe that the men who work on the railroads of this country only a couple of weeks ago were in effect told by us that their services were so essential to this Nation that the railroads had to run. If you tell a group of men in effect that, then you are telling them also that we cannot afford to have them stop work—even under circumstances where they believe the conditions and the wages that pertain at that particular time are not what they ought to be. Further than that, you are taking from them a portion of their collective-bargaining powers under these circumstances. There are no two ways about that fact. Therefore, it seems to me it becomes incumbent upon this body in a very different way than would be the case in other industries to recognize the men on the railroads as quasi-public servants and, as a matter of fact, entitled to such considerations and conditions as would be accorded the people of America in that position. I believe in good conscience that it is up to the House to legislate on this question by assuming on its own motion the responsibility for doing justice by a group of men as to whom general American public opinion has said, "You must not resort to the ultimate power of a group of workers, namely, the right to strike."

Under these circumstances, therefore, it seems to me that the bill, which has been considered very carefully to see whether its provisions would adequately meet the needs of the men in this industry, should be the one favored by the House rather than one which the organizations of the men pretty generally say they do not think will meet the situation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Mr. Latimer, of the Retirement Board, has stated, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST] has suggested, that this bill as it is today needs 76 amendments to it.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman from Tennessee has explained to the House already that this is a complex situation. I fully realize that fact. I only submit to the gentleman from North Carolina that if the Crosser bill be a complex piece of legislation, so necessarily is the committee bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am not talking about the complexities of either one. I am talking about the 76 amendments to perfect it.

Mr. GEELAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GEELAN. May I ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether the committee adopted the recommended changes by Mr. Latimer in its version of the bill?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; because we made amendments to existing law and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] had 96 amendments to existing law.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, if I may proceed, there is a general impression abroad in the country that the pay of railroad men is a very high rate of pay. As a matter of fact, imperatively that is not true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from California two additional minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, in the consideration of railway disputes before the Mediation Board the point is always raised that railroad men have other advantages which workers generally do not have and the attempt is always made to justify a somewhat lower wage scale on that ground. Clearly, therefore, we ought to make certain in fairness that those other advantages are actually present.

There is a common impression that railroad employees are among the higher paid workers in the country. This impression perhaps derives from loose comparisons of the rates of pay for a few of the most responsible railroad jobs with the average in other industries. But the fact is that wage rates in the railroad industry are substantially lower than for comparable jobs in outside industry.

In the postwar movement of wages the railroad employees have received no greater increases than the national pattern of 18½ cents. Consequently there has been no correction of the discrepancies and inequities that developed during the war years and preceding years. According to the figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics the average hourly earnings of employees in all manufacturing industries increased 56.1 percent in the period 1939 to September 1945. In this same period, according to the figures of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the average hourly earnings of railroad employees increased only 31.7 percent. In consequence of these developments the straight-time average hourly wage rate for railroad employees, which in 1939 corresponded almost exactly to the rate in durable goods manufacturing industries, stood, in September 1945, at only 87 cents, whereas the straight-time average hourly rate for durable goods manufacturing was $1.037. The railroad employees had, on the average, fallen over 16 cents an hour behind manufacturing wages, but in the postwar wage movements received no greater increase than employees in other industries.

No doubt a variety of factors contributed to the development of these inequities. Two of the most important are: First, the public-service character of railroad employment operates to preclude the full exercise of railroad employees' collective bargaining strength; and, second, in wage cases the railroads defend their lower wage rates on the grounds that railroad employees have other compensating advantages, such as better retirement protection. Both these factors place upon Congress an obligation to see to it that these employees are given really adequate protection against want after retirement and during periods of unemployment.

Just one word, Mr. Chairman, on the question of disability. Whereas it is true that the Social Security Act at present does not provide any type of unemployment insurance for a man who is unemployed because he is sick and cannot work, but only provides it when he is well, nevertheless there are States in the Union, of which my own State is one, which have recently passed legislation providing for disability insurance. If this railroad legislation is going to be adequate it ought to be complete in its coverage and ought not to create a situation where a man receives a portion of his protection under the Railroad Retirement Act and another portion of it under other legislation, because, as a matter of fact, he may then have difficulty in finding it at all. So I would think, in judging the case, that it would be wiser on general principles to make the provisions of the bill all inclusive.

I also question, as another specific matter, the wisdom of reducing the fund to be employed for the payment of benefits, reducing the taxes for the building up of that fund until such time as it has been depleted, because in all probability the time that it will have been depleted will be a time when the drain will be greatest and the possibility of tax revenue will be less. So it does not seem to me that that is a wise policy.

I conclude simply by pointing out that in connection with this legislation a duty rests upon this body that would not be the same were we considering a different group of workers in a different kind of position in the country as a whole.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, this bill was presented by me about 2 years ago. The situation which has been brought about by those who have been opposing it under the parliamentary situation gives them 2½ hours' time to my 2. I think that the time should be equalized, because, after all, what I am trying to do is to present answers to the inquiries they bring up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule that the Chair will recognize any of the three who desire to use time. It is hoped by the Chair that they will alternate. If no one desires to use time, obviously the Clerk will be called upon to read.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the problem of survivor protection—which I believe to be a very important matter in our consideration of this proposed legislation.

Both the original Crosser bill and the proposed committee substitute would provide benefits to survivors of railroad men who die and in both cases the general pattern is the survivor benefits provided in other industries under the Social Security Act. It may be taken as agreed, therefore, that railroad men should no longer have the distinction of being the only industrial group without such protection.

But there is a vast difference between the kind of protection that the Crosser bill would give and the illusory protection that the committee substitute offers. The committee substitute is highly deceptive in purporting to follow the social-security pattern.

In the first place the committee substitute takes no account of the higher taxes that railroad men pay. It may be said that they receive better retirement benefits for these higher taxes and that is true as to the men who live to receive retirement benefits.

But there are each year many railroad men who die without having reached retirement age. These men during their periods of service have paid not the 1 percent of their pay that is paid by persons under social security but three and one-half times that amount under present law and six times that amount under the committee's proposal. Unless the survivor-benefit provisions take some account of this difference in tax rate, the railroad men who die before retirement age will have been charged six times over the charges paid by employees covered under social security—and for no greater protection.

The Crosser bill recognizes that these higher tax rates are primarily attributable to the higher retirement benefits under the railroad system and consequently does not propose that the survivor protection be proportionately better than that provided under social security. Under the Crosser bill the survivor benefits would be only about one and one-fourth times the social security benefit rate even though the taxes paid by the railroad men would be six times the taxes paid by employees under social security. The committee substitute, however, would junk even this modest recognition of the higher tax rate paid by the railroad men.

All that has been said so far would be true on the assumption that the committee proposes to give railroad men the same survivor protection that is furnished under social security. In fact, however, the committee proposal gives much less protection. Eligibility for survivor benefits depends upon maintaining an insured status and an insured status is lost by the mere lapse of time not spent in covered employment. An individual under the social-security system can shift his employment to any other covered industry without impairing his insured status.

The Crosser bill proposes to add the railroad industry to the other industries for this purpose so that individuals who had the necessary employment would have their survivors protected regardless of the industry or industries in which they had been employed; if they were in the railroad industry at death their survivors would be paid under the railroad system and if they were in other industry at death their survivors would be paid under the social-security system, but in either event their survivor benefits would take account of all covered employment regardless of which system covered it.

Under the committee substitute, however, anyone who would work in the railroad industry and pay the 6-percent tax long enough to attain an insured status and who thereafter shifted to another industry covered by the social-security system would immediately begin losing his railroad insured status and even if he attained insured status under the social-security system before he lost his insured status under the railroad system he would not receive any survivor benefit credit for the taxes paid into the railroad fund. It has been estimated that the total number of people who in the long run may lose by virtue of this feature may be as much as 90 percent of the total number who pay some taxes under the railroad system .

The committee substitute is a cruel disappointment in yet another respect. Since the railroad retirement system was set up some 117,500 pensioners and annuitants and some 125,000 active employees have died. The committee proposal would provide no benefits whatever to the survivors of these persons. The Crosser bill would protect them.

Here again the committee purports to follow the pattern of the Social Security Act. But here again circumstances make a big difference. The Social Security Act was amended in 1939 to provide survivor protection; this was fairly shortly after old-age benefits had become payable. The problem of survivor protection with respect to deaths occurring in the interim was consequently not a large one. By contrast we are now dealing with the survivor protection problem in the railroad industry some 10 years after retirement benefits began to be paid.

We simply cannot shut our eyes and leave in the cold the survivors of some 240,000 railroad men. We must reject the committee substitute and enact the Crosser bill.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WINTER].

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Chairman, this is a serious matter, and I hope the Committee will not get off on the wrong track in the argument as to what happened in the committee or what did not happen, or anything about a discharge petition. That is water over the dam. It does not make any difference to me whether you signed a discharge petition or whether you did not. That is your right as a Member of Congress, and I have no quarrel with those who did. If you want to do those things, it is perfectly all right. But there is a vast difference in the area of disagreement between the original Crosser bill and the committee amendments to the original act, and the Members should get those differences clearly in your minds in determining what action and what position you are going to take on this legislation.

There is one thing that is certain. If you adopt the Crosser bill as introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and as he is insisting on now, you might just as well get ready not only to increase these taxes on the employer and the employee but to triple them over what they are today, if you are even to begin to pay the benefits provided by the Crosser bill. It just simply cannot be done by automatically passing the Crosser bill and expecting the men to get those benefits.

There are five major differences between the Crosser bill and the committee amendments. The first one I want to call your attention to is that of coverage. Under the original law, under the law as it is today, the railroad men who are employed generally in railroad service are covered; and that is all. The taxes are levied in order to take care of those men and women who are engaged in railroad work. But what does the Crosser bill do? What is the coverage of that bill? It provides for an increase in the coverage to include many independent activities not related to the railroad industry at all, such as longshoremen, ice company employees, warehouse employees, trucks drivers who may be servicing cars and helping to ice cars, and even may go so far as to cover laundry employees who are servicing Pullman cars. We may just as well be honest with ourselves. You and I know that if you extend the coverage to include the number of people in a category such as that, there is only one way it can be done, and that is to materially increase the tax rate against both the employer and the employee.

Now, what does this bill do? We propose in the committee bill that there shall be no change in this coverage whatever as provided in existing law. I might add here that the gentleman from New York [Mr. RABIN], for whom I have the highest regard, said that actuarial men had testified before our committee, and that he was taking their word for it, that this fund would be solvent. Mr. Latimer is one of the original sponsors of railroad retirement legislation who testified before the committee when this original Railroad Retirement Act was enacted and he helped set up the formula for the tax basis. He was dead wrong then, and I say to you that he is dead wrong now. You Members of Congress paid for the actuarial report which was made to your committee by a disinterested person. The actuary did not take just Mr. Latimer's word and the word of the other actuaries that he referred to. He took the testimony of every witness who appeared before the committee. He considered the bill and worked out from the bill and the testimony just exactly what it would cost so we could present this matter to the Congress and to the people of the railroad industry so they would know what they would have to pay to support the Crosser bill. It would require an increase of 2.4 percent above that which Mr. CROSSER's bill provides to give all of the benefits covered by the Crosser bill and still keep this fund solvent.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINTER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman tell us what the rate of assessment is on the employer and employee under the committee's proposal and under the Crosser proposal and what the difference is between the two?

Mr. WINTER. Under the original Crosser bill, beginning on January 1, 1946, which, of course, would not apply now, it would be 5¾ percent. Under the committee bill, to December 31, 1946, it was left the same as it is now, namely, 3½ percent on the employer and employee. Under the Crosser bill it jumps in 1947 to 5¾ percent on the employee and employer. Under the committee bill, it is 6 percent on the employer and 6 percent on the employee. Then right down through 1949 and thereafter, it is 6¼ percent to the employee and employer under the Crosser bill; and 6 percent to the railroads and 6 percent to the employees under the committee bill.

Mr. MAY. Under either bill as adopted is the fund equally divided between the railroad and the employee? In other words, do they participate on an equal basis?

Mr. WINTER. On the retirement they do, yes; but not on the unemployment-insurance features. The railroad pays all of that, which is now 3 percent.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINTER. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Did the actuary of the Retirement Board agree that the fund as at present set up, and the taxes, would not be adequate?

Mr. WINTER. I might say to the gentleman that practically every actuary, every person familiar with the facts surrounding the insurance provisions of this Railroad Retirement Act testified before our committee and admitted that, as presently constituted, the fund was insolvent; that is, the retirement fund.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Then, Mr. Latimer did state it would require 1½ percent more to make it solvent?

Mr. WINTER. That is right, as far as Mr. Latimer is concerned.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. But the committee claims it would require 2½ percent more?

Mr. WINTER. Three percent more.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Did the committee provide for that?

Mr. WINTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINTER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Williamson, about whom we have heard this morning, said it should have 4 percent more.

Mr. WINTER. That is correct.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WINTER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does any member of the committee or does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] or anybody else contend that if you do have a fund, the assessment ought to be big enough to make it solvent?

Mr. WINTER. There is no one that I know of who contends that except those sponsoring some of these amendments sponsored by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], which would bankrupt this fund in a period of years if the tax is not big enough to carry the load.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINTER. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. In view of the fact that on this occasion, as different from all previous occasions, when this plan was worked out by agreement between management and the men, when the Congress now assumes the responsibility to make this fund solvent and to enlarge the benefits, we carry the responsibility to see to it that the taxes are high enough to pay all of these benefits.

Mr. WINTER. That is right.

Mr. HALLECK. It is our responsibility. The gentleman from Kentucky inquires about the suggestion that funds be gotten somewhere else. It is the fundamental principle of this proposition that it be a solvent fund, actuarially sound, and self-sustaining, but if the Congress, acting for the Government, sets up the operation and provides benefits that are not taken care of by reason of sufficient funds, then someone might urge that, since the Congress has done that, there is some responsibility on the Congress to supply the deficiency.

Mr. WINTER. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Now, I would like to proceed for a moment without interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. WINTER. I cannot very well discuss in 1 minute what I desire to, but I want to just say this to the committee, that there is no use kidding ourselves. This is purely and simply a business proposition. If you want to give the benefits that Mr. CROSSER's bill provides, over and above the committee bill, well and good; but have the intestinal fortitude to pass the necessary tax legislation along with it to make the fund solvent, or else these railroad men 15 or 20 years from now are going to find a bankrupt fund, and will get nothing.

I hope that this Committee will stay with the committee bill, because these members, particularly the members of the subcommittee, have worked hard and studied this situation out, and are doing what they think is best for the men and the industry and the people of this Nation as a whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS].

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss the details of either one of these bills. I want first of all to speak in behalf of the railroad employees of this Nation, particularly the brotherhoods. You will recall that during the war the labor organizations throughout the country made a pledge to President Roosevelt that there would be no strikes. Some of those organizations—one, at least, the American Federation of Labor, kept its pledge to the best of its ability. Another one, the CIO, struck in spite of the pledges, but the railroad brotherhoods continued to work. There was not a strike in this country on the railroads during the war. They kept the trains rolling and they kept the men and goods moving to the front.

At the same time that other labor organizations were getting increases, the railroad employees were getting a small portion of what they asked. They are entitled to consideration here today and they are entitled to some of the things that they want.

I wish to mention three pieces of legislation to you so that you can see the difference between the way we are acting today on this legislation and the way we acted on the others. I was talking to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce a moment ago. According to his recollection, the so-called land-grant bill was introduced early in 1945 and about 5 months later we had passed that bill, which means hundreds of millions of dollars in the long run to the railroads of this country. I voted for that bill. It did not take us long to get that bill passed. Just a few days ago—in fact, on the 24th day of May—because of the fact that two men who were representing the railroad brotherhoods did not, I suppose, realize the crisis we were facing, they held up agreements between the railroad and the brotherhoods on the settlement of strikes, and because of that this Nation's transportation system was paralyzed. The President of the United States came into this Chamber. I watched the clock. One hour and fifty-five minutes after he had taken the microphone we had passed the most drastic piece of antistrike legislation we have ever passed. I do not believe anyone can deny that statement. There were only 13 votes against that bill. For this I do not apologize, because it was necessary to meet an emergency. Now, remember that. We passed a bill in 6 months which returned hundreds of millions of dollars to the railroads. In 1 hour and 45 minutes we passed the most drastic piece of antistrike legislation we have ever passed, and it was directed at the railroad brotherhoods. I may say to you today that I never was so sick about a piece of legislation which I was forced to vote upon as that one. I hated everything about it; I hated the vote that we had to cast against those men who had done such a fine job during the war.

The pending legislation has been in the legislative hopper for over a year and a half. We petitioned not this piece of legislation which is on the floor, but we petitioned the Crosser bill out of the committee and it was supposed to come up on the 13th of May. In the meantime, however, the committee, through the simple expediency of striking out all of the Crosser bill, using the same title and bill number, reported a bill that took the control away from Mr. CROSSER.

I want to say to the Members of the House that I have talked with the railroad employees and the representatives of the brotherhoods. They do not want the piece of legislation which we have here today, they want the Crosser bill. As I said before, they did an excellent job during the war. It did not take so long to pass legislation to return hundreds of millions of dollars to the railroads. It took us only 1 hour and 55 minutes to slap the railroad brotherhoods in the face with the most drastic piece of antistrike legislation we have ever proposed; and I say to you here that I am going to support the Crosser bill. I do not know what I will do about the other one. The railroad brotherhoods feel that this bill we have before us now is little less than nothing. I want to say to every Member of this House that if you want to do something to help the railroad brotherhoods—and I believe they are entitled to it—then follow the procedure requested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and you will help them. That is what I propose to do.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] will use some of his time to equalize our time?

Mr. CROSSER. No.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, then I ask that all debate close.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I object to that.

Mr. BULWINKLE. And that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other time is requested, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I promised to yield time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY]. I yield him 12 minutes.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to urge the membership of the House to support the Crosser bill as introduced and to reject the substitute recommended by the committee.

I wish to make clear at the outset that the committee proposal, although it is reported on behalf of the committee, does not embody the view of the committee as a whole. This is not a case in which legislation is being urged on the floor over the objections of a unified committee view. I am a member of the committee; so is the gentleman from Arizona, who spoke on behalf of the Crosser bill when the subject was before us last week; and I understand that a number of other members of the committee intend to address the House urging the adoption of the Crosser bill.

The hearings on the bill were conducted before the full committee. All the members had an opportunity to hear the evidence for and against the bill. When the hearings had been concluded the suggestion was made in committee that consideration of the bill be referred to the subcommittee on transportation. That subcommittee did not include most of the members of the committee who most heartily supported the Crosser bill. For this reason many of the supporters of the bill objected to a reference to the subcommittee and in the first determination of the committee their views prevailed. It was decided that the bill would be considered in full committee. However, when the committee again met with somewhat different personnel in attendance the question was reconsidered and this time the bill was referred to the subcommittee. I mention the incident as illustrative of the very close division in the committee itself.

The composition of the subcommittee and the consideration of the bill by it also undoubtedly had some bearing on the final action of the committee. When the subcommittee made its report, nearly a year had elapsed since the conclusion of the hearings, and the members of the subcommittee who were generally unfriendly to the proposals of the bill had an advantage in exposition over the supporters of the bill who were not on the subcommittee and hence had not had the subject under active consideration for a long time. Nevertheless, on the most important issues the division within the committee was again very close. For example, the motion to have the substitute drafted was carried by a vote of 12 to 11. At the executive sessions of the committee there were always some absences, and it was seldom that a majority of the full committee membership was recorded in favor of action which became the action of the committee.

For these reasons those of us who are in disagreement with the recommendation of the committee feel that our views are entitled to consideration as well as the official action of the committee.

We feel that the Crosser bill should be adopted because it expresses what, after careful and painstaking consideration, the railroad men want, and what they want is sound and equitable. We ought never to forget that there are some million and a half railroad men now in service and hundreds of thousands of others who have been in railroad service and have rights under the legislation we are considering. If each of the affected individuals were to formulate his notions in isolation as to what he thought Congress should do by way of improving the Railroad Retirement and Unemployment Insurance Acts you would probably get about as many different notions as there are different individuals. Fortunately for us, the railroad men do some concerted thinking about these matters and do not as a rule formulate their notions in isolation.

Notwithstanding the degree to which concerted thought has been brought to bear on these questions, we have all had the experience of having a great variety of proposed amendments brought to our attention. Individuals and groups throughout our districts have from time to time implored us to make one change or another in endless variety. Sometimes these suggestions have been based on a single case in which the individual did not fare as well as he thought he should under the present law. In other instances the generating impulse is a real and widespread inequity; but the proponents of a cure might or might not be adept at devising a cure that would meet the essence of the problem. Members of Congress who are anxious to do what is fair and equitable by way of improving the functioning of this legislation have been in no position by their own efforts to ascertain what the men affected really want, nor do we have the expert assistance necessary to appraise the soundness and practicality of any particular suggestion.

I consider that the railway labor organizations have done the Congress a real service in developing and sponsoring the amendments proposed in H. R. 1362. In 1940 the Railway Labor Executives' Association, representing 19 of the 21 standard railway labor organizations and representing over 80 percent of the railroad employees, set up a committee to deal with the problem of improving the retirement and unemployment insurance laws. The chairman of the committee is Mr. D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, one of the most experienced and most level-headed labor leaders in this country. He had the able assistance of Mr. L. M. Wicklein, vice president of the Sheet Metal Workers International Association, and of Mr. E. E. Milliman, president of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees.

That committee did several things that have been of immeasurable value to the Congress. They undertook first to sift out from among the great welter of varying suggestions for amendments those relatively few proposals which in their judgment met the most widespread needs, and for that reason would gain the acceptance of the great body of railroad men as expressing their views of what needed to be done. They invoked the assistance of the experts in the Railroad Retirement Board in developing cost estimates that would assure the financial soundness of any proposals developed and in casting their proposals in such terms as to assure administrative feasibility. From time to time they reported the progress of their efforts to the association where they could obtain the constructive criticism and suggestions of the chiefs of all the organizations.

Their job was a long and arduous one, but they saw it through. When fairly concrete proposals had been developed they were given wide circulation among the rank and file of the railroad men throughout the country. The proposals were thoroughly aired in local lodge meetings, regional meetings, and conventions of the various organizations. In many instances referenda of the membership were conducted. When final conclusions had been reached by this process and unanimously approved by the chiefs of all the organizations represented in the Railway Labor Executives' Association, expert legal counsel was engaged to draft the bill.

It is out of this prodigious work of the railway labor organizations that the bill H. R. 1362 developed. When the bill was introduced, President Roosevelt wrote the chairman of the committee expressing his endorsement of the bill and urging prompt action. The first witness to appear before the committee in support of the bill was Mr. Robertson. He explained to the committee simply and concisely what the major objectives were and how the bill would attain them. The next witness was Mr. Murray W. Latimer, then Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board. Mr. Latimer is an outstanding expert on the subject matter before the House. He was brought into the service of the Federal Government by the late Joseph B. Eastman, then Coordinator of Transportation, back in 1933, to assist the Coordinator in finding some solution to the very troublesome railroad pension problem that was later solved by the enactment of the Railroad Retirement Act. Mr. Latimer was selected by Mr. Eastman for that purpose because he was even then recognized as the outstanding authority on industrial pension systems. Upon the enactment of the first Railroad Retirement Act in 1934, Mr. Latimer was appointed Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board and continued to serve in that capacity until a few months ago. Incidentally, also, he served as a member of the President's committee that developed the plans for the social-security system and he set up the administration of the old-age benefit provisions for the Social Security Board.

Mr. Latimer gave the committee a detailed exposition of how the various amendments would work, the existing inequities that would be corrected, and what the cost would be. He showed that the proposals were equitable, feasible, and actuarially sound.

That Mr. Latimer should recommend enactment of the bill was inevitable from the process by which its content was developed. Such revisions and adjustments as were necessary to meet Mr. Latimer's views as to equity, financial soundness, and administrative feasibility were made before the bill was introduced. For that the sponsors of the bill are to be commended rather than to have their supporting testimony discounted with a label of partisanship.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. There is one thing about which I am not clear. There seems to be some dispute here as to whether or not if we adopt the Crosser bill, and I am inclined that way, we will bankrupt this fund unless we raise the rates much higher than has been suggested in either of the bills. I know the gentleman can give us information on that, and I should like to know.

Mr. MURPHY. When opponents of the bill argued against the soundness of the Latimer cost estimates, the chairman of the committee called the chief actuary for the Social Security Board to express his judgment on the estimates. He said that they had been soundly and carefully worked out. To remove any possible doubt as to the financial soundness of the proposals, the railway labor organizations engaged an outstanding, independent actuary, Mr. Ralph I. Booth, the actuary for the Travelers Insurance Co., and a fellow of the Actuarial Society of America and of the American Institute of Actuaries. He was asked to review the cost estimates made by the Railroad Retirement Board experts and presented by Mr. Latimer. He, too, concluded that they were sound and so testified before the committee.

Counsel for the railway labor organizations who had drafted the bill also appeared before the committee and explained the provisions of the present law that were being amended, the deficiencies of the present law, and the manner in which these deficiencies would be cured by the provisions of the bill.

After sitting through the extensive hearings on the bill, I do not see how any Member who approaches the matter fairly and open-mindedly could escape the conviction that the railway labor organizations who developed the bill did a thorough, conscientious, and public-spirited job. Since two of the railroad brotherhoods are not represented in the Railway Labor Executives' Association, the bill as introduced had not been approved by the chiefs of those organizations. Representatives of those organizations in their appearances before the committee expressed some disagreement with some of the provisions of the bill. Consequently, for a time, opponents of the bill sought to capitalize on the lack of unanimity of view among the railway labor organizations. Subsequently, however, the chiefs of these two brotherhoods joined with Mr. Robertson in a letter to the chairman of the committee suggesting a few slight amendments of the bill and stating that with those amendments the bill would meet with the approval of all the 21 standard railway labor organizations. The committee makes no reference to these suggested amendments in its report, and I understand that Mr. CROSSER intends to offer them on the floor as an amendment to his bill.

We as Members of Congress are entitled to assume, and from what we know of the way railway labor organizations operate, we can be sure it is a correct assumption, that these railway labor organizations speak for the railroad men. They have relieved us of the onerous responsibility of trying to formulate something on our own that would meet with widespread approval among the railroad men. Of course, there will be dissentient voices here and there, and some of these have perhaps been insistent enough to cause some members to doubt whether the bill advocated by the organizations would meet with the approval of the men. The processes by which the provisions of the bill were formulated and the assumption of responsibility by the chiefs of the organization is our guaranty that in enacting H. R. 1362 we will be doing what the men want us to do.

By contrast to the careful formulation of the provisions of H. R. 1362 the committee substitute was hastily prepared, making minimum concessions to the requests of the employees.

When the parliamentary situation develops to the point where a vote may be taken I shall cast my vote for the principles generally embodied in the Crosser bill.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLOOD. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania addressing the Committee is a member of the committee that considered this bill. I might add that he is a former railroader himself and lives in a great railroad district. He knows whereof he speaks. I might say also that this bill the gentleman from Pennsylvania is describing is the bill desired by the railroad workers, and I concur in his position.

In my district of Luzerne County, Pa., there are thousands of railroad workers belonging to all of the unions related to railroad work. I was born and raised among these workers and their families. I know their ways, their desires as to benefits from legislative action, and let me say to this honorable body that the Crosser bill is the bill they want, and definitely not the committee substitute. As another great friend of the railroad workingmen once said, "Let's look at the record." Well, the record will indicate that the spokesmen for the Railroad Retirement Board advocate the passage of the Crosser bill. Mind you, this is the administrative agency charged with the administering of whatever bill is passed by the Congress on his subject. Certainly this Board would not place the stamp of approval upon the Crosser bill if that bill was not a proper one, a workable one, and a bill which the Congress could well and properly legislate under all the circumstances.

During the course of this debate today someone will certainly argue in support of the committee bill that its provisions are the same as the Crosser bill, or better for that matter, and will argue further that the provisions with particular reference to that part of the bill of the committee dealing with payments for injuries is the same as in all similar Federal laws on the like subject. Well, we know full well the catch in that argument; we know that in effect the very provisions of the committee bill are nullified because of the impossibility of proving the injuries in so many cases to be the result of employment connection. It is the practical result we must look at when concerned with the interests of these men who serve the railroads of the Nation. And surely there is no other group of workers more loyal or faithful to the needs of our Nation. Long and well, during war and peace, in fair weather and foul, these patriotic and tireless workers met the full demands of the service and beyond. A proud record equalled never before in this or any other nation in the world at any time.

We must keep our eye on the ball here today. The opponents of the Crosser bill have succeeded in confusing the purposes of this legislation by creating a parliamentary tangle based upon a series of amendments. But we must not be sidetracked or wrecked by crossed-up signals. The green light for the main track and a clear right-of-way belongs to the Crosser bill as sponsored by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, my good friend and the friend of all railroad workers and their friends [Mr. CROSSER].

I have heard several members of the committee speak for the Crosser bill and against the committee bill; that indicates to me that there is strong support even in the committee for the Crosser bill in what amounts to a strong minority report on the floor of the House, and it is significant to notice that it is the friends of the workingman who join in this position.

The Crosser bill is the law that every member of every railroad union who was ever in my office wanted. They feel and I feel that it is fair and just. We must not lose sight of the fact that in the neighborhood of 2,000,000 railroad workers in and at one time or other in the service are affected by this proposed law, and it is a safe bet that you could get that many ideas about a law if you asked for it. For never let it be said that my friends who are railroaders do not know their rights and you can be sure they can discuss them with you or anyone else with ability and vigor. But one of the great virtues in the field of organized labor is the presentation of a case for the members that is for the best interest of the greatest number of them all—and that is the Crosser bill—and on that they all agree with few, few exceptions. Let me say at this point that the Congress should be duly appreciative of the help given to its Members in the proper preparation of this bill in its complex technical structure and helping the Members of the House to get a clear grasp of the full intent and meaning of its provisions. This is a long bill and a highly important one and I for one am personally grateful for the aid I have received from the representatives of the railway labor groups in my efforts to deal fairly, equitably, and properly with the complicated problem of dealing with the retirement and unemployment insurance laws as evidenced by the amendments proposed in H. R. 1362.

I want to join my friend and neighbor my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] in his tribute to Mr. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; Mr. Wicklein, vice president of the Sheet Metal Workers International Association; and Mr. Milliman, president of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees. That last group have a fond spot in my heart because I worked on a navvy gang on the Lehigh Valley back in the summer of 1920 when I was going to college and I will never forget rock ballast, tamping bars, cant hooks, and creosoted bridge ties in the hot summer weather as long as I live.

The proposals now made through the Crosser bill meet the most pressing and generally accepted conditions that need correction and improvement and meet the general approval of the vast majority of the men concerned after a fine educational program and widespread discussion among the workers throughout the Nation.

I am convinced that the testimony presented with further reference to the amendments make it clear that the problems of the actuary have been well met. The proponents have the best expert testimony showing that these amendments can and will operate and clearly establishing the element of costs thus removing any contention of bankrupting the fund unless the rates are raised to fantastic heights.

Mr. Chairman, I urge passage of the Crosser bill.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], for his kindness and I also thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY], for the very clear statement he has made in behalf of the Crosser bill, H. R. 1362, to amend the Railroad Retirement Act. I am not a member of the committee but I have been convinced for years that legislation is needed to improve the Railroad Retirement Act, and I propose to vote for it. I feel that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce should have presented a proper bill to this House many months ago.

Railroad workers of this Nation did a superb and miraculous job during the war. They, like every other segment of the population in America today, are entitled to a square deal. The Crosser bill may not be perfect; the committee bill I know is not perfect; but under the circumstances, it seems to me the thing for this House to do is adopt the Crosser bill, and I propose to vote for it. It affords a better legislative vehicle for the effort which we are making to improve the railroad retirement system.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LAFOLLETTE].

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] addressed the House in my absence.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed out of order for 1 minute.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], I object.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. I was not present at the time he addressed the House.

Mr. CHURCH. Under the circumstances, I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Well, well, well, I am so glad the gentleman from Illinois is so solicitous for the gentleman from Mississippi. I think the Crosser bill is a very nice bill. I was just going to say that people sometimes try to read my mind. They did yesterday, but I do not think it was very adequately done. If I am going to take a course I usually want to look around and see who is following me. I have a little poem here which is probably applicable to the Crosser bill and a good many other things. There is a gentleman who used poetry here so I will use some. If I go any place, here is what I have to say:

If I shall start a new goal to seek,
From time to time over my shoulder I'll peek.
And if perchance I find JOHN RANKIN behind,
I'll know I'm wrong and change my mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, as the hearings on this bill proceeded, I, who have a very large population of railroad workers in my district, sent the transcript and copies of statements made by the various witnesses home to a number of these railroad workers whom I know personally. Finally, when the hearings were printed, I sent a good many sets of the printed hearings to those men, that they might read and study just as we do here the subject that is before the House. Shortly after that, a matter of several weeks, when I went home and met with these men, they showed me the files of mimeographed statements and the copies of the hearings, of three volumes, and they were thoroughly dog-eared. They had been passed from hand to hand and had been read in the cabs of engines, in the shanties, and in the roundhouses, and all around throughout the railroad world. Not very long thereafter I received a petition signed by a good many hundreds—several thousand, as a matter of fact—of these railroad workers in my area, addressed to the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. If I may, I would like to read the paragraph at the top of the petition to indicate how these men—the men themselves, and not the chiefs of the brotherhoods—feel about this bill. I have heard a good many statements as to how the men feel, but they all were related to what the chiefs of the brotherhoods said, and not what the men themselves said. The paragraph is as follows:

Honorable SIMS: We, the undersigned railroad employees, wish to register a complaint against H. R. 1362. We do not approve of the majority of the changes proposed by this bill. We are in favor of the following changes to the Railroad Retirement Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act: First, a reduction in age for retirement to 55 years; second, a reduction in years of service to 20 years; third, a more adequate pension, at least $100 per month; fourth, liberalization of disability provisions; and, fifth, the widow's pension.

We realize that some increases in our taxes will be necessary to pay for these changes and we are willing to pay any reasonable amount for them.

Now, that is the expressed viewpoint of something like 4,000 railroad workers in the area which I represent. In the course of the committee's consideration of this matter, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA] offered an amendment to the bill, which I supported. The amendment was offered to both bills, for that matter, reducing the retirement age from 65 to 60 years. The proponents of the Crosser bill aided in the defeat of that motion in the committee. The proponents of the Crosser bill, as well as some others, are not in agreement with the provisions set forth in this great petition that I hold in my hands, or with the men whose names appear thereon. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] has been so eager to get his bill out that there has not been time to make the careful actuarial studies necessary to tell what the system desired by the men will cost, and I think they and we should all know what the cost would be to reduce retirement to age 55 after 20 years of service. It might cost several times the figures used in the present bill, namely, 12 percent of pay roll.

I am not a member of the Transportation Subcommittee and hence am not too familiar with all the technical details of this bill, but I would like to mention one or two interesting and important features developed by the testimony.

Mr. Williamson, who came before the committee, is consulting actuary for the Social Security Board. I rate his viewpoint and testimony as high as any of the actuaries whom we heard or consulted. I think he ranks at least as high as Mr. Latimer and probably higher. Mr. Latimer is the man who submitted the figures upon which the railroad-retirement system was based in the first place and they were found to be wrong. The system, as is well known and admitted, is insolvent today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] has expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Williamson made a very significant statement, in my humble opinion. He pointed out that the figures upon which all of these statements were based were based on tables that had been prepared from life experience of years gone by. He made this very significant point, that no one can foretell what future effect such things as penicillin will have upon the possibility of surviving the age of 65. He anticipates that at least twice as many people will survive the age of 65 and grow older than ever before, with the advent of these new drugs and treatments that have been found by the medical profession. Under those circumstances there is no possibility of our sitting here at the moment and forecasting what the future cost of either social security or the railroad-retirement system will be, but I say to you we had better make it adequate—as nearly adequate as we can figure it.

The trouble with the Crosser bill, as far as the committee could see, was that it called for a number of new features which, as I told you, the men themselves do not want. They have a wholly different idea. The Crosser bill calls for a number of new features that will cost money. Those features the men do not want. Furthermore, it is my personal opinion, after listening to the testimony and examining the actuarial reports made to the committee, that the tax provided in the Crosser bill is not adequate for the purposes for which the Crosser bill is set up. I do believe that fund to be established by the committee substitute, which is not perfect, is more nearly adequate, and has a better chance for being solvent 10 or 15 years from now. I highly commend it to the consideration of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to use time?

Mr. CROSSER. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has 34 minutes remaining.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, during this debate on railroad retirement legislation, many confusing statements have been made on the floor by the advocates of the committee substitute bill in opposition to the original Crosser bill. I have spent considerable time studying both of these bills which the House will pass upon today. Time will not permit a comprehensive analysis of the many complex aspects of the committee's substitute bill. I am thoroughly satisfied that any Member who is desirous of extending proper security to the railroad workers of this country should support and vote for the original bill introduced by Congressman CROSSER.

His bill has been pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee for almost 2 years. During this time, I have received numerous letters and personal requests from railway employees, not only in my district but throughout the State of Indiana, urging that the committee take action and report favorably on this legislation.

Several weeks ago I gladly assisted Congressmen CROSSER and NEELY in securing sufficient signatures on the discharge petition so that this bill could be brought on the floor for action.

For several years, legislative representatives of the various railway brotherhood organizations have devoted long hours of work and study to write a fair and equitable retirement bill. Even the opponents of the Crosser bill admit that something should be done to aid the railroad men, but they contend that they are better qualified to write this legislation than the men themselves or their responsible representatives.

I could outline several reasons why the Crosser bill is advantageous to railroad employees whereas the committee's substitute will penalize them. First, the Crosser bill provides benefits for surviving widows and minor children so as to give the workers some consideration of the higher taxes they are now paying. The committee's substitute would impose a similar tax, but would limit such survivor benefits to the same amount that is now paid under social security. The committee's substitute rejects all improvements in unemployment benefits. The Crosser bill provides, when a worker is totally and permanently disabled for any kind of work, aften 10 years of service, he may get an annuity, and when after 20 years of service he is unable to engage in his regular occupation, he may get an annuity. On the other hand, the committee's substitute provides increased disability benefits only for workers disabled by causes arising out of their employment.

Every railroadman knows that the retirement provisions as set forth in the Railroad Retirement Act are wholly inadequate. A railroad worker cannot retire on full pension until he has over 40 years of service, unless he comes under a total disability classification—and then only after he has 30 years of service; few industries today require 40 to 45 years before employees become eligible for a pension.

Railroad work on the average is highly hazardous; it requires long and uncertain hours and the average man, after 20 years' service, has endured an exceptional mental and physical strain unlike other lines of endeavor. He should be given an opportunity to retire with satisfactory security for himself and his family at an age before his health has not been completely broken down.

We must realize today in considering legislation of this kind that the workingman's dollar has but 50 percent of the purchasing power it had eight or 10 years ago. No one has the right to expect labor to receive a low living wage or inadequate security after retirement.

The railroad workers of America contributed outstanding service to help win the war; as a group they have contributed more to the growth, advancement, and expansion of our country than any other organization.

The Congress has an opportunity today to place upon our statute books a satisfactory retirement law for America's railroad workers by voting for the original bill introduced by Congressman CROSSER and rejecting the substitute offered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who signed the petition to bring this bill to the floor of the House. I think the Crosser bill deserves most earnest and sympathetic consideration of this House. The railroad men who are directly concerned with this bill have worked on it a long time and I am reliably informed that this meets the approval of the railroad employees. When I signed the petition to bring up the Crosser bill, I not only desired that the Crosser bill be considered, but I wanted it done at this session of Congress. I think the railroad employees are entitled to this consideration. I am therefore supporting the Crosser bill.

The Crosser bill may not embrace all of the amendments which should be made to the Railroad Retirement Act, but I understand it is what the railroad employees are asking for at this time and I urge favorable consideration. There are other amendments to the Railroad Retirement Act not included in the Crosser bill which I hope will have consideration in due time. I refer particularly to decreasing the retirement age. But, the matter before us now is the Crosser bill and I trust that when the time comes to vote, the House will give that bill its approval.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, this bill is a complicated matter and the parliamentary situation is also rather involved. Not being a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I have had little opportunity to study the details of the proposals before us. Therefore, I shall rely very largely upon the leadership of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] in regard to the correct vote on this legislation.

It is not the first instance in which I have relied upon the advice of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] in regard to railroad bills and legislation. When I first came to Congress in 1937 I found that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and our former colleague, Congressman John Martin, of Colorado, now deceased, were unusually well informed on all matters pertaining to railroads, and I must say that both have given me, during the years of my service, valuable help and counsel in regard to proper legislation in this field. For that reason I am supporting the Crosser bill in this instance rather than the committee bill.

It may be that both bills need amendment and I shall hope to see each properly amended as the parliamentary situation permits. I feel that the Crosser bill, as amended, will probably come nearer meeting the needs of railroad men. If by any chance the Crosser bill is not brought before us and accepted for final passage, I feel inclined to vote for the amended committee bill as being better than no legislation at all to meet the crying need of this class of employees and their dependents.

I have taken note of what was said by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] in regard to the much favorable legislation which Congress has recently enacted for railroad companies, and also what he said concerning drastic and unfavorable action which this body took recently toward one group of railroad men, which action seemed poor recompense to a great majority of men who rendered such faithful service during the recent war. He expressed the thought that was in my mind by making this contrast of friendly action toward railroad companies and severity toward the employees.

I, too, have voted for many provisions favoring railroad corporations. I recognize that the railroads are tremendously important to the country in general and they are particularly important to the remote parts of the country, like the intermountain region in which my State lies. For that reason I am always alert to aid in improvement, the efficiency, and the prosperity of the railroads.

Having said that I must add that I cannot for 1 minute sanction anything preventable that will stop, or even retard, the operation of the railroads. Accordingly I have great respect for the men who operate the railroads, and having seen the marvelous work done by them during the war in accomplishing the impossible, I want to see the country recognize that obligation by doing the best possible thing by this group of faithful employees. It is with this in view that I seek to follow the leadership of Congressman CROSSER in shaping the legislation before us.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] 10 minutes.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, the laws which provide retirement pay and unemployment compensation for railroad men and women were enacted, respectively, in 1937 and 1938. At that time they were apparently as liberal as the financial condition of the railroads permitted them to be made; they were then reasonably satisfactory both to employers and employees. But during the years that intervened between 1938 and the present the wealth of the railroad companies, as indicated by the market value of their stocks has increased, on the average, more than a hundred percent. Since the first of January 1941—only five years and a half ago—the cost of living in this country has increased 50 percent. Thus while the railroad companies have become more than a hundred percent richer, their employees who are dependent upon retirement pay and unemployment compensation have, in effect, become 50 percent poorer than they were before the skyward flight of the cost of living began.

Let me corroborate my statement concerning the increase in railroad company wealth by the following quotations from the Wall Street Journal, one of the world's outstanding financial publications:

On the 24th of January 1938, the day before the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Law became effective, the closing price on the New York Stock Exchange of the common stock of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Co. was 31½. Yesterday on the same exchange this stock closed at 124¼—an increase of more than 287 percent. During the same period on the same exchange the market value of the common stock of the Atlantic Coast Line increased more than 300 percent; that of the Pennsylvania Railroad increased more than 133 percent; the common stock of the Union Pacific increased more than a hundred percent; the common stock of the Southern Pacific increased more than 385 percent.

There has been a phenomenal increase in the market value of the stock of practically every other railroad in the United States. Within the last week many newspapers informed the country that railroad stocks had just reached the highest market value they had attained in 15 years.

The popular newspaper PM carried an article dated the 17th of May under the title "Poverty-Stricken Railroads Boost Dividends 23 Percent," in which the following appears:

> The railroads, which are pleading poverty before the Interstate Commerce Commission in a demand for a 25-percent jump in freight rates, actually increased their publicly reported dividend payments during this year's first quarter by 23 percent over the similar period last year.
> The Commerce Department advised today that the dividend payments reported by the railroads were $49,400,000, as compared with $40,100,000 for the same period a year ago, when they were enjoying peak war business.
> The Commerce Department reported that the railroads showed the biggest increase in dividends of any segment of industry. Corporations generally increased dividend payments from $839,000,000 to $904,000,000, or only 7 percent.

The foregoing should convince the entire membership of the House that it can do justice to the railroad employees in the pending matter without the slightest danger of imperiling the financial stability of the great railroad industry.

The impoverished beneficiaries of the laws in question, after many years of uncomplaining endurance of the persistent, distressing shrinkage of their retirement pay and unemployment compensation, were at last forced to appeal to the Congress for legislation sufficient to offset at least a part of the loss they had sustained under the devastating operation of the inflated cost of living upon their uninflated benefits. The Crosser bill, for which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce substituted the measure now before us, proposes the minimum amount of relief which, in the opinion of the railroad employees and their chieftains, will satisfy the inexorable requirements of the present day as well as those of an unpredictable number of future years.

The brevity of my allotted time will permit me to discuss but a few of the factors in the complicated legislative equation before the House. The most vital of these I conceive to be as follows:

1. SURVIVOR BENEFITS

The Federal Social Security Act humanely provides survivor benefits, but the railroad law under consideration authorizes no benefits whatever for the widows, minor children, or parents of railroad employees, notwithstanding the fact that these employees pay a tax 3½ times as great as that which is paid by other employees for protection under the social-security law.

The committee substitute proposes to increase the present taxes of the railroad employees 2½ percent—the effect of which would be to compel these employees to pay six times as much for their benefits under the pending measure as other employees pay for equal benefits under the Social Security Act.

The Crosser bill provides that in return for the higher taxes paid by railroad employees, the benefits to their survivors shall be, on the average, 25 percent greater than those provided by the social-security law.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELY. If for a brief question, of course.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has touched on something that I think should be understood. The provisions of both the Crosser bill and the committee bill for survivors' benefits are the same as to eligibility and how they are brought in. The only difference is that the committee bill fixes the benefits at the level of the Social Security Act, whereas the Crosser bill would fix them at 25 percent higher than the Social Security Act.

Mr. NEELY. Yes; the Crosser bill proposes to reward railroad employees for paying a tax 500 percent greater than that paid by the beneficiaries of the Social Security Act. So far as the committee substitute is concerned, this most generous payment of taxes is entirely ignored.

2. DISABILITY ANNUITIES

The Crosser bill provides annuities for employees who are not totally and permanently disabled for all work but who, nevertheless, are unable to pursue their regular occupations, provided they have attained the age of 60 or have 20 years of service to their credit. The bill further proposes to reduce the present requirement of 30 years' service to 10 years' service in order to render eligible for an annuity an employee who is totally and permanently disabled for all work, and is under the age of 60. Under the Crosser bill it would not be necessary in either of these cases to prove that the disability for which an annuity was sought was service-connected.

It has been contended that the committee substitute is designed to accomplish the foregoing purposes. But, unfortunately, this contention is fatally erroneous, because under the committee substitute it would be impossible to establish eligibility for the annuity under consideration, except for a service-connected disability. Comparatively few railroad employees would profit from the provision of the substitute because in a majority of cases the total incapacity of railroad men is the result of old age, or physical ailments such as heart disease, arthritis or other nervous disorders, which cannot be proved to be the result of their employment.

3. UNEMPLOYMENT DUE TO SICKNESS

The Railroad Retirement Board has estimated that the present accumulation of over $700,000,000 in the railroad unemployment insurance account will, with the continuation of the present 3-percent taxation of employees, be sufficient not only to pay insurance benefits for all unemployment due to lack of work but also for that due to sickness. This estimate of the Board, the Crosser bill proposes to translate into reality. But the committee substitute provides for the return to the railroads of a large part of this accumulated fund by way of reducing their present tax rate of 3 percent to one-half of 1 percent—the latter rate to prevail as long as the fund in the unemployment insurance accounts amounts to $350,000,000 or more. If this provision of the committee substitute should become operative, it would, in effect, eventually make a gift of millions of dollars to the railroad companies instead of utilizing the surplus in the unemployment insurance account for the payment of unemployment benefits to those whom sickness had incapacitated for service.

4. INCREASE IN COMPENSABLE DAYS OF UNEMPLOYMENT FROM 20 WEEKS TO 26 WEEKS

The Crosser bill proposes to extend the period for which unemployment insurance benefits may be paid in any year from a hundred days—20 weeks—to a hundred thirty days—26 weeks. This proposal is in harmony with the recommendation of the board of managers of the Council of State Governments and also with the recommendation of the Federal Social Security Board. Under the committee substitute there would be no extension of the period for which unemployment insurance benefits are now paid.

5. TWO NEW DAILY BENEFIT RATES

Under the present law the maximum benefit payable to an employee who earned $1,600 or more in the preceding calendar year is at the rate of $4 a day. Under the Crosser bill the $4-a-day benefit would be increased to $4.50 for an employee whose earnings were between $2,000 and $2,500 a year. And the daily benefit of an employee whose earnings were more than $2,500 a year would be increased to five dollars.

The committee substitute makes no provision for the foregoing or any other similar increases.

For the reasons indicated and for many additional ones which the expiration of my time and the prevailing limitations on debate will not permit me to specify, it is my sincere hope that the committee substitute will be decisively defeated and that the Crosser bill will be approved by an overwhelming majority.

Let us consummate the objectives of the Crosser bill and thus at once render an outstanding public service, and demonstrate our undying gratitude to a vast army of railroad men and women whose patriotic, efficient, faithful service to the Nation in war and peace has never been surpassed by any other children of men.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the Members of the House generally approach this legislation with the same serious concern that I did as a member of the committee, and as I assure you the membership of the committee did, because I think we all recognize the fact that we are not passing some temporary legislation which is of little moment but rather we are dealing on a long-term basis with the rights and security of working men and working women involving the application and the use of funds which are not only contributed to by the railroads under our Railroad Retirement Act but also by the men and women who toil and who want the guaranty of some security and safety for what they pay out of their hard-earned money.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to call attention to the fact that we had exhaustive hearings beginning on the 31st of January 1945, running almost continuously down to the 28th day of April 1945. As a member of that committee I attended practically every one of the hearings which were conducted before the entire committee. Not being a member of the Transportation Subcommittee which heard the further testimony, I was able to be present only on the occasions when the full committee met.

I have tried to deal with this matter from an objective viewpoint and have been actuated in supporting the committee report on the basis of living with and knowing in a small town the working railroad men, from the maintenance-of-way men to the men who operate the trains, the engineers, the firemen, the conductors, the brakemen, the section men, and I consider them my neighbors and friends.

My distinguished colleague from Tennessee spoke of the number of amendments proposed in the original Crosser bill in addition to those proposed by Mr. Latimer. Unfortunately, in the consideration of this very involved subject, I think some of the proponents of the bill originally went into very ramified and extended ideas of social benefits. Among the suggestions of the very able and very brilliant Mr. Latimer, whose knowledge of railroad retirement law is most amazing to me, were maternity benefits. During the course of the proceedings I asked him if some of his views on this subject did not include the Beveridge plan. He frankly confessed that it had the elements of "cradle to the grave" security in railroad legislation.

I do not believe the railroad men themselves are interested in that type of legislation. I think there are a few simple fundamentals involved in this legislation in which the railroad men themselves are interested. They want a solvent retirement fund. They want some benefits for their widows. They perhaps want further benefits in the way of sickness and disability benefits. I think we could perhaps have done a little better and not gotten into the controversy we did get into if we had approached this very complex subject on the basis of four, five, or six fundamental matters.

The difficulty is that when you deal with a subject which involves insurance, either as to life or disability, somebody has to pay the bill. What we are faced with here is an attempt to bring out the soundest possible legislation at this time. I am sorry to say there are one or two things in the committee bill I should like to see amended. I am earnestly trying, and I credit my colleagues with the same motive, to bring out the soundest legislation possible. That is why I am supporting the committee bill. With all due respect to my good and sincere friend from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], I believe the committee bill to be the more practical. I hope that when we get to the stage of amending this measure there can be offered one, two, or three amendments which will strengthen it and make for greater benefits and soundness to the railroad workers. It is the practical and the human elements involved which commends this legislation to your most serious consideration.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I suspect I am the only person to speak on this bill who is the son of a railroad man. My father for many years was an employee of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. I was more or less raised on the B. & O. platform down in the little town of Blanchester, in southern Ohio. Probably I have been kicked off more engines and have been saved from being killed in the railroad yards more times than any other Member of the House. So I speak on this bill today from the heart, because I know hundreds and thousands of railroad workers; not just union leaders or brotherhood chairmen—hundreds and thousands of these workers by their first names. I am happy and proud to be able to call them my friends. I believe I know something about what these men are thinking of this legislation.

As we approached the consideration of this bill in the committee I voted against referring it to the Subcommittee on Transportation, of which I am a member, because I realized fully the difficulties that would be encountered and the hard work that would be required in considering the legislation.

I have known the proponent of this bill, a grand old man, since 1912. He comes from my State. I said to him in the beginning that probably when I finished my labors on this bill as a member of the Transportation Subcommittee no one would be happy with the position I had taken, including myself, and that probably the final draft of the legislation would not please anyone. I say to you, with all the sincerity at my command, that this piece of legislation is the most involved and technical bill I have ever worked on in my 30 years of public service. I do not believe there is anyone within the sound of my voice who understands fully everything that is contained and provided in this bill. As we met in the sessions of our committee, we would often have to go back, for 30 minutes or more, and review that which we had done in order to again pick up our trend of thought and to get back into our minds the problems which we had previously discussed. Yes, this is a complicated bill. It is one that is hard to understand.

The first thing I wanted to do, as the son of an old railroader and as a friend of hundreds and thousands of railroad workers—many of whom were good to me when I was a boy, just a kid playing around the railroad yards—and many of whom are now retired, was to see to it that those men are able to continue to draw their retirement pay.

The first thing I determined in my mind I wanted to be absolutely certain was that those men we have already promised would receive their retirement benefits would continue to receive them. In other words, I wanted to be absolutely certain that this retirement fund and system, as established, should be made solvent and sound in order that we could guarantee to these men we would keep the pledge and the promise we made them through the original enactment of railroad retirement legislation a number of years ago. I believe most of you agree with me that none of us is interested in paying insurance premiums to any insurance company which does not pay off. So that was my first inquiry.

In starting our investigation, we ran into a rather peculiar situation. When we established this retirement system we set up a Railroad Retirement Board, as an agency of the Congress of the United States, and we had the right, in my opinion, to go to that Board to obtain from the members thereof unbiased advice, and impartial information. After all, they were supposed to be representing us. But, lo and behold, when this bill was presented before the committee, the Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board, Mr. Latimer, appeared as its chief proponent. So I was not sure whether I wanted to follow Mr. Latimer's judgment on the bill, or not. I first wanted to know what somebody else had to say about it; for we soon fell into a discussion as to whether or not this fund as now established, this system as has been set up, was actually solvent. Everyone, without exception, Mr. Latimer and all the rest, agreed that the present fund and the present system was not sound actuarially, was not sound financially, and that some additional levies would have to be made in order to guarantee its soundness. I therefore went along with the distinguished chairman of this committee and others who decided that under the circumstances, with the railroads saying one thing, the brotherhoods saying another, and the Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board appearing before us as a proponent of the bill, that the only thing we could do was to go out and get the best actuary we could find, let him go into this account and into this fund thoroughly and advise us as to his findings; and that is exactly what we did.

As a result of these findings we decided that it was absolutely necessary to levy additional charges against both the railroads and the workers, or the employers and the employees, to make the fund solvent. That was our first responsibility, the first duty we owed these men who are dependent upon us to protect their interests. That is exactly what was done. Having decided what was necessary to be done to make the fund solvent, to keep our faith and our promise to these aged men who had retired and others who were approaching retirement from age, the next thing was to see what other benefits we could give them. So after we checked the fund first, as any men of common sense and good judgment would do, we decided, of course, that the next thing that was necessary, because of the increased cost of living, was to increase the retirement pay.

Next we decided that widows ought to be covered and protected, and that there should be some provision written into the law so that railroaders would no longer have to accept smaller retirement pay in order to protect their widows. We therefore provided in the committee bill that from now on if this measure is adopted the retired railroad worker will not have his retirement pay reduced in order to protect his widow, but will receive the same amount of retirement pay he would receive if he were unmarried, and that in addition his widow would be protected.

We went on down the bill to determine what we could fairly and logically do. We found provisions for such things as maternity benefits, which we just threw out the window as impossible because we realized that if we authorized them the rate of charge against the employee would be so high that he could not afford to pay it. The men do not want such coverage provisions, as hundreds of thousands of letters and petitions from railroad workers all over the country so vividly testify.

I have before me a newspaper put out by the railroad brotherhoods called Labor. It is a fine publication. It renders a splendid service. We had completed our work on May 11, the date this paper was published, for I want to say to you that this committee did work diligently on this measure. We gave more time to it than to any other piece of legislation that has been before our committee since I have been a Member of Congress. We were sincere in our efforts, and anyone who challenges the integrity of the men who served on that great Subcommittee on Transportation does not know whereof they speak, because there are no better men in the House than those who serve on that committee. I am proud to have been associated with them.

But what does Labor of May 11 say about the efforts of our committee and the bill which we had reported, at the time we had already prepared our report and had it in the hands of the drafting service, and before the petition was placed here on the Speaker's table, and many Members of Congress were told that our committee had refused to do anything about this legislation. Here are some of the things said about the bill by Labor, the official publication of the railroad brotherhoods—

First. That widows of railroad workers are to have pensions, as a matter of right. Such provision is to be found in practically all modern social-security legislation.

The committee bill does that. We have provided that in the committee bill.

Second. A minimum pension of $50 a month is fixed for low-paid railroad workers wh have devoted their lives to the industry.

We do that.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The provisions in that regard in the committee bill are exactly the same as in the Crosser bill?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes.

Third. The totally disabled railroad worker, the man who, because of what he gave to the industry, is no longer able to hold a job in the industry, is treated somewhat more generously than at present.

We have done that.

Fourth. The tax is increased so as to make the railroad retirement system, as well as the railroad unemployment-insurance system, absolutely sound.

We have done that.

The newspaper Laber then states:

These are the essential amendments. There are other slight changes, but they are not important.

If you will turn to the committee bill submitted to you, you will find that in section 4, pages 72 to 81, we have taken care of all the requirements for widows as mentioned in this publication, Labor.

If you will turn to section 3, pages 71 and 72, you will find that we have taken care of the $50 minimum pension exactly as requested in the Crosser bill and as mentioned in this publication.

If you will turn to section 2, subparagraph 5, page 67, and subparagraph 6 on page 68, you will find that we have taken care of the totally disabled railroad worker who is disabled as the result of his service.

If you will turn to section 301, pages 98 and 99, you will find that we have increased this tax so as to make this measure sound.

Mr. HALLECK. In respect to the disability provisions, the significant difference between the Crosser bill and the committee bill is that the committee bill provides that the disability shall arise out of the course of employment. I direct the gentleman's attention to the article in the paper Labor which he has just read and particularly to these words: "The totally disabled railroad worker, the man who, because of what he gave to the industry, is no longer able to hold a job in the industry." Do those words "who, because of what he gave to the industry" indicate to the gentleman that apparently they had in mind what is known as service connection, the policy that prevails throughout every system with which the Government has to do, so far as I know?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Yes. I am certainly of that opinion, and I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman four additional minutes.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. What is going to happen to the man who has paid into this fund, say, 20 years or more, and then is injured away from his employment? What is going to happen to the fund that he paid in?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Exactly the same thing that happens to the man that paid into any other fund on that basis. There is no pension or retirement system anywhere in this land of ours that takes care of persons who suffer total injury outside of their unemployment prior to a certain time. If the length of employment is 20 years or more it is taken care of here, but if it is less than 20 years he is not, and there is no law or retirement system that does take care of him if it is not in line of duty.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. The gentleman means that all he has paid in is lost to him?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Oh, no. He will be on the same basis if his age limit is reached as before.

I want to mention one or two other problems that came before us that I think the Members ought to know about. They are very serious problems. When we began to think about how much we could levy in the way of charges against these workers and against the railroads, we were faced with this dilemma.

The railroads were already before the Interstate Commerce Commission requesting increases in freight rates and in other charges to the public, and we realized that if we increased the cost of operation of the railroads of the United States by $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 a year, immediately there would be a greater pressure and a greater demand for increased rates to be paid by the consuming public.

So we began to think of some way that we could meet this great problem, and we met it by looking into another railroad fund, and that is the unemployment fund. The railroads have paid all of the tax to take care of unemployment compensation for the workers. The railroad workers have not paid a single penny therefore. In that great fund there has already been amassed over $700,000,000, enough to take care of full unemployment compensation for all the rail workers and then have many millions left over. So it was determined that the wise thing to do, in order that this burden would not be passed onto the general public but would be paid by the railroads under their present structure of rates, was to give the railroads the same benefits of earned deductions because of a good employment record that is now given under social-security law and under the State laws of this Nation to our industries who are paying unemployment compensation and fees to support such a fund. We then provided that the present rate would be reduced to one-half of 1 percent so long as at least $350,000,000 remained in that fund, and whenever it dropped below $350,000,000 we would increase the rate one-half of 1 percent, and as it dropped $50,000,000 more we would increase it another one-half of 1 percent. The fact is that the interest on this present fund amounts to $14,000,000 a year, a sum which is already meeting all of the unemployment compensation requirements and will take care of any normal situation that may arise. Even if you went into a great depression, such as you had in the thirties, it would never use up the first $350,000,000 unless the railroads simply laid off all the workers and then, of course, the rate would automatically go up.

I want to say one other thing about this bill and I want to say it with all the charity and all the kindness in my heart for my fellow man, and that is this: Strangely, outside of the proponents of the bill, all of the opposition to the committee measure has come from those who did not serve on the Subcommittee on Transportation and did not labor with this very complex legislation for many, many weeks, and many, many months.

I say to you very frankly that, if I had my way, there are other things that we would do for these men. I would like to give a lot of these old railroaders almost everything in the world. I think they deserve the best treatment we can possibly give them. But I do not want—and I do not believe any Member of this House wants—to be in the position where we are going to say to these workers, "We are giving you greater benefits. We are passing a bill here that will cover the whole water front. We are giving you everything in the world," and then, 5 years from now, or 10 years from now, have them saying to each of us, "Well, you weren't my friend. You misled me. You passed legislation that wasn't sound, and now here I am old and broken, and I am not getting any retirement pay because you passed a law that would not stand the test actuarily and financially."

So, I say to you, the real friends of these workingmen—the real friends of the men who have worked on these railroads and are covered by this act—will see to it that this committee bill, which is sound and which is proper, is enacted into law in order to guarantee and assure them that the promises made them will be kept and the retirement pledged them will be paid when it becomes due.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, 2 minutes is not very long to discuss a bill as important as this one. As a person who was raised in a railroad atmosphere and served the railroads and knows something of the difficulties of following a railroad career, I have always looked upon the Railroad Retirement Act as one of the greatest pieces of constructive legislation ever enacted by the Congress. If I had the time I could tell you something of the privations and the service of railroad men.

I listened to the gentleman from Ohio tell us about going along with the committee, the committee that has kept this bill from being considered by the House the length of time it has. Forcing the House to exercise its will to bring out legislation by petition by taking the bill from the committee and then pulling the parliamentary tricks that have been pulled on the railroad men of this country does not reflect credit on any member of the committee. Why did we have to put a petition up here and why was it signed within 24 hours by 218 Members of the House if the committee has acted fairly in the matter? Then let them explain to the railroad men of this country why. The railroad men have gone along with the committee and want them to do the fair thing, but they are trying to defeat this legislation by unfair tactics.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I will yield to the gentleman the way he did to me. No.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman does not want an answer.

Mr. WHITE. I have heard railroad attorneys trying to avoid the railroad responsibility in connection with accidents, and I know a railroad lawyer when I see him. I do not think the railroad men or the people of this country have been treated fairly in the handling of this piece of legislation. We are here today to vote down the committee bill and vote up the Crosser bill. That will please the people of this country and please the railroad men.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the House has at last been given the opportunity to consider amendments to the Railroad Retirement Act. We are faced today with a choice of either the Crosser or the committee bill. While the Crosser measure does not have all the features I would desire, I am going to vote for it in preference to the committee bill because I think it is more fair and more worth while. I wish it were possible for the "rails" to be able to draw their pensions even though they were earning additional money. This, I contend, is fair because these people are not living on something they did not earn but on something which they had contributed to and were entitled to. I feel strongly also that the age of widows should be lowered to 60 years because they are just as much entitled to a pension as their husbands and their responsibilities, their children, and their bills stay with them, in many instances, until they pass on. In my opinion the disability provisions should also be broadened and made more beneficial regardless of age or amount of service.

I want to take this means to protest also at the delay and dilatory tactics that have marked the introduction and consideration of this legislation. Almost 2 months ago we got 218 signatures to a discharge petition and only today are we moving toward final action. This bill was first debated 2 weeks ago and should have been finished last Friday. Delaying tactics have been employed but this measure will not, and should not, be stymied.

I am hopeful that the Senate will consider this bill at the earliest opportunity and amend it to the benefit of the "rails" and their widows so that justice may be done and the real needs of one of the finest groups in America given full and adequate recognition.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time. Mr. Chairman, transportation has been properly regarded as the circulatory system of commerce; it may be truly said also that it is the most important of all industries for the reason that all other industries are dependent upon it. Without transportation we could have practically no commerce.

Mr. Chairman, for about 60 years the Federal Government has exercised broad authority over the railroads of this country. Legislation by Congress relating to railroads has almost always applied especially and exclusively to the regulation in one way or another of the railroad transportation systems of the United States.

It was proper for Congress to treat the railroad transportation industry as a particular and distinct kind of business. The railroads, regardless of diversity of ownership, must be regarded, as nearly as possible, as a unit in order to assure satisfactory service.

Almost all of the important legislation enacted by Congress in regard to railroads has applied specifically to that industry and properly so.

Although it is not a complete list of such acts, the principle to which I have referred is illustrated by the following named statutes, to wit:

	Year
1. Act of Oct. 1, 1888	1888
2. Safety Appliance Act	1893
3. Safety Appliance Act	1903
4. Erdman Act	1898
5. Employers' Liability Act	1908
6. Hours of Service Act	1908
7. Ashpan Act	1908
8. Boiler Inspection Act	1911
9. Newlands Act	1913
10. Transportation Act	1920
11. Railway Labor Act	1926
12. Emergency Transportation Act	1933
13. Railroad Retirement Act	1934
14. Railway Labor Act, as amended	1934
15. Railroad Retirement Act	1935
16. Sec. 25, pt. I, Interstate Commerce Act	1937
17. Railroad Retirement Act	1937
18. Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act	1938
19. Transportation Act	1940
20. Amendment to Stabilization Act	1944

A number of factors are involved in the conduct of the railroad industry. It must be obvious, however, that the skilled, trained, and experienced personnel of the railroad industry is the most important factor in the rendition of transportation service to the American people. Nothing else compares in importance with personnel in the operation of the railroads of the country. Without the highly qualified personnel the much vaunted achievements of the railroads in connection with the late war would not have been possible. That being true, it is clear that we must do everything possible to increase the efficiency of railroad operatives.

The first railroad retirement law enacted by Congress was the first attempt to give by law to those devoting their lives to the railroad service assurance that they will not be altogether in want when unable to continue to work as railroaders.

Not only does the modest retirement annuity measurably relieve worry due to the fear of want but it enables them to devote all their attention to the proper discharge of their duties and the safety of lives entrusted to their care. Such assurance for their old age also encourages men to make railroading a career. The benefits provided in the retirement and unemployment insurance laws are really deferred payments of part of the compensation for the services of railroad workers.

The pending bill, H. R. 1362, introduced by me is for the purpose of amending the railroad retirement law and the unemployment insurance law in order to make them serve more fully the requirements of proper retirement and unemployment insurance laws.

It may be asked why the original retirement and unemployment insurance laws did not make more adequate provision for those entitled to benefits. Anyone who was in Congress when the first railroad retirement bill was presented for consideration will tell you that it was considered impossible to secure the enactment of any kind of retirement bill for railroad men.

The railroad retirement system is now, however, regarded by most persons as something that has always existed. It is interesting to note during the discussion of this bill that those who are opposed to its principal provisions claim to know better what the railroad workers desire than do the representatives of the men themselves. It is strange that the membership of the railroad labor organizations are regarded by the opposition as not knowing what they desire and to have selected heads of these organizations who do not know what the members electing them desire. Notwithstanding the vote of the local branches of the railroad labor organizations, still, according to the opposition, the national officers of these organizations do not speak authoritatively for the rank and file of the workers. I think I know as many railroad men as anyone and I say to you that 95 percent, if not more of them, favor the bill now before the House. It was on May 15, 1944, when I introduced a bill (H. R. 4805) to liberalize the railroad retirement law and the unemployment insurance law. We held several days' hearings on that bill, but I could not secure a definite disposition of the measure.

A great deal has been said during this discussion as to the fairness manifested toward me and to the supporters of the bill in the proceedings relating to the measure while it was in the committee.

It is not unreasonable to expect that others have standards differing from ours as to what constitutes fairness or lack of fairness, but it is neither necessary nor proper to question the sincerity of their statements as to what is fair. I do say, however, that unbiased minds cannot avoid the conclusion that the actions and course to which I now refer disregarded entirely truly democratic and judicial principles.

The bill H. R. 4805, introduced in the last Congress, had been on hearing only a very short time. Arrangement was made to have prepared a comparison of the bill with the existing law. The comparison should be made by one without bias. Nevertheless, to prepare the impartial comparison the chief counsel for the American Shortline Railroad Association was requested to prepare a document which would compare the bill with the existing law. That document prepared by the chief counsel of the said railroad association weighed 7½ pounds avoirdupois and the cost of printing the same was paid from public funds. I did not complain, however, as to the nature of the assistance we were receiving for our illumination, in regard to the bill, by one of the lawyers for the opposition. I do say, however, that is contrary to the course usually pursued to insure impartiality and fairness.

After receiving the 7½-pound document about the middle of 1944, very little additional consideration was given to the bill and no action was taken. That, to say the least, was disconcerting to me as the spokesman for the measure. Early in the present Congress, that is on the 11th of January 1945, I introduced H. R. 1362. It covered only about one-third the space devoted to H. R. 4805 in the previous Congress, and I desire to explain why that was the case. I suggested the elimination of the language used in H. R. 4805 for the purpose of codification because members of the committee complained of the length of the bill. I then introduced the present bill, which is only about one-third the length of the bill (H. R. 4805) introduced in 1944. I think that it was desirable to codify the laws which it was proposed to amend, but the elimination of the codification matter removed the objection as to the length of the bill.

The codification and clarification was desired in order to expedite the decision and disposition of claims. Much delay had resulted because of ambiguities.

The railroad workers' representatives spent several years in determining upon amendments which, considering all parties concerned, were just and proper. They then sought the expert opinion and advice of the agency which has administered the retirement and unemployment insurance laws, and then H. R. 4805 was introduced to carry out the program as modified according to the suggestion of Retirement Board officials. As already stated, there was complaint by Members that the bill was too long. The pending bill is less than one-third in volume that of H. R. 4805, and there can be, therefore no longer objection as to the length of the bill.

The pending bill H. R. 1362 was introduced on the 11th day of last January 1945, more than a year and a half ago. Hearings were begun on the 31st of January 1945, and without any protest on my part testimony was continued day after day, some of it having little relevancy to the issues. The hearings were continued to and including the 26th day of April 1945, when the hearings were declared closed by the chairman of the committee. Ordinarily you would then assume that there had been introduced all the evidence that was to be considered by the deciding tribunal. Certainly I did not urge closing the hearings before the opposing parties had submitted all the testimony they desired to offer.

As I have already said, people honestly differ as to standards for deciding what is fair and it is not necessary, therefore, to question the sincerity of the actors involved in the course of action to which I now refer. I am sure, however, that unprejudiced persons cannot but conclude that the course of action, which I now discuss, does not, according to ordinary standards, constitute a shining example of fairness or magnanimity. The course, here briefly reviewed, certainly disregarded the fundamental principles of democracy.

Before reciting the facts just mentioned, let me call attention to the fact that for the American people, the most perfect symbol of justice has always been the balance scale. Idealistic persons always desire to be known as never being willing to operate to their own advantage, or to the injury of another, the democratic mechanism, the scales of justice. The American is usually confident of the correctness of his opinions in regard to public measures, but it is also his great pride always that he merits the reputation for insisting that, above all else, the mechanism of democracy be as perfect as possible and operated with such painstaking fairness that his own opinions or desires as to public policies may prevail only when the greater weight of opinion is clearly in accord with him. Even when he is absolutely certain that he is right, he is most desirous of securing approval of his position without availing himself of any undue advantage.

Prior to the discussions and hearings on H. R. 1362 it had been customary for the committee, through its chairman, to inform the heads of the various agencies of the Government which might appear to be especially affected by a measure referred to the committee that the committee would appreciate a report, together with such comment as the agency might desire to make.

I have been a member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee for 23 years, and during all that time the regular procedure was to refer bills for report by the use of a printed form letter.

The following is a copy of the form letter heretofore used:

SIR: We beg leave to submit to you the enclosed bill, H. R. ———, upon which the committee would appreciate a report, together with such comment as you may desire to make.

Will you kindly transmit your reply in duplicate?

Respectfully,

———, Chairman.

It is clear that, in preparing the language of this form letter, care was exercised to avoid indicating, much less urging, any viewpoint of the committee. The form letter, in the past, clearly indicated the desire to have a statement, from the agency, uninfluenced by the committee. It was not considered proper to urge upon an agency one viewpoint or another in regard to a measure. That, I submit, is a fair and dignified method of procedure. I feel that it should continue to be the practice of the committee.

If, however, a more robust partiality to a given viewpoint is to be manifested to the agency from which a report is desired, surely the dignity of the committee itself and fairness to the individual members of the committee would require formal committee action to change the custom for securing reports. If we are to argue the merits of all measures to all of the agencies whose reports are desired, then we should formally change the procedure heretofore regularly followed.

I have carefully examined the hearings on H. R. 1362 and find no record of any action whatever by the committee, either directing or authorizing a change of policy or procedure, in regard to securing reports from the agencies supposedly affected.

I find, however, the following copies of a letter and memorandum mentioned therein, to wit:

MARCH 29, 1945.

MR. HAROLD D. SMITH,
Director, Bureau of the Budget,
State Department Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SMITH: I enclose a copy of H. R. 1362, which proposes amendments to the Railroad Retirement System. The committee cannot act intelligently upon the proposals of this bill without relating them to the general social-security program of the Nation.

Grave doubts have arisen as to the cost that the provisions of this bill would create.

We are concerned as to the policies involved. Looking upon your organization as one concerned in the social-security program, we would welcome a review of this proposed legislation and such report as you can make to our committee in aid of its efforts in connection with this legislation.

Sincerely yours,

CLARENCE F. LEA,
Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1945.

MEMORANDUM AS TO H. R. 1362

We have pending before our committee H. R. 1362, which proposes to amend the Railroad Retirement Act and the Carriers Taxing Act. This bill, in its broad effect, would establish an independent social-security program for railway employees and the employees of certain related industries.

It is difficult to act intelligently upon this bill without considering its relation to the general social-security program. There is a prevailing opinion that the general Social Security Act is to be enlarged from the standpoint of the number of beneficiaries to which it will apply and also by increasing the benefits available under that act. Inequities create discontent and agitation to move benefits up to the higher level, whether right or wrong.

If 20,000,000 or so more persons are to be added to the beneficiaries of the Social Security System, its burdens will become of great importance to the country. If too great, they will probably break down the whole social-security program.

Our committee has the responsibility of acting upon the various proposals of the pending bill. We have no expert actuaries or advisers in our own employment. There is a broad conflict as to the extent of the burdens that would be created by proposed amendments to this act. There is a problem as to what extent the proposals of this act can properly be related to the general social-security program so as to avoid extreme inequality of treatment. Of course, there is also the question as to how far a benefit program can go consistent with the contributory burdens of the employees and the cost burdens of the employers.

If we go on the assumption that social-security benefits are burdens that must be borne by the consumers of the Nation, and that benefits are going to be conferred upon a large part of the beneficiaries from sources other than employers, then the question arises as to the proper apportionment of cost.

If the humane need forms the basis of granting social-security benefits, whether or not there is an employer and employee able to make the contributions to meet the burdens, then should not the liability be placed upon the consumers generally through the taxing power of the Government rather than by contributory plan as between employers and employees?

As it is, all consumers, directly or indirectly, contribute to social-security benefits and only part of those who are equally entitled receive them. If the burden becomes great, how is it to be equitably distributed unless it be through a general tax system?

Assuming that your organization is to participate in formulating and approving a social-security program for the Nation, I thought it advisable to call these questions to your attention as matters which are to concern the committee legislating upon the subject.

CLARENCE F. LEA,
Chairman.

On April 13, 1945, Director Smith replied to Chairman LEA's letter. In addition to the argument set forth in the letter and memorandum of March 29, 1945, to Director Smith from the chairman of the committee, it is evident from Mr. Smith's reply that oral presentation of the matter had also been made to Director Smith, for nothing was said in the chairman's letter or accompanying memorandum about the conference method of legislating. Nevertheless, all but the first sentence of paragraph 3 of Director Smith's report of April 13, 1945, by way of reply to the chairman's letter and memorandum of March 29, 1945, consists of a reiteration of the arguments urged many times in and before the committee in support of the novel and astounding notion that before spokesmen representing conflicting views may be certain of a patient hearing in support of their program, they must resort to collective bargaining. Apparently the exponents of this amazing conception were unmindful of the fact that Congress might desire to legislate upon a subject regardless of the lack of agreement between groups of citizens.

All members of the committee do not, of course, agree that before either party could expect a kindly hearing by the legislative representatives of the American people, representatives of conflicting views, concerning a subject of legislation, should be urged to strive with the opposition as to formal terms, until forced to a vocal armistice.

Aside, however, from the merit or lack of merit of the contention just discussed, there is another important aspect of the Director's recommendation. Clearly, at most, the function of the Director as contemplated by the statute establishing his office is to express an opinion as to the value of proposed legislation. He is supposed to examine a measure referred to him, in order to enable him to pass judgment as to the wisdom or unwisdom of the measure, so that he may state whether or not it is in accord with the program of the President.

Heretofore, members of the committee have generally condemned any tendency on the part of bureau or department officials, to assume a supervisory attitude toward the Members of Congress in the discharge of their duties.

Here, however, we find not only some reference to the merits of H. R. 1362, but, much more emphatically and explicitly, we are advised as to the proper method of informing ourselves and as to the modus operandi which we should observe in determining the merits of legislative proposals presented to us for our decision. To what extent may such presumption be allowed to increase without reducing the representatives of the people to the status of mere factotums of bureau satraps?

If we encourage or even tolerate this sort of unwarranted assumption of authority then it will not be long before the Members of Congress will be mere flunkies. We should not, and I know we will not, tolerate, much less encourage, the growth of an unauthorized power which can interfere with the free and dignified effort of Members of the legislative body to represent truly the will of the people.

Now let me call attention to another example of fairness. After the closing of the hearings, the testimony was printed. The printed testimony filled three volumes. I then tried earnestly to have the bill considered by the committee.

Generally speaking there is no objection to proceeding to the consideration of a bill immediately after the closing of the hearings upon the same. But in regard to H. R. 1362 it was urged that we should have the printed hearings before taking up the bill for consideration. There was something to be said for that position, and I did not object; but the hearings were closed on the 26th of April and were printed not many weeks after that. Notwithstanding that fact no definite action as to consideration was taken until the 3d of July 1945. On that day a motion was made to refer the bill to the so-called committee on transportation. The clerk of the committee had advised the members in writing in June 1945 that the committee had been named.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. No. There is no use interrupting. I will not yield. I have been yielding for 2 years, and I shall now use the little time I have to state the facts without interruption.

As I was about to say, there was a committee appointed consisting of 12 members. Ordinarily we have subcommittees consisting of five members, or sometimes seven, which is certainly sufficient. In this case, however, we had 12 members on the subcommittee, the appointment of which was never authorized by the whole committee.

Excepting myself there was no active supporter of H. R. 1362 on that subcommittee. Mr. HARRIS during the consideration of the bill became an earnest believer in the measure.

Now if I were allowed to select from the entire membership of the Interstate Commerce Committee, consisting of 28 members, I could in all probability select a subcommittee which would favor the side of the controversy in which I might believe. Their sincerity, in all likelihood, would be unquestioned.

The motion to refer the bill to the aforesaid subcommittee was, on a record vote, defeated. Later there was a motion offered for the consideration of the measure by the whole committee. The whole committee had sat during all the hearings and were familiar with the measure. That motion was carried by a record vote.

It was then decided that consideration would be postponed until after the recess. The recess of Congress was to begin shortly after the Fourth of July. It was understood that the pending bill would be the first order of business and would be taken up by the committee immediately after the recess. We assumed, therefore, that immediately after the termination of the recess, we would proceed with the consideration of the bill according to the decision of the committee. To my astonishment, however, a motion was made by a member who had not voted with the prevailing side of the question at the previous meeting. This motion to refer the bill to the subcommittee was made when a large number of the supporters of the bill were absent and the motion was declared carried.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield I wish to point out that we agreed to take it up immediately after the recess. The word "immediately" was in the motion.

Mr. CROSSER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I cannot yield; my time is very short.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I will yield the gentleman one additional minute if he will yield to me.

Mr. CROSSER. No; I will not yield right now.

Mr. Chairman, after we had proceeded in this subcommittee for weeks and weeks and with delay after delay in regard to a bill which had been introduced on January 11 of the previous year, we were told that there had been prepared a document to help illuminate our minds in regard to the bill. We were then presented with a typewritten document 35 pages long prepared in fairness to me and the railroad workers by the attorneys for the Association of American Railways. The first 17 pages of the document was merely a restatement of their arguments presented to the whole committee during the hearings.

Was it expected that the lawyers for the opposition could be absolutely impartial in the presentation of the subject?

After we had been in possession of the illuminating document prepared by the lawyers for the Association of American Railways for some time, we were told that we required still more light.

Now, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Latimer, the man whose advice as to rates and other technical matters was sought by the railroad workers, is considered to be a leading authority on retirement systems. He not only recommended a remarkably well calculated schedule of rates at the beginning of the retirement system, but he gave detailed and convincing reasons in support of the rates of assessment carried in the pending bill. Those opposed to the measure called as a witness Mr. Williamson, chief actuary of the Social Security Board. They apparently assumed that he would uphold their contention in opposition to Mr. Latimer.

Mr. Williamson, however, speaking of the figures of Mr. Latimer, said:

> I think in the aggregate the figures are reasonable. I think they are carefully developed. I think they can be looked on with this limitation, that there is a wider range of tolerance than they felt wise to show in the tables.

In other words, he thought that the unofficial technical advisers of the railroad workers and Mr. Latimer had done a good job. The railroad men also secured the services of an actuary who had been for 30 years an actuary for the Travelers Insurance Co., a man whose ability nobody could dispute. He confirmed Mr. Latimer's views.

The only real actuarial and statistical authority had been presented by the proponents of the pending bill. The railroads had not presented a single actuary. They make no claim that they have presented actuarial experts. Referring again to the matter of fairness, the moving spirits of the opposition in the committee, notwithstanding the absence of actuarial testimony, announced that the committee must have more illumination, must have an actuary selected by them to make a statement. Two actuaries had already accepted Mr. Latimer's position and Mr. Latimer is the outstanding authority in regard to retirement systems. The railroads called no actuaries in opposition. Nevertheless the several members leading the opposition insisted that the committee must have another actuary. Their own views had no actuarial support in the hearings.

In regularly presuming to say what the committee desired, these committee members remind me of the three tailors of Tooley Street. Each of the three tailors lived on Tooley Street, London. During the administration of Prime Minister Canning, the three tailors met in the house of one of the tailors for the purpose of redressing popular grievances. They drew up a petition to the House of Commons which began with the words "We, the people of England." Yes; the several members undertaking to speak for the committee said, "We, the committee, must have another actuary." So they went about, so to speak, trying to find a man who would support their preconceived notions as to what is necessary in the way of a tax. Finally they found stationed in the Surgeon General's office of the United States Army a man who had been an assistant to Mr. Williamson, whom I have quoted. He was an assistant to Mr. Williamson in the Social Security Board. During the war he was in the military service, stationed in the Surgeon General's office. A letter was written to the Surgeon General on the 7th of November 1945, by the Social Security Board, saying:

> There is a job for Mr. Myers as an actuary down here at $5,000 a year when he can come back.

On the 8th of November, the next day after that, a letter went to the Surgeon General from the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, containing the following language:

> We have employment for a man for special purposes in connection with the railroad retirement law.

Myers was immediately permitted to leave the Surgeon General's office. Remember that Mr. Myers was a former assistant to Mr. Williamson, of the Social Security Board. I have already quoted Mr. Williamson's testimony before our committee, and you will recall that it supports Mr. Latimer. It was quite evident that the controlling personages on the committee desired to secure the testimony of some actuary who would support the contentions of the ruling spirits, which were unsupported by any actuary during the 3 months of formal hearings when both the proponents and opponents of the bill had an unlimited opportunity to present their testimony. When the quest for actuarial support of the position taken by the leaders of the opposition on the committee had been rewarded, the bill was ordered changed in accordance with their actuary's statement prepared free from cross-examination. It was planned then to have a so-called clean bill introduced. I then stated that I would not introduce such a bill. They then prepared to have it introduced by someone else. A copy of the committee print of the proposed bill which completely emasculated the Crosser bill, H. R. 1362, makes it perfectly clear that they did not intend to report H. R. 1362. They may have felt, of course, that this was also fair to the introducer of 1362, but the House can pass its own judgment in regard to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, a petition to discharge was filed and the required 218 signatures were attached within 48 hours. Under the rules the motion to discharge the committee would have come before the House on the 14th of May for consideration. In the week of May 6, 1946, I was compelled to be in Cleveland for the primary election at which I was a candidate and while I was in Cleveland action was taken by the committee. I requested a delay of 1 day to permit me to return after the primaries. That request for 1 day's postponement was refused.

They refused to wait 1 day. So they took action before I could reach Washington, although I hurried back as quickly as possible. They reported a bill bearing the number H. R. 1362 and carrying the statement that Mr. CROSSER introduced the following bill instead of reporting the bill they had planned to introduce under a new number and by a different author.

This gave the opponents of H. R. 1362 control of proceedings in regard to the bill. That also gave them the parliamentary right to close the debate. Since, however, the real question was whether or not there shall be passed the Crosser measure for the improvement of the retirement and unemployment insurance laws, good ethics would have required that the proponents of the measure should have been allowed to close the discussion.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE. What recommendations does the gentleman make to the House as to how we should proceed?

Mr. CROSSER. My earnest recommendation is to vote against the substitute, because it is worse than the present law.

Mr. Chairman, during the 2 years' effort in support of H. R. 1362 I have at times been annoyed but not discouraged. I have tried earnestly to advance the principles of democracy and of justice.

Antagonisms by some who have been in opposition will not be reflected by me. There was no desire on my part to arouse such antagonism. No one, however, can justify abandonment of principles in order to avoid displeasing others much as he may be distressed because of such displeasure. In human relations, disagreement is at times unavoidable. The democratic mechanism was established to make possible the ascertainment and effectuation of the will of the majority. If the majority should be mistaken, truly democratic institutions provide for a corresponding change in policy. As to the proper course for the individual, it may be said that earnest devotion to one's highest conception of right is the sublimest expression of life.

In his poem entitled "Freedom," James Russell Lowell said:

> Is true freedom but to break
> Fetters for our own dear sake,
> And with leathern hearts forget
> That we owe mankind a debt?
> No! True freedom is to share
> All the chains our brothers wear,
> And, with heart and hand, to be
> Earnest to make others free!
> They are slaves who fear to speak
> For the fallen and the weak;
> They are slaves who will not choose
> Hatred, scoffing, and abuse.
> Rather than in silence shrink
> From the truth they needs must think;
> They are slaves who dare not be
> In the right with two or three.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], chairman of the committee.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, it would be unfortunate if this Congress, considering a measure of this far-reaching importance, would be diverted from a proper consideration of what is involved here by trivialities and pusillanimous criticism hurled at this committee. I want to say, in the first place, that the contentions and the misrepresentations made to this House that the committee did not intend to report a bill are absolutely false. I did not attend 31 hearings of this committee and attend 22 executive sessions of the subcommittee and 5 sessions in full committee executive meetings for the purpose of not reaching a proper solution. The fact is that the proposal to discharge the committee was never made until after the committee had decided to report a bill and had instructed the legislative counsel to prepare a report. The legislative counsel said it would take 2 or 3 weeks to prepare it because of the complications involved.

Let us look at this bill from its realities. It is not a trivial question now presented to you. What is done here today may have far-reaching consequences on the social-security system of this country. In my judgment the bill proposed here by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] is an improvident bill.

When we looked into this bill we found there were three principal things we had to do if we did our duty to this House. We had an admission from everybody that the present system was financially unsound. Our first duty was to make this system sound so that the time will not come when its inadequacy would bring disappointment and grief to those who now contribute their support in the belief that it assures them their promised security.

Another thing soon developed. We had a duty, as I see it, to eliminate from H. R. 1362 undue and unwarranted burdens it would place against the social-security system of the railroads. We have a social-security system for the employees of the Federal Government. We have a general social-security program and we have a railroad system of social security.

In the third place, we felt that there was an opportunity and a duty to place constructive improvements in the retirement plan.

The bill we present carries $65,000,000 per year of benefits to the railway employees and their beneficiaries in addition to those now included in the law. An examination of H. R. 1362 will show that it is indefinite in many particulars, so much so that Mr. Latimer, who largely was responsible for the preparation of it, proposed to the committee 76 different amendments to that bill. Who is going to stand here today and say that we should deprive this House of the opportunity to have the benefit of the consideration of this bill by the committee? Can we ignore the 76 amendments proposed by the author of it, and claim that committee consideration of the measure is not needed?

The original bill presented to the committee contained 210 pages. We got a comparative print of that. The Government paid for it. It cost $1,400 to get a comparative print of the three acts involved in this bill. This is not a question of one piece of legislation; there are three different acts involved. We paid $1,400 for that comparative print. Mr. Clarence Miller, a very able attorney, a partisan against this bill, but still a man with a fine reputation for research, prepared the comparative print. His services, if paid for, would have required several thousand dollars according to the ordinary fees of attorneys. He did that for nothing. Then, after we filed that comparative print, the bill was changed so that the comparative print became of no use. We had to throw it away.

Realize for a minute what the task of this committee was. The Committee on Ways and Means had a problem similar to what we had when they dealt with social security. Social security covers a broad field, but the plan we have here covers a comparable field applicable to railway employees. There are between five and six million potential beneficiaries under this bill. When the Committee on Ways and Means was assigned the duty of studying social security it employed experts. The House gave it $50,000 for that purpose. It employed a staff of experts and that staff worked nearly a year before they reported. Their report is a large volume. The committee was doing its duty to this House.

When we asked for one disinterested expert we had to fight along for weeks, yes, months, before we finally got that expert. Who was opposing it? The proponents of this bill.

If anybody is doubtful about our giving time to this matter all he needs to do is look at the report of this committee. He will find that this committee has done a fine work, one that required a great deal of patience under difficult conditions, partly in wartime and later under the aggravating conditions since the war. If we receive no credit for that, I will tell you why it is.

This is special legislation that seeks to create special privileges for a pressure group in this country. The country has seen demonstrations by these special groups that ought to put us on our toes today. What is the fact today? This pressure group is trying to defeat members of this committee who have ably and conscientiously tried to do their duty to present a proper bill to this House. They are out over the congressional districts of this country. We saw an announcement that $2,500,000 is ordered to be spent by one of these groups to defeat Members of Congress who do not come in and put their necks under the yoke of these special groups. Now is a good time to show these special groups that they do not dominate the Congress of the United States, that we still have enough free men here to protect the public of this country against the excesses and venalities of any groups.

Let us look at the situation. Last year the tax levied against the men and the railroads under the existing law, was $410,000,000 out of a pay roll of a little over $4,000,000,000.

If you put the Crosser bill as it is written into effect and measure the cost of it by the present pay roll, the raise would bring up the total burden of the bill to $760,000,000 a year against the pay roll of $4,300,000,000. Is that not enough to make a man sit up and take notice when he assumes to act for the public in deciding what to do with such a proposal? There is a raise of much over $300,000,000—the third raise in 10 years. We now have a deficiency in the retirement fund amounting to $120,000,000 a year based on the tax level plan of meeting the liabilities under that act. Ten million dollars a month is being charged against the future retirement fund under existing law. Now the Crosser bill comes along and proposes a cent and a half tax, or $60,000,000 a year, toward meeting that annual deficit of $120,000,000 a year. Is there anything suspicious about these figures? I am not depending alone upon Mr. Myers for what I say. I can bring to you the report of the actuarial committee of the Railroad Retirement Board covering the 3-year period up to the 1st of January 1942. The Board, in effect, estimated the deficiency would require 3.14 percent to put it on a solid basis on the level payment plan. Mr. Myers suggested to us .14 of 1 percent less than the actuaries of the Retirement Board proposed.

In addition to that, this bill proposes expanded benefits amounting to $260,000,000 a year. It further adds $64,000,000 to the unemployment benefits as well as adding to the retirement benefits. The bill is short. Even as it is written it is short $100,000,000 a year.

Under the committee bill we propose a 3-percent tax—.14 of 1 percent less than was proposed by the actuarial board—to take up this deficiency in the retirement system. That means $120,000,000 additional tax a year to place the retirement fund on a sound basis.

There is a phase of this that the Congress and the country ought to think about. I want to give you a little information. Mr. Williamson was spoken of here and it is claimed how he was satisfied with this bill. Well, Mr. Williamson recommended the appointment of Mr. Myers as the best one available to do the work. When I was asked by the committee to appoint an actuary I contacted the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK], who seems to have the reputation of being one of the best informed men on this subject in the country. He said he could not possibly accept. So Mr. Myers, who has been on the actuarial board of the Railroad Retirement Board, was selected.

Rainard Robbins, who was an actuary serving on the staff of the Committee on Ways and Means, made the comment I am going to read. I ask you to listen to it because there is a very interesting feature involved in it. Turning to the comment in the report of the Board, that is, the Retirement Board, regarding the cost of the plan contemplated by the 1944 bill, which is the one we have been referring to here, he says:

> We find: The estimated cost of the new proposal is 3½ percent of the taxable pay roll. Bearing in mind the Board's 1940 statement that disbursements under the retirement plan may reach 14 or 15 percent of pay roll and adding 3 percent for unemployment, and 3½ percent for new proposals, we have the Board's estimate of the eventual cost of the benefits under the new bill—from 20½ percent to 21½ percent of taxable pay roll.

With these facts before us it is of interest to recall the 1940 opinion of the Board that if special taxes are raised much above the then total of 6 percent, a progressive form of taxation should be substituted for at least in part for wage taxes.

If you will look up the record, if you have time to go through it, you will find there is a strong group in this country that wants to place this surplus burden on the Treasury of the United States. One of the methods of trying to accomplish that purpose is to create liabilities beyond the tax responsibility, so that eventually, when these people begin to cry about being deceived and misled, the Treasury of the United States shall step in and assume that responsibility.

This statement of Mr. Robbins further says:

It seems worthy of note that after each of two successive actuarial examinations, the Board admitted that rates were deficient to no minor extent but each time concluded to recommend no change.

Then, referring to the Board's report in 1940, the Board said:

We recommend further that Congress outline a definite policy with respect to paying contributions from the general revenue.

Mr. Robbins says:

It is remarkable that while the new bill would liberalize unemployment benefits by increasing the maximum period for payment in a benefit year from 100 to 130 days and would add liberal sickness and maternity benefits, it suggests no increase in the contributions over 3 percent to cover these extensions and the Board makes no comment on this point. It also seems optimistic to estimate that the suggested survivors' benefits can be covered by 3½ percent of pay rolls.

It is, of course, consistent with the Board's philosophy that part of the costs should be paid by general taxation to suggest increases in wage taxes that would be less than sufficient to cover the new benefits; but, for clear thinking, it is essential that we have an idea what the total cost of these benefits may be regardless of how the cost is to be met.

Now, we have this situation: An unsound bill before us. Shall we continue that unsoundness? We have one of three alternatives. One is to provide revenue to meet the obligations. Another is to let it go as it is and disappoint the beneficiaries under this legislation. A third is to delay until finally the Government steps in to assume a responsibility.

Now, whose advice are you going to take? It is up to this Congress to decide. Under the present management, Mr. Latimer at the head of the Railroad Retirement Board, we are operating under a deficit of $120,000,000 a year. We are following his advice. He, perhaps more than any other human being, was responsible for a mistake of $120,000,000 a year in estimating what it was going to cost for retirement. Then, when he comes to unemployment, which is payable by the railroads alone, the liability under that phase was estimated at 3 percent, which would be $120,000,000 a year on the present pay roll, while as a matter of fact, it is now pretty well agreed that 2 percent would cover it. What is proposed now is to add $80,000,000 to the unemployment fund and provide nothing to take care of that increased addition.

Our committee, I believe, deserves credit. We faced the issue. We did not dodge it. We refused to yield to those who tried to compel us to jump through the hoop. I believe the committee deserves your support.

The committee deserves the credit of standing up and trying to protect the public of the United States. Consider it from this standpoint: Every phase of social security has relation to the ultimate program in this country. I believe there are 55,000,000 employees in the United States at the present time. We have those who believe with a lot of merit in the argument that there are many other millions of people in this country who deserve social security just as much as those who have it now; and no doubt in years to come we are going to expand it. What is social security going to be in the years to come? Is it going to be the great benefit to the American people in the progress of civilization of which we might conceive, or are we by overdoing the thing to these millions of possible beneficiaries going to convert them to that point of citizenship where they are more interested in seeing free benefits from the Government than they are the other great problems of this country? If that time ever comes, social security instead of being a beneficent thing is going to be a viper nurtured in the breast of this Republic.

The railroad employees constitute less than one-twentieth of all the employed in the country, far less than one-twentieth. Suppose we start in the interests of justice to all the people of the country, by assuming that we were to be fair to all classes and treat them as nearly alike as possible; do you know what it would cost? If we tried to do for the rest of them what this bill proposes for the railroad employees it would cost this Nation over $20,000,000,000 a year to pay the bill. In other words, reduced to mathematical certainty, you have the unfairness and the special privilege nature of this legislation.

A good deal is said about unemployment. This bill proposes to increase unemployment benefits to 26 weeks from 20, and to pay $25 instead of $20 a week. That amendment will cost $12,000,000 a year. Then, under the guise of unemployment insurance it would include maternity benefits for 16 weeks. It gives benefits the same as for unemployment. I just call attention to that provision because it characterizes the nature of this bill and the purpose of those who have dominated its framing. I do not mean to say that the men generally speaking over the country are responsible for it but a few of these overzealous leaders. If a woman is going to become a mother she is to receive unemployment benefits for 16 weeks even though the pregnancy occurred a year after she left the railroad. If that is not going somewhere down the left side of the line I do not know what it is.

Sick benefits are put in the bill, and the picture is drawn of a man in serious condition. He is employed by a railroad. Must we assume that every employer in this country is to take on responsibility for all men who pass into his employ? Do you recall that in the old slavery days the law prescribed the liability of the master? He must provide food, clothing, shelter, and medical care. There was no getting away from that. But when that burden was placed on the master it was in the days of slavery. Now in the days of free enterprise in which we live are we going to say that the employer must be charged with taking care of all the misfortunes of his employees? You cannot do that without making somebody pay for something he does not get.

We allowed only $20 for unemployment for the soldier who came back from foreign wars. We allow $20 under social security. Are we going to allow $25 for these men who have this favored system of unemployment benefits. Are we going to add sick benefits, that are added to no other industry in this country? The States of California and Rhode Island pay sick benefits, but the money that does it is collected from the men themselves, not from the employers.

Do you want to strike out in a new field here and under the pretense of unemployment fix a responsibility on the employer for sickness, no matter what the occasion of it is? The employee may have committed a crime, it may be due to his own misconduct, it may have no relationship whatever to employment; but the sickness would be charged to the carriers. They would pay every dollar of it. You do not even provide for the men making a little contribution toward carrying that cost.

Now in reference to the proposal to increase the duration, I was chairman of the subcommittee of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee that wrote the first Railroad Retirement Act in 1935. In examining that bill and from what little knowledge I had I found out it was fixed up so that the old employees took the cream of it and the little fellows took the other end. In subcommittee we had lobbyists that were lining the halls outside. A motion was made to report the bill. I wanted to present that phase of it. We took it up in the main committee. When it finally came out and was enacted into law, we cut 35 percent, according to the experts, out of the bill, and not a cent came from the little fellows. It was all taken away from the men who had designed the legislation in their own favor.

At that time we established an 80-day unemployment benefit. Some time went on, I believe about 2 years, and the Congress raised that to 100 days. Now they are back here again asking us to raise it to 130 days, illustrating what we can expect to have in connection with all this legislation that is written primarily for the interest or concern of particular groups and without regard to the general need and the proper relation to the affairs of the country as a whole.

These sick benefits under the guise of unemployment create a liability of $64,000,000 a year.

Mr. Altmeyer, who is head of the Social Security Board, recently made a statement in which he proposed a 2 percent tax to cover unemployment insurance. That is what our actuary told us would be sufficient to carry unemployment insurance under the bill as it stands now. But if we add these other benefits, maternity and sick benefits, and increase the pay days for unemployment, it will add considerably more.

Besides H. R. 1362 proposes that this unemployment charge due to sickness may alternate with unemployment due to inability to work for lack of a job. In other words, an employee could collect 6 months for unemployment and follow that with similar benefits for 6 months more on account of sickness.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the Crosser bill was introduced and considered by the committee; that a petition was placed on the desk in reference to the Crosser bill, which was supposed to come to the floor for consideration and amendment; that a bill striking out everything after the enacting clause of the Crosser bill was substituted for that bill, which is now before the House. I want to know if there will be a chance to consider amendments to either of the two bills, the committee bill or the Crosser bill, and if there will be a chance to be heard on the provisions of either of these bills by Members of this House?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair will endeavor to answer the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry.

The first section of the bill will be read. At the end of the reading of the first section, the committee substitute will be read for amendment. Then the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union will act on the committee substitute. If the committee substitute should be rejected, then the balance of the bill will be read for amendment; the so-called Crosser bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. After the first section of the bill is read, if an amendment is desired to be offered will an amendment lie and will there be discussion allowed on the amendment under the parliamentary situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment to be considered will be the committee amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting the committee amendment for the pending bill.

Mr. WHITE. Will each section as it is read be subject to amendment and discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment will be subject to amendment as it is read.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NEELY. Would not the adoption of the committee substitute mean the death of the Crosser bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It would mean that the committee has completed its action and has adopted the committee substitute for the pending bill.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

DIVISION I

SEC. 1. Section 1 (a) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 and section 1 (a) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act are amended to read as follows:

"(10) Exclusions: Except with respect to persons covered by clause (iii) of paragraph (5), the term 'employer shall not include any person (i) by reason of operations in the conduct of which such person holds itself out directly to the public as a common carrier by water, air, or motor, or animal-drawn vehicle, or as a contract carrier by any of such means other than contract carrier service regularly offered to railroad passengers, shippers, or consignees pursuant to arrangements with an employer such as defined herein; or (ii) by reason of the performance of any operation which is insubstantial or is to irregular or infrequent as to afford no substantial basis for an inference that such operation will be repeated; or (iii) by reason of its being engaged in the mining of coal, the supplying of coal to an employer such as herein defined where delivery is not beyond the mine tipple, and in the operation of equipment or facilities therefor, or in any of such activities, or in logging or the milling of lumber to standard commercial sizes, or in furnishing supplies to a carrier; or (iv) by reason of the operation of a street, interurban, or suburban electric railway, unless such railway is operating as a part of a general steam-railroad system of transportation, or is a part of the general steam-railroad system of transportation now or hereafter operated by any other motive power. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized and directed, upon request of the Board, or upon complaint of any party interested, to determine after hearing whether any line operated by electric power falls within the terms of this clause. The term 'employer' shall not include any individual by reason of the performance of any service by such individual personally.

"(11) Segregation: Any person who is an employer as defined in this subsection shall be an employer with respect to all activities carried on by it, except that (i) any person who is an employer by reason of paragraph (9) shall be an employer only in the capacity described in that paragraph; (ii) if the Board finds that a person is principally engaged in activities other than employer activities and that its employer activities are conducted as an operation or operations separate and distinct from the operations in which it is principally engaged, such person shall be an employer only with respect to such employer operation or operations; and (iii) if the Board finds that a person who is an employer solely by reason of paragraph (2) or (4) of this subsection, is principally engaged in activities other than employer activities but does not, pursuant to clause (ii) find that the employer activities of such person are conducted as an operation or operations separate and distinct from the operations in which it is principally engaged, such person shall be an employer only with respect to all work performed in its employ by individuals who regularly and substantially perform work on property structures or equipment devoted to transportation use. If to a substantial extent the individuals working in employer activities regularly work also in the operations in which a person is principally engaged, such employer activities shall not be deemed to be conducted as an operation or operations separate and distinct from the operations in which such person is principally engaged. For the purposes of this subsection, a person shall be deemed to be principally engaged in activities other than employer activities if the man hours devoted to such other activities are more than one-half of the total man-hours devoted to all activities carried on by such person, except that if the Board finds that a determination on such basis is impracticable or inappropriate the Board shall make the determination on the basis of such factors as in ts judgment are relevant and appropriate. The term 'employer activities' as used in this subsection shall mean all such activities as are conducted by a person as a carrier, or as are described in paragraph (2) (3), (4), (5), (6), or (8). When a final determination will have been made as to whether a person is principally engaged in employer activities, the matter shall not be redetermined except upon the basis of operations conducted for a period of not less than 3 years following the last operations considered in making the previous determination, unless the Board finds that substantial activities will have been abandoned or substantial new activities will have been undertaken Upon any such redetermination the conclusion shall be governed by the previous determination, unless the Board finds that on the basis of the factors on which such previous determination will have been based, the activities in which the person previously was principally engaged constitute less than 40 percent of such person's activities."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the committee substitute be dispensed with and that it be printed at this point in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, as I understand, the part not read contains a vast number of sections and I want to know if amendments will be in order if that unanimous consent request prevails?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments will be in order to any part of the committee substitute.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The committee substitute is as follows:

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT OF 1937

ADDITION OF CERTAIN DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. Section 1 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(o) An individual has 'a current connection with the railroad industry' on a particular date if, in any 30 consecutive calendar months before the month in which such date occurs, he was in service as an employee in not less than 12 calendar months and, if such 30 calendar months do not immediately precede such month, he was not engaged in any regular employment other than employment for an employer in the period before such month and after the end of such 30 calendar months.

"(p) The term 'occupational injury or disease' means (1) accidental injury arising out of and in the course of employment as an employee, (2) such occupational disease or infection as arises out of such employment or as naturally or unavoidably results from such accidental injury, or (3) injury caused by the willful act of a third person directed against an individual because of his employment as an employee.

"(q) The term 'wages' (except when used in section 5 (d) (1)) means all compensation earned by an employee after December 31, 1936, excluding that part of such compensation which, after compensation equal to $3,000 had been earned by an employee during any calendar year, was earned by such employee during such calendar year; but in computing such compensation no part of any month's compensation in excess of $300, earned before January 1, 1947, shall be recognized.

"(r) The term 'survivor benefit credit' means an amount equal to the sum of the following—

"(1) (A) 40 percent of the amount of an individual's average monthly wage if such average monthly wage does not exceed $50, or (B) if such average monthly wage exceeds $50, 40 percent of $50, plus 10 percent of the amount by which such average monthly wage exceeds $50 and does not exceed $250, and

"(2) an amount equal to 1 percent of the amount computed under paragraph (1) multiplied by the number of years in which $200 or more of wages were earned by such individual.

Where the survivor benefit credit thus computed is less than $10, such credit shall be $10.

"(s) The term 'average monthly wage' means the quotient obtained by dividing the total wages earned by an individual before the quarter in which he died, became entitled to receive an annuity under paragraph 1 of section 2 (a), or attained the age of 65 if he became entitled to receive an annuity under section 2 (a) before attaining the age of 65, whichever first occurred, by three times the number of quarters elapsing after 1936 and before such quarter in which he died, became so entitled, or so attained the age of 65, excluding any quarter prior to the quarter in which he attained the age of 22 during which he earned less than $50 of wages.

"(t) The term 'completely insured individual' means any individual with respect to whom it appears to the satisfaction of the Board that—

"(1) He had not less than one quarter of coverage for each two of the quarters elapsing after 1936, or after the quarter in which he attained the age of 21, whichever quarter is later, and up to but excluding the quarter in which he attained the age of 65, or died, whichever first occurred, and in no case less than six quarters of coverage; or

"(2) He had at least 40 quarters of coverage.

As used in this subsection, and in subsections (u) and (v) of this section, the term 'quarter' and the term 'calendar quarter' mean a period of three calendar months ending on March 31, June 30, September 30, or December 31. When the number of quarters specified in paragraph (1) of this subsection is an odd number, for purposes of such paragraph such number shall be reduced by one. In any case where an individual has earned in a calendar year $3,000 or more in wages, each quarter of such year following his first quarter of coverage shall be deemed a quarter of coverage, excepting any quarter in such year in which such individual dies or (having attained the age of 65) is or becomes entitled to receive an annuity under section 2 and any quarter succeeding such quarter in which he died or was or became so entitled.

"(u) The term 'partially insured individual' means any individual with respect to whom it appears to the satisfaction of the Board that he earned wages of not less than $50 in each of not less than 6 of the 12 calendar quarters immediately preceding the quarter in which he died.

"(v) The term 'quarter of coverage' means a calendar quarter in which the individual earned not less than $50 in wages; except that for each calendar year during the period beginning January 1, 1937, and ending December 31, 1946, an individual's number of quarters of coverage shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

If during the calendar year the individual earned wages in the following number of calendar months—	And the total wages earned during such calendar year is—
	$50 but less than $100	$100 but less than $150	$150 but less than $200	$200 or more
	Then the quarters of coverage for such calendar year shall be—
1 but not more than 3	1	1	1	1
4 but not more than 6	1	2	2	2
7 but not more than 9	1	2	3	3
10 or more	1	2	3	4

For the purposes of subsection (s) and (u) of this section if an individual's quarters of coverage in any calendar year before 1947, as determined from the table—

"(1) is one, his wages for such year shall be deemed to have been earned in the last calendar quarter of such year;

"(2) are two, one-half of his wages for such year shall be deemed to have been earned in each of the last two calendar quarters of such year;

"(3) are three, one-third of his wages for such year shall be deemed to have been earned in each of the last three calendar quarters of such year; and

"(4) are four, one-fourth of his wages for such year shall be deemed to have been earned in each calendar quarter of such year.

"(w) The term 'widow' (except when used in section 4 (e)) means the surviving wife of an individual who either (1) is the mother of such individual's son or daughter, or (2) was married to him prior to the beginning of the twelfth month before the month in which he died.

"(x) The term 'child' (except when used in section 4 (e)) means the child of an individual, and the stepchild of an individual by a marriage contracted prior to the date upon which he attained the age of 60 and prior to the beginning of the twelfth month before the month in which he died, and a child legally adopted by an individual prior to the date upon which he attained the age of 60 and prior to the beginning of the twelfth month before the month in which he died.

"(y) In determining whether an applicant is the widow, child, or parent of a completely insured or partially insured individual, the Board shall apply such law as would be applied in determining the devolution of intestate personal property by the courts of the State in which such insured individual was domiciled at the time of his death, or if such insured individual was not so domiciled in any State, by the courts of the District of Columbia. Applicants who according to such law would have the same status relative to taking intestate personal property as a widow, child, or parent shall be deemed such.

"(z) A widow shall be deemed to have been living with her husband at the time of his death if they were both members of the same household on the date of his death, or she was receiving regular contributions from him toward her support on such date, or he had been ordered by any court to contribute to her support."

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 2 OF RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT OF 1937

SEC. 2. Section 2 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"ANNUITIES

"SEC. 2. (a) The following-described individuals, if they shall have been employees on or after August 29, 1935, shall, subject to the conditions set forth in subsections (b), (c), (d), and (e), be eligible for annuities after they shall have ceased to render compensated service to any person, whether or not an employer as defined in section 1 (a) (but with the right to engage in other employment to the extent not prohibited by subsection (e)):

"1. Individuals who on or after August 29, 1935, shall be 65 years of age or over.

"2. Women who on or about January 1, 1947, shall be 60 years of age or over and have completed 30 years of service.

"3. Individuals (other than those covered by paragraph 2) who on or after August 29, 1935, shall be 60 years of age or over and have completed 30 years of service, but the annuity of such an individual shall be reduced by one one-hundred-and-eightieth for each calendar month that such individual is under age 65 when the annuity begins to accrue.

"4. Individuals who on or after August 29, 1935, shall be either 60 years of age or over or shall have completed 30 years of service, and whose permanent physical or mental condition is such that they are unable to engage in any regular employment for hire.

"5. Individuals who on or after January 1, 1947, have completed 10 years of service and whose permanent physical or mental condition, as the result of occupational injury or disease, is such that they are unable to engage in any regular employment for hire.

"6. Individuals who on or after January 1, 1947, have, on the date as of which the annuity begins to accrue, a current connection with the railroad industry and, on such date, either have completed 20 years of service or have attained the age of 60, and whose permanent physical or mental condition, as the result of occupational injury or disease, is such as to be disabling for work in their regular occupation as employees. The Board, with the cooperation of employers and employees, shall secure for purposes of this paragraph the establishment of standards determining the physical and mental conditions which are permanently disabling for work in the several occupations in the railroad industry, and the Board, employers, and employees shall cooperate in the promotion of the greatest practicable degree of uniformity in the standards applied by the several employers. An individual's condition shall be deemed to be disabling for work in his regular occupation as an employee if he has been disqualified by his employer because of disability for service in his regular occupation as an employee in accordance with the applicable standards so established; but if the employee has not been so disqualified by his employer, the Board shall determine whether his condition is disabling for work in his regular occupaton as an employee in accordance with the standards generally established; and, if the employee's regular occupation as an employee is not one with respect to which standards have been established, the standards relating to a reasonably comparable occupation shall be used. If there is no such comparable occupation, the Board shall determine whether the employee's condition is disabling for work in his regular occupation as an employee by determining whether under the practices generally prevailing in industries in which such occupation exists such condition is a permanent disqualification for work in such occupation. For the purposes of this section, an employee's 'regular occupation' shall be deemed to be the occupation in which he has been engaged as an employee in more calendar months than the calendar months in which he has been engaged in any other occupation as an employee during the last preceding five calendar years, whether or not consecutive, in each of which years he has earned compensation, except that, if an employee establishes that during the last fifteen consecutive calendar years he has been engaged in another occupation as an employee in one-half or more of all the months in which he has earned compensation, he may claim such other occupation as his regular occupation as an employee.

"(b) Such satisfactory proof shall be made, as prescribed by the Board, of the physical or mental condition referred to in paragraph 4, 5, or 6 of subsection (a), and from time to time, of the continuance of such condition (determined in accordance with the tests applied in the original determination of such condition) until the employee attains the age of 65. If the individual fails to comply with the requirements prescribed by the Board as to proof of the continuance of such condition until he attains the age of 65 years, his right to an annuity by reason thereof shall, except for good cause shown to the Board, cease, but without prejudice to his rights to have subsequently awarded to him any annuity to which he may be entitled. If before attaining the age of 65 an individual in receipt of an annuity under paragraph 4, 5, or 6 of subsection (a) is found by the Board to be no longer in the physical or mental condition referred to in such paragraph his annuity shall cease upon the last day of the month in which such condition is found by the Board to have ceased to exist, but without prejudice to his rights to have subsequently awarded to him any annuity to which he may be entitled.

"(c) An annuity shall be paid only if the applicant has relinquished such rights as he may have had to return to the service of an employer and of the person by whom he was last employed; but this requirement shall not apply to the individuals mentioned in paragraphs 4, 5, or 6 of subsection (a) prior to attaining the age of 65.

"(d) An annuity shall begin to accrue as of a date to be specified in a written application (to be made in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Board and to be signed by the individual entitled thereto), but—

"(1) not before the date following the last day of compensated service of the applicant, and

"(2) not more than 60 days before the filing of the application.

"(e) No annuity shall be paid with respect to any month in which an individual in receipt of an annuity hereunder (1) renders compensated service to an employer, (2) renders compensated service to the last person by whom he was employed prior to the date on which the annuity begins to accrue, or (3) in the case of an annuity under paragraph 6 of subsection (a), earns more than $75 in service for hire or in self-employment. Individuals receiving annuities shall report to the Board immediately all such compensated service and earnings."

PROVISION RELATING TO MINIMUM ANNUITIES

SEC. 3. Subsection (e) of section 3 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(e) If an individual entitled to an annuity—

"(1) was an employee when he attained age 65 and has completed 20 years of service, or

"(2) had, on the date as of which such annuity began to accrue, a current connection with the railroad industry and had, on such date, completed 5 years of service.

the minimum annuity payable shall, before any reduction pursuant to paragraph 3 of section 2 (a), be whichever of the following is the least: (1) $3 multiplied by the number of his years of service, (2) $50, or (3) his monthly compensation."

"(c) Whenever a decrease or increase of the total of benefits for a month is made under subsection (a) or (b) of this section, each benefit shall be proportionately decreased or increased, as the case may be.

"(d) Deductions, in such amounts and at such time or times as the Board shall determine, shall be made from any payment or payments under section 4 to which an individual is entitled, until the total of such deductions equals such individual's benefit or benefits for any month in which such individual:

"(1) rendered services for wages (as defined in section 209 (a) of the Social Security Act, as amended) of not less than $15; or

"(2) if a child under 18 and over 16 years of age, failed to attend school regularly and the Board finds that attendance was feasible; or

"(3) if a widow entitled to a widow's current insurance benefit, did not have in her care a child of her deceased husband entitled to receive a child's insurance benefit.

"(e) If more than one event occurs in any 1 month which would occasion deductions equal to a benefit for such month, only an amount equal to such benefit shall be deducted.

"(f) Any individual in receipt of benefits subject to deduction under subsection (d) (or who is in receipt of such benefits on behalf of another individual), because of the occurrence of an event enumerated therein, shall report such occurrence to the Board

The Board's record of the compensation so returned shall be conclusive as to the amount of compensation earned by an employee during each month covered by the return, and the fact that the Board's records show that no return was made of the compensation claimed to be earned by an employee during a particular calendar month shall be taken as conclusive that no compensation was earned by such employee during that month, unless the error in the amount of compensation in the one case, or failure to make or record return of the compensation in the other case, is called to the attention of the Board within 4 years after the last date on which return of the compensation was required to be made."

SAVING PROVISIONS

SEC. 7. (a) The provisions of paragraphs 2 and 4 of section 2 (a), and of section 3 (e), of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as in force after this title take effect, shall be applicable to individuals who became eligible for annuities before January 1, 1947, without further application therefor, but such provision shall not result in the payment of any annuity, with respect to any calendar month prior to January 1, 1947, in a higher amount than would be payable under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 as in force prior to the date on which this title takes effect. If an annuity increased pursuant to such provisions is a joint and survivor annuity, the increase shall be in the same form, the actuarial value being computed as of the date the increase begins, unless on that date there is no spouse living for whom the election was made, in which case the increase shall be awarded on a single life basis. If the increase affects a survivor annuity only, the increase shall be so determined as to bear the same ratio to the survivor annuity as the increase in the basic annuity would bear to such basic annuity if the employee annuitant were living and had made no joint and survivor election. For the purposes of section 3 (e) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as amended by this act, an individual to whom an annuity began to accrue before January 1, 1947, if such annuity was based on not less than 5 years of service, shall be deemed to have had a current connection with the railroad industry on the date as of which such annuity began to accrue.

(b) Notwithstanding the amendment by this act of section 3 (f) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, in any case in which the individual referred to in such section died before January 1, 1947, such section shall continue in effect as though this act had not been enacted.

(c) Notwithstanding the repeal by this act of section 4 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, in any case where an election was made under such section 4 prior to January 1, 1947, the election shall be given effect as though this act had not been enacted; except that—

(1) If the annuity of the individual who made the election did not begin to accrue before January 1, 1947, the election shall be considered not to have been made unless the individual, prior to January 1, 1948, reaffirms such election in such manner as the Railroad Retirement Board shall by regulations prescribe.

(2) If the annuity of the individual who made the election began to accrue, but was not awarded, before January 1, 1947, the election shall be considered not to have been made if such individual, prior to January 1, 1948, revokes such election in such manner as the Railroad Retirement Board shall by regulations prescribe.

(d) Notwithstanding the repeal by this act of section 3A (m) and section 5 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, such section 3A (m) and such section 5 shall continue in effect with respect to compensation earned after December 31, 1936, and before January 1, 1947, by an individual as an employee, as though this act had not been enacted, in the following cases:

(1) If such individual dies before January 1, 1947.

(2) If such individual dies on or after January 1, 1947, and died neither completely nor partially insured within the meaning of subsection (t) or (u) of section 1 of the Railroad Retirement Act, as amended by this act.

(3) If such individual dies on or after January 1, 1947, and a lump-sum death payment under section 4 (e) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as amended by this act, is payable, except that the death benefit shall be reduced by the amount of such lump-sum death payment.

(4) If such individual dies on or after January 1, 1947, leaving a surviving widow, child, or parent who would, on filing application in the month in which such individual died, be entitled to a benefit for such month under subsection (a), (b), (c), or (d) of section 4 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as amended by this act, except that (A) the death benefit, if any, shall not be due before (i) the first day of the month next following the last month with respect to which any benefits under such subsection (a), (b), (c), or (d), based on an application filed in the month in which such individual dies, would be payable, or (ii) the first day of the month next following the month of the death of a spouse entitled to a survivor annuity pursuant to an election made under the provisions of section 4 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 before its amendment by this act, whichever is later; and the 2-year period within which an application for the death benefit, if any, must be filed pursuant to the provisions of such section 5, shall not begin before such first day of the month described in clauses (i) and (ii) above, and (B) the death benefit shall be reduced by the aggregate amount of benefits paid, or due but not paid, under section 4 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as amended by this act, on the basis of such individual's death.

(e) Notwithstanding the amendment made by this act to section 8 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as amended, a return made in accordance with such section, covering monthly compensation of an employee, with respect to any period before January 1, 1947, shall be conclusive (in the same manner and to the same extent as provided under such section 8 prior to its amendment by this act) as to the amount of compensation earned by such employee during each month covered by the return; except that after March 31, 1951, the Railroad Retirement Board's record of the amount of the compensation earned by such employee during each month covered by any such return shall be conclusive.

TITLE IV—EFFECTIVE DATES OF TITLES I AND II

SEC. 401. Titles I and II of this act shall take effect January 1, 1947.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 and the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and for other purposes."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the sections of the committee substitute be considered seriatim for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. In the event the committee substitute is adopted, then that may be considered as a separate amendment in the House; is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. It is all one amendment.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. In the event it is adopted, it will be considered as a separate amendment in the House upon which a separate vote may be had?

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee substitute is adopted in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, the committee substitute will be reported to the House as an amendment to the bill.

Is there an amendment to be offered to section 1 of the committee substitute?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as an employee of the railroads in the past it has been my responsibility to be a witness in some railroad damage cases. I have always found very astute and adroit counsel on the railroads' side. I am reminded of that experience in considering the conditions met here in the House today. We are confronted with a very unique situation.

A perfecting amendment to the Railroad Retirement Act was introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] and was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That bill has been pending for over a year. I checked from time to time on the progress of that bill with its eminent author, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], and was assured that it was receiving consideration in the committee. It develops today that on both sides of the House in charge of the debate we find a preponderance of opponents of the Crosser bill. Under the parliamentary situation, which has been very astutely and adroitly managed, the real author of the bill is not in control of any time and has had very limited opportunity to present his case. None of the proponents of the bill have had a fair show here to speak in behalf of the bill. If we do not get in under the 5-minute rule and talk a little bit on the side of the railroad employees and the constructive provisions of the original bill and refute some of the exaggerated statements that have been made by the proponents of the opposition, the gentleman from California and others, then the case goes by default.

A minute ago a statement was made on the floor as to the money the railroads had to pay into the fund. I wonder how much money the Federal Government is paying into the retirement fund for Federal employees. Of the millions and billions that the taxpayers are paying into the Treasury of the United States, how much is set aside in the retirement fund for Federal employees?

I want to tell you something about the railroad men and the work they do and the conditions under which they work. The men who bring us into Washington on the transcontinental railroads, many of the conductors and trainmen on the B. & O., have homes at Garrett, Ind., and have to travel 100 miles to get home after making their run, they deadhead back 100 miles to get to their homes. Railroad men in the nature of their service are detached from their homes. They are in transit. They do not just serve during a war and get a liberal pension, after the war is over, they serve all the time. They have done a magnificent job in this war.

When I was a youth a railroad train consisted of 16 cars of 30,000 pounds capacity, manned by a crew of five men. Today there are about 120 cars of 80,000 and 100,000 pounds capacity, and it still requires only 5 men to handle a train. Jim Hill made the boast that he could start one of his big mammoth locomotives with a train from the east end of his line and run the engine into the bay at the west end of the line and not lose a dollar by the transaction. The freight charges on the trainload of freight would have paid for the new locomotive. I have seen many a poor old railroad man turned out to shift for himself after a lifetime of railroad service, too old to learn how to do anything else. There is a long story and a long record behind this bill. The Railroad Retirement Act was one of the most beneficial pieces of legislation ever enacted by Congress. Let us perfect it by passing the Crosser amendment. So I say vote down the committee bill and give the real bill—the Crosser bill—a chance.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that this somewhat complicated and confused legislative proposal should come to the floor with so much difference of opinion with respect to its contents, as well as its objectives.

We have before us H. R. 1362, submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], and described as the Crosser bill. Then we have a substitute by way of amendment supported by a majority of the committee having the legislation in charge. The proponents of the amended version claim the real objectives of railway employee organizations would be attained under the amended measure. Unfortunately, considerable discussion has been with regard to the manner in which the legislation has been handled rather than with respect to the legislation itself. It is unfortunate this legislation has been long delayed.

Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with a very important legislative proposal. It affects hundreds of thousands of employees, who have the tremendous, and in many cases hazardous, responsibility of carrying on the operation of the great railroad systems of this country. Many thousands of them work under trying conditions. Day and night, in heat and cold, in storms and sunshine, the trains must go.

This bill contains more than a hundred pages. I believe the legislation the rank and file of railroad employees really want, and which they should have, could be set out in a comparatively small bill. The proposals could be included in about four categories.

They want and should have more liberal and better protection for the widows of employees. They are willing to contribute to funds to provide better security for their families in event of death of employees. They want better protection in the way of annuities. They want a minimum of $50 per month retirement pay for lower-paid workers who have devoted the better part of their lives to the railroad service. Thousands now receive much less than $50 per month, but who spent long years in the service. Personally, I think there should be additional increases in annuities, than is now being paid to those who receive wages from $100, $200, and $300 per month. I shall discuss that point more fully later on.

Then a very important matter is to afford fair and proper protection for those who, through no fault of their own, become totally disabled before they reach the required age and years of service for retirement. They want to know that men disabled in service are not pushed aside because of technical or other reasons when they ought, as a matter of right, be allowed a fair pension. Men in railroad service, in so many instances, do hazardous work and want to be fairly protected.

They want to know the tax is sufficient to keep the railroad retirement system, as well as the unemployment insurance system solvent. They are willing to pay their share of the tax to do it.

Mr. Chairman, I think there are some provisions in the Crosser bill that could be omitted and thereby hold down a great deal of increased expense that is unnecessary. The maternity provision is expensive and could be omitted. I have talked to the author of the bill. He indicated he would not object to it being stricken out.

Employees under the Crosser bill who are not directly engaged in the railway service, such as employees who work for contractors engaged in icing cars, should be omitted from this legislation. Only those directly employed should be included in this proposal.

I would like to add parenthetically, that in discussing this problem with men in the railway service, some of them seem to feel that the Railway Retirement Act could be administered more economically. After all, it is a part of their contributions that is being used to carry out the terms of the act. It should be administered as economically as possible, giving consideration, of course, to proper service to the employees.

At the beginning of my statement, I called attention to increasing annuity benefits for retired railroad employees with average wages of $50 per month. In my studies of both the original Crosser bill and the bill reported by the committee, I notice there are no provisions which would increase annuity benefits for retired railroad employees with average wages of more than $50 per month. I mention the $50 average wages because of the proposed increased minimum annuity benefits in both proposals before us.

All employees are required to pay the same percentage of taxes on their wages, whether they average $25, $100, or $300 per month.

There is no good reason why the railroad employee who develops greater ability than one receiving a lower wage, or why one who assumes greater responsibility than the lower-paid worker, should not receive a more nearly uniform rate on the taxes he pays than is provided under the present act or either of the proposals submitted in the Crosser bill or the committee bill.

I have an amendment to be submitted at the proper time, that would help take care of this inequity. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA], a member of the committee, has a similar amendment. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA] will have prior right to the floor in the event he offers the amendment. I shall, of course, support it and I trust the membership on the floor will likewise support this worthy proposal. The matter was discussed before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee by Mr. John T. Corbett, the very capable and able representative of the Railroad Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. This amendment, of course, will create some additional cost, but it is not large compared with the benefit derived therefrom, and it can be offset many times by the deletion of the so-called maternity amendment. As well as the deletion of the proposal to allow benefits to employees not directly connected with the railroad service.

The formulas or amendment I have in mind, to provide for increased benefits to those provided in the legislation before us, would read substantially as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) The annuity shall be computed by multiplying an individual's "years of service" by the following percentages of his "monthly compensation": 2 percent of the first $50; 1½ percent of the next $100; and 1 percent of the next $150.

Mr. Chairman, legislation on the matters outlined in my statement is long overdue. I trust there will be no unnecessary delay with respect to this legislation. We ought to deal with this problem fairly and constructively and try to do the right thing by the thousands of deserving people employed in the railroad service in this country.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendment, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, for those of us who have worked with it, this has been a very difficult problem. As I stated when I addressed the House on the rule, heretofore this legislation has been enacted by Congress after agreement between the management and the men as to the terms. I might say to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] that that situation did not exist with respect to this legislation. So of necessity, the responsibility devolved upon the committee to resolve the differences and to try to bring out a bill that was fair and right and defensible, and would do what the railroad men themselves wanted, having regard to the rights of other people interested in the railroad industry and to our economy and to our people generally.

I might also say to the gentleman from Kansas, if I understood him correctly, that the very things he said he found the railroad men wanted are substantially provided in the committee bill.

This proposal is before us by reason of the insistence of the railroad brotherhoods that consideration be given to it. You will find in the hearings that railroad management would have preferred that nothing be done about it. But the committee in that circumstance, has undertaken the job and I think has done a job that should commend itself to the membership of the House if you believe that the committee system is right and that fair and careful consideration was given to this measure.

Let me point out again to you that the committee bill was adopted in the committee by a vote of 15 to 6, which should be some indication of the support for it there.

The first thing we had to do was to raise enough taxes to make this retirement fund, as now constituted, solvent. We determined that it took 3 percent to do that. The Crosser bill said 1½ percent. I am thoroughly convinced that it takes 3 percent. In the absence of agreement, under which we might be relieved of a considerable share of the responsibility for making that determination, let me suggest we had better be sure, particularly in view of the fact that we are providing for increased benefits, that the rate to be applied is enough to make the present fund actuarially sound.

There are other reasons why there is a responsibility in connection with this legislation. This is a separate system for a separate group of employees. But bear in mind that at least insofar as that part of the fund contributed by the railroads is concerned, it represents a general charge on all of the public. I see the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee before me. That committee is now studying and trying to determine what generally should be done about social security. That is what this measure does for a particular segment of our country. The committee had to determine for itself, under its responsibility to the Congress, how far above the level of general social security should we make this program? One representative of a large railroad brotherhood, Mr. Miller of the trainmen, appeared before the committee. I ask you to look on page 335 of the hearings. Here is what he said:

The CHAIRMAN. Would you consider that it is necessary or desirable to try to harmonize any social-security benefits established by this bill with the general social-security program of the country?

Mr. MILLER. Well, it is my personal opinion that we must not get too far out of line with the rest of the Nation, because if we do, there will be a lot of contention which should not exist.

I do not believe that the railroad empoyees, as railroad employees, are any better employees than the employees of any other industry. We work under peculiar circumstances; circumstances that are different; we have a different kind of work; but as one employee to the other, I think we are equal to any employee, but I do not and would not attempt to say we are better because we are railroad employees.

The CHAIRMAN. You are not claiming any special advantage over the general run of people of the Nation?

Mr. MILLER. No; no; definitely not.

The CHAIRMAN. I take it that you would not be in favor of a system that would cause a general agitation of discrimination in favor of railroad men insofar as the social-security program is concerned.

Mr. MILLER. I would not be in favor of anything that would cause any unfair discrimination as between employees of one industry over employees of another industry.

What were the things the gentleman from Kansas has talked about that these men say they wanted? One of the things they said they wanted was a higher minimum pension. Now, let us look at the Crosser bill. I wanted the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me in order that he could clarify some of these matters himself, but he would not yield and now I will try to clarify them as best I can.

Among the things the railroad workers said they wanted was a lower retirement age for women, that would entitle them to benefits after they had reached age 60. On that score the Crosser bill and the committee bill are exactly alike.

I realize that some Members are going to vote the way they feel and not the way they think, but I am telling you this is one of the very serious problems that confront us and I trust I can afford some enlightenment in my efforts. We have heard the criticism that the debate and argument had not been specific enough in the matter of pointing out the differences between the two bills. I shall do what I can to point out such differences.

The next thing the railroad workers said they wanted—and incidentally I have been riding trains many thousands of miles and I take advantage of every opportunity to talk with the men working on the trains or wherever I can find them to know just what their working conditions are and what they want—is pensions for widows and dependent children as a matter of right. The committee said, "All right, we will give them to you," and the provisions in the committee bill are the same as far as eligibilities are concerned in that regard as the Crosser bill.

There is this difference, and I bring it up in order that you can resolve it in your own minds. The Crosser bill would have provided approximately 25 percent higher benefits for the dependents of railroad workers than the provisions in the Social Security Act provide for workers generally. The committee thought that if we extended the benefits as wanted by the men but kept it at the level of the Social Security Act that would be sufficient; and that is what we have done.

There is another thing that the railroad men who have talked to me have said they wanted. They want something to protect them if they get knocked out, disabled as a result of their work on the railroad; so there are two provisions in the committee bill. One of them has to do with disability after 10 years of service for any occupation, and the other has to do with the payment after 20 years of service for disability that prevents a man from engaging in his regular occupation.

The Crosser bill would have provided a complete departure from every other similar governmental system about which I know, being one imposed by law on private employers, and if I am in error I ask anyone to correct me. It involves this departure, that instead of paying a man disability benefits for disability, sickness or accident arising out of and within the scope of his employment, the Crosser bill provides for this payment if a man were hurt in an automobile accident or, as his been pointed out, were injured as a result of his own misconduct or violation of the law. That is the issue. We are giving the men that additional protection that they said they wanted. The committee, in its wisdom and discretion, has seen fit to go to this extent.

Let me make the one additional point that under the sections of the bill having to do with the railroad retirement system, there is no provision in the Crosser bill that is not in considerable part met by the committee bill. So why all of this talk that the committee bill is worse than nothing? I say that you can go to your districts and talk to the men there who want some action, whose representatives wrote in their paper, Labor, a statement of the fundamental essential things that they wanted and point out to them in the committee bill the provisions that are in line with what they have been seeking. According to that article, here is what they say:

The extremely modest amendments proposed by the railroad unions are very briefly, but accurately, stated:

1. Widows of railroad workers are to have pensions as a matter of right. Such a provision is to be found in practically all modern social-security legislation. Nothing revolutionary about that.

2. A minimum pension of $50 a month is fixed for low-paid railroad workers who have devoted their lives to the industry. Thousands of them are now getting pensions of less than $50 a month.

3. The totally disabled railroad workers—the man who, because of what he gave to the industry, is no longer able to hold a job in the industry—is treated somewhat more generously than at present.

4. Finally, the tax is increased so as to make the Railroad Retirement System, as well as the Railroad Unemployment Insurance System, absolutely sound. The figures in every instance are based on the advice of the most competent actuaries in this country.

These are the essential amendments. There are other slight changes, but they are not important.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal from the opponents of the Crosser bill who are now proposing the committee amendment, to the effect that the Crosser bill is not workable, to the effect, as the chairman of our committee said, the Crosser bill would undermine and do great damage to social security in this country. Those statements should be taken in light of the opinion of those who are administering and will continue to administer the Railroad Retirement Act and I think their opinion should have great weight with us in determining whether or not we should adopt the Crosser bill or the committee bill.

May I call your attention to a speech made by Mr. William J. Kennedy, Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board, which he delivered as late as May 23, 1946. This speech appears in the Appendix of the RECORD at page A3604. Mr. Kennedy in his speech discussed various problems in respect to railroad employees. He pointed out the problems of retirement, pensions, and so forth, the very matters with which we seek to deal by this legislation.

Let us see specifically what he says in respect to the Crosser bill. He stated as follows:

As I said earlier, the solution to these problems requires congressional action.

On that we all agree.

I understand that Congressman CROSSER, of Ohio, has introduced a bill which would not only take care of all the difficulties I have just enumerated, but also many other difficulties which I have had as yet no opportunity to learn much about in the short period I have held office.

I understand also that the Railroad Retirement Board is officially on record as favoring the enactment of the Crosser bill. I take this opportuity to say that I am heartily in favor of it myself, that had I been a member of the Board at the time the Board made its recommendation on this bill, I would have been very glad to join in the Board's recommendation. The bill, as I understand it, has been reported out, in a drastically amended form, by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the House itself.

That is the statement of William J. Kennedy, Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board. That is the Board that has been administering the railroad retirement legislation. That is the Board that is going to administer this bill, whether it passes in the Crosser form or in the committee form. He is giving you the opinion of real experts. He is giving you the opinion based on the experience of the Board, and I submit that this is a complete answer to all of the flagrant and frivolous criticisms that have been made here today against the Crosser bill.

I do hope that the members of the committee will give weight and consideration to the opinion of the Railroad Retirement Board as well as to the expression in support of the Crosser bill given by its chairman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, much has been said here this afternoon about all the railroad men being in favor of the Crosser bill. When the committee had its hearings, Mr. Miller, representing the trainmen, and Mr. Corbett, representing the engineers, appeared before the committee. May I not just briefly give you some idea of the statements that they made, and especially in regard to the retirement fund. Though now these organization engineers and trainmen are for the Crosser bill.

Mr. Corbett said—

have one general rule which train service employees are required to become familiar with and which they are required to follow. It is as follows: Safety is given first consideration. This statement is presented to your committee with the hope that the safety of the funds of the Railroad Retirement Act may be considered as of first consideration in its consideration of this legislation. I submit further the opinion that any proposal to gamble with the funds of the Railroad Retirement Act merits thoughtful attention and consideration.

I could give you other passages from these two men and statements that were made by them. That was the first thing in the hearings that called it to my attention, when Mr. Latimer came before the committee and said that the present retirement fund was not actuarily sound; that it would take one and one-half percent of the pay roll to make it sound.

Furthermore, Mr. Williamson, who was quoted here this afternoon, said it would take probably 4 percent. I call this to your attention because in this Crosser bill, which the committee substitute is offered for, Mr. Latimer himself proposed 76 amendments. Neither did we hear a single one of those amendments offered in committee by any of the proponents of the Crosser bill, nor did we hear of any amendments reducing the coverage under the Crosser bill, which takes in many, many, many thousands and maybe hundreds of thousands of peoples on the outside.

I say to you in all sincerity that this committee worked hard and long. Of course, some of these gentlemen who do not belong to the committee are telling what we did, as one did a few minutes ago. Ignorance is perfect bliss.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the 90 or 76 amendments—the number changes—about which the opposition talks, are a few, with a few exceptions, merely corrections in language. There are very few amendments of a substantive nature, and the talk of almost a hundred amendments is balderdash. I was responsible for some of the changes in language. It has seemed to me proper that the text of bills should be in good English. Some friend who knows my views on that subject, apparently prompted the chief lawyer of the railroads to speak slightingly of what he inferred were trivial changes. Considerable of his time was devoted to the fact that corrections of English had been made. Some of the committee opposed to the bill have spoken of having spent a great deal of time at meetings of the committee in reference to H. R. 1362. I can say that I was more constantly present at meetings concerning the bill than any other member of the committee. Moreover, since they have raised the question, I may say that I spent many hours of my time in the committee room awaiting action.

Coming now to the subject of the tax, let me call attention to the fact that it would be humanly impossible, regardless of mathematical ability, to determine upon a tax for the future that would be exactly correct—neither too high nor too low. I have talked with experts on the subjects of retirement and insurance, and they say that Mr. Latimer, who in 1937 was compelled to recommend a schedule of rates for a period of many years, was remarkably accurate in his proposals, in view of the fact that only 1½ percent additional tax is required to put the retirement fund in proper balance.

Now, as to the professional standing of Mr. Latimer, let me call attention to the fact that Mr. Latimer's entry into the Government service was due to the influence of Mr. Joseph Eastman. I am sure that every Member of Congress who knows or knows of Mr. Eastman regarded him as the outstanding authority on transportation, and his passing from this earthly scene was a serious loss to the public.

I repeat that students of the subjects of retirement and insurance regard as remarkable the fact that after 10 years the fund is within 1½ percent of being exactly in balance. In fact, some refer to Mr. Latimer's achievement as marvelous.

Actuaries employed by private concerns have heretofore felt it necessary to keep in mind profits for their employer. As a consequence, such an actuary, in order to make sure of a proper profit for his employer, naturally is disposed to propose rates that are somewhat higher than is ultimately found to be necessary.

In a statutory system, however, if we provide for a tax that is too high, then the workers who are subject to the retirement system at the time such rates are established will be paying part of the cost—all of which should be paid by those becoming subject to the retirement system in the future. If we make the rate too small, then those coming after will pay part of the cost which should be paid in full by those in service at present. It would be impossible to establish a rate for a dozen years in the future that would be absolutely accurate, but I repeat that Mr. Latimer's calculations of 10 years ago as to the amount needed today for the railroad retirement fund was almost a miracle as to accuracy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROSSER. Again let me say that if we establish unnecessarily high rates for the present, we must not forget we shall be compelling railroad workers engaged in railroading today to pay a part of the cost for benefits for persons entering the railroad service in the future. That would be wrong. It is just as bad to have rates of assessment too high as to have them too low. One and one-half percent is considered by Mr. Latimer, an outstanding authority on retirement systems, and by Mr. Booth, the actuary employed for 30 years by Travelers Insurance Co. I have also called your attention to the testimony of Mr. Williamson, actuary for the Social Security Board.

My friends, one of the committee members opposing this measure has inferred that the railroad men desire to have the cost of the railroad retirement system assumed by the Government. Nothing could be further from the fact than such a statement. The fact is this is the outstanding retirement system in the United States. The men pay one-half and the companies pay the other half of the cost of maintaining the system and the Government does not pay one penny. The railroad workers do not expect that the Government will ever pay part of the cost. They do not desire to have the Government pay any part of the cost. They are glad to pay what they now pay, 3½ percent, and they are more than pleased to pay the additional assessment necessary to pay their share of the cost of maintaining the railroad retirement system. The real aim of the opposition has not been stressed. If we adopt this monstrosity, the substitute, we shall be reducing the present railroad unemployment insurance tax, which is a fair tax. The unemployment insurance tax has been 3 percent from the beginning of the railroad unemployment insurance system in 1938. With rare exceptions, unemployment systems are maintained solely by a tax on the employer. The opposition proposes to reduce the tax from 3 to one-half of 1 percent on the ground that there is now a large unemployment insurance fund which has accumulated in recent years. During the war employment was so constant that few, if any, payments of unemployment benefits were paid. It is during prosperous times that employment insurance taxes should be levied, for when times are hard it is difficult to pay the taxes, and yet it is just when times are hard and involuntary unemployment is greatest that the need for unemployment benefits is greatest. What the opposition apparently has in mind is to relieve the railroads of 2½ percent of the pay-roll tax now paid for unemployment insurance. Two and a half percent of the pay-roll tax is what the bill proposes as the increase which both employees and the railroads deem necessary to pay the additional benefits provided by the amendments of the retirement law.

If the employers should be relieved of 2½ percent of the pay-roll tax for unemployment insurance, that 2½ percent reduction in the unemployment insurance tax would pay the 2½ percent pay-roll tax which the bill provides as the employers' contribution to pay for the increased benefits provided by the amendments of the railroad retirement law. The result of such an amendment of the bill would be to add 2½ percent to the tax to be paid, under the bill, by the employees while the railroads would not be paying into the retirement fund $1 more than they now pay.

We have heard much about collective bargaining as the proper method of determining upon the terms of the bill to be enacted by the Congress. They cite to us the amendment of the railroad retirement law in 1937. That amendment provided for the payment of the benefits which the retired workers had been receiving from the railroads under the gratuity plans which the railroads established prior to the enactment of the railroad unemployment insurance law and also provided that the railroad employees would not undertake to have enacted legislation that would change the proportion paid by the employees and employers alike to maintain the retirement system. The railroads agreed not to question, in the courts, the constitutionality of the statute. Personally, I did not approve of the agreement for several reasons. The chief inducement urged for the making of the agreement was that it would avoid the questioning of the constitutionality of the statute. I was, however, confident that the Supreme Court would hold the 1935 act constitutional and felt that it was unwise to make the agreement to which reference has been made,

The Supreme Court did hold to be constitutional the social-security law and there was absolutely no difference in principle between that law and the railroad-retirement law. The only promise made by the representatives of the employees was that they would not ask for any change in the proportion of the taxes to be paid by them and the railroads. The employees say now that they will not ask for such a change.

Mr. Chairman, as I have heretofore pointed out during the discussion of this bill, the railroads have almost always opposed reforms, notwithstanding the fact that they were greatly benefited by the operation of the same. Early in this discussion I gave a partial list of such acts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, everyone concedes that social-security legislation should not be allowed to remain static; that from time to time such legislation as we have in the Railroad Retirement Act should be adjusted and improved upon. However, I do not think the committee amendment would be a very great improvement. There is an attempt here today to convey the impression that both the Railroad Retirement Board and the brotherhoods, if you please, favor the committee amendment. Nothing could be further from the facts in the case. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], offered the argument that it would not be wise for the House to reject the recommendations of a committee. You and I know that we do that every day in the week. The fact that a committee brings in a bill is not an all-compelling reason for the House to accept it. There is nothing sacrosanct about the recommendations of a committee, as we witnessed right here today when the House by an overwhelming vote rejected entirely a bill which was brought to the floor of the House by a committee. That happened today. There is no argument at all to say that the recommendations of a committee are the wise ones.

Mr. CROSSER's name is on this bill. There is a great deal of confusion as to what we should vote for if we are desirous of achieving certain objectives. Let me say with regard to those who attempt to convey the impression that what the brotherhoods' objectives are embodied in the committee amendment, last week a committee of 3 representing 21 brotherhoods in my State of Pennsylvania came to me and said emphatically that they, representing their bodies, were authorized to say the brotherhoods were wholeheartedly in favor of the Crosser bill and the amendments which he would propose to that. The parliamentary situation, if we wish to consider the Crosser bill, must be brought about through the defeat of the committee amendment.

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio who has labored long and arduously on behalf of the railroad employees of this country has several amendments he proposes to offer to his original bill. They are not applicable to the bill the committee seeks to substitute if they are successful in striking out all after the enacting clause. To be able to give consideration to his amendments we must go back to a situation where his bill will be before the Committee of the Whole. To do that we must vote down the committee amendment. I hope the Members will vote down the committee amendment so we can consider the Crosser bill and that it will then be in order for any amendments that even the committee wishes to present.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. CROSSER. I propose to offer amendments to my own bill, one to remove this entire maternity coverage; and others.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman cannot do that unless his bill can be brought before the Committee of the Whole for amendment. To do that we will have to vote down the present committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT FUND

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, is the Railroad Retirement System what railroad employees have been told and believe it to be?

Is the manner of financing it sound?

Do railroad employees have a real reserve, in the form of a trust fund, in the United States Treasury?

Is the Railroad Retirement System an independent service separate from the so-called social-security plan?

The politicians in control of the Government since the passage of the Railroad Retirement Act have assured railroad employees that they have a genuine retirement plan, soundly financed in every way, amply supported by a well-guarded and administered trust fund, and that it is set up independently of the so-called social-security or other Federal retirement plan.

The Railroad Retirement Board, in its annual reports, paints a glowing picture for railroad employees. It presents elaborate tables and charts to show employee annuities, pensions, and survivor benefits currently disbursed and accruing for future payments.

On the surface the plan has a good appearance. The trouble is, railroad employees do not get the whole picture, and what is given them is greatly distorted. I think it is high time that the mask be torn from this so-called railroad-retirement plan so that the railroad employees may know just what it really is.

The fact is that when this plan is carefully examined it will be seen that it is more particularly a scheme to tax railroad employees and employers to pay Government operating costs than a retirement plan. This will no doubt come as a surprise to most railroad employees and may be difficult for some of them to believe. Nevertheless, from my study of this subject I am convinced that this is a fact. How any unbiased and disinterested person can really think this subject through and come to any other conclusion is difficult to conceive.

From the time the railroad-retirement plan went into effect in 1937 through March 1946 the Government collected from railroad employees and railroad companies taxes for the retirement account amounting to $1,742,500,000. During this time it collected from the general public, of which railroad employees form a part, and therefore must help to pay hidden in the prices they pay for the necessaries of life, taxes for the "interest" on their so-called trust fund amounting to $43,800,000. A total of $1,786,272,000.

Of this amount, $1,064,500,000, or approximately 59 percent, went for current benefits; $642,000,000, or approximately 36 percent, remained in the Treasury and was spent for general Government operating purposes; $24,672,000, which equals about 2.3 percent of the benefit payments, was used for administrative expenses. The balance, $55,200,000, remains in the General Fund and disbursing officers' account.

Railroad employees are told by the politicians in Washington that this $642,000,000 is a reserve, that they, acting as trustee for the railroad employees, hold it as a trust fund, and that it draws 3 percent compound interest. They are also told that this reserve is available at all times in the future to be drawn upon as need arises.

As a matter of fact, railroad employees have no such trust fund in the Treasury. Virtually all they have to show for this $642,000,000 is an I O U which appears on the books of the Treasury as a credit for Government securities.

Railroad employees have been given the impression that after they have been taxed 3½ percent of their wages—the amount was less to start with—that they were through contributing to their retirement plan. In this they are mistaken. They must continue to pay and pay and pay. Furthermore, they do not realize that they are being heavily taxed to pay for so-called social security old-age and survivors' insurance and civil-service annuities. But more on this subject later.

For the moment, it is important for the railroad employees to realize that they have irretrievably lost a large part, perhaps most, of this $642,000,000. They will receive what is called interest on this amount, a part of which, as just stated, they themselves will have to pay. But the principal involved has been spent by the Government, permanently sunk into political ventures of one kind or another.

Designating this $642,000,000 a reserve has given railroad employees a grossly false impression. Many of them have been led to believe that this so-called reserve actually composes the money they and their employers paid into the account. They do not know that this money has been used up to pay Government expenses. Very few realize that since this money has been so spent that the general tax which must be levied upon the public to replace any portion of the $642,000,000 that might be needed to meet benefit payments, will partly fall upon their own shoulders. They have no realization whatever that they will be compelled to pay twice for a goodly portion of any retirement benefits they will ultimately receive. This point will be developed more fully later. For the moment it is necessary to understand that this $642,000,000 is not a true reserve.

It is a political and not an economic concept to regard the taxes collected from railroad employees and the carriers which are paid into the Treasury and disbursed by it for operating the Government as a trust fund. There is nothing about the transaction which has any of the characteristics of what has commonly been considered a trust fund.

Black's Law Dictionary defines a trust fund as follows:

> A fund held by a trustee for the specific purpose of the trust; in a more general sense, a fund which, legally or equitably, is subject to be devoted to a particular purpose and cannot or should not be diverted therefrom.

Certainly railroad retirement taxes which the Government appropriates to its own use cannot even be said to be held by it, much less held by it as trustee for any specific purpose. The specific purpose for which the politicians in control of the Government are supposed to hold these funds, and for which railroad employees believe they are held, is retirement benefits, assuredly not to pay operating expenses of the Government.

Funk & Wagnall's Standard Dictionary defines the term "investment" as "the act of investing capital productively, also the money so invested, or the property so produced."

It would be the height of absurdity to pretend that this money is productively invested, in any commonly accepted sense of the term as it is used in connection with trust funds. This money is spent for political or other nonproductive purposes, and in a vast number of cases of the most destructive kind.

Here is what really happens: The administration in charge of the Government taxes railroad employees and employers, ostensibly to provide such employees with a retirement system. As a part of the scheme it pretends to invest that portion of such taxes not used to pay administrative costs and to meet current benefit payments in a trust fund.

But the administration spends this money to pay general debts incurred in the operation of various governmental functions. It simply uses the money to wipe out a certain amount of current general public indebtedness and creates in its place a like amount of long-term special public indebtedness.

Instead of taxing the general public to pay $642,000,000 of current operating debts the administration in charge of the Government taxes a special group, railroad employees and employers, to pay such debts.

In the guise of providing a retirement system for railroad employees the forces in control of the Government tapped a new source of revenue to provide them with more spending money.

Without the Railroad Retirement Act the administration would have been compelled to either reduce the general operating costs of the Government by $642,000,000, a dire necessity, or tax the general public for this amount.

With this act they have been relieved of that difficulty. They just "borrowed" possibly, in perpetuity, from railroad employees $642,000,000 with which to pay off an equal amount of current general public indebtedness. But whether to the end of time or not the net effect upon the pocketbooks of railroad employees would eventually be the same.

It is crazy to talk about this being a trust fund. It is nothing of the sort in any sense of the term. Who ever heard of a trust fund where the trustee was permitted, even authorized, to spend all of the capital placed in his custody to discharge the fund's operating debts, yet paid interest on such outlay?

The all-important consideration in placing one's money in a trust fund is the safety of the principal. A trust fund that swallows up the money entrusted to its care, like the Government swallows up the taxes which it collects from railroad employees and employers, just is no trust fund.

Nor is a trust fund such in reality unless the capital entrusted to it is put to productive use. That is the sine qua non, the thing absolutely necessary to make it a trust fund.

It is the rule rather than the exception for government debt to be wealth destroying. That is why it should be prohibited as much as possible. This is basic to the preservation and maintenance of a sound social and economic body; that is, a free economy.

It cannot be too much impressed upon wage earners and the lower income groups in general that they are the ones who always feel most the evil effects of extravagant governments.

Overspending by governments always leads to currency disorders, than which there is no greater curse upon the working people and poor. Later I shall show how this is destroying the value of the railroad men's pension dollar.

When one purchases an endowment policy from a life-insurance company the premiums one pays in go into productive enterprise. They are used to produce tangible wealth. The public benefits by the newly created wealth, the company receives compensation for its service in putting the premiums paid in to work, and the holder of the policy receives compensation in the form of dividends for the use of his money. Thus we see all parties concerned benefit by the transaction.

The premiums, capital, paid on an endowment policy are always safe and can be recovered by the policyholder, if the insurance company is sound and solvent. Here are embodied the principles of a true trust fund.

But not so with the money paid into the Railroad Retirement Account. No new wealth whatever is created. In fact, this money is in the first instance in large measure taken out of productive enterprise and then put into wholly unproductive Government projects. This point is vital.

I cannot conceive any justification for ever taking capital out of productivity and putting it into unproductivity. Yet, that is precisely what is done when the Government taxes railroad employees and employers in the guise of providing a pension system, and uses such tax receipts to pay its operating costs.

It may be thought that this is applicable to all taxes, which is not true. It is applicable only to those taxes which are exacted from the people to maintain a surplusage of Government. Taxes to maintain the necessary forces to protect us from external aggression, to adequately preserve order and provide justice internally cannot be said to be taken out of productive use and put into unproductive use. But the taxes imposed to maintain a Federal bureaucracy with millions of employees, and to provide the enormous amount of political pork that is annually dispensed, are taken out of productivity and put to unproductive use, and with respect to a great portion of governmental activities to the most destructive kind of use.

Certainly one of the major elements of the underlying disease which afflicts the Nation today is that capital has so largely been taken out of productive use and put to political use, that is unproductive and destructive use. I am not necessarily referring to the use to which capital has been and is being put in the production of war materials and the maintenance of military forces, though this has recently been playing the dominant role in diverting capital from productive to nonproductive use. The political process of abstracting capital from productive use and applying it to nonproductive governmental projects has been insidiously developing for many years. One of the outstanding developments in this respect was the institution in 1916 of the graduated income tax. This has been a most powerful cause in destroying capital formation, to the detriment of the Nation as a whole, though perhaps falling most heavily upon the laboring classes and the poor.

We mentioned that railroad employees must bear a portion of the interest charge on their so-called trust fund. This is comparatively small, but the aggregate over the years will amount to a substantial sum. This will be appreciated more fully later as we consider the size this account is ultimately expected to reach.

But this is, as already stated, not the only tax railroad employees will be compelled to pay in addition to their 3½ percent contribution.

Railroad employees have prided themselves on having their own retirement system, separate from and independent of the Social Security or any other Federal retirement plan. But the distinction they make is a superficial one. They have their own agency, the Railroad Retirement Board, to administer their benefits, but that is all.

What really counts is the financial structure of the plan, and who manages the financing. When these features of the scheme are examined it will be seen that the Railroad Retirement Plan rests on substantially the same basis as the social security and civil service retirement plans.

The management of the finances of all three is in the hands of the politicians who happen to be in the control of the Government.

All the taxes which the Government collects under these plans go into a common pool along with all other Federal taxes, namely, the General Fund of the Treasury.

Like the taxes collected for railroad retirement benefits, all the taxes collected for social security and Federal civil service retirement benefits, except those required for administrative costs and current benefit payments, are spent by the Government for general operating purposes, and there is nothing to show for these contributions but I O U's.

Just as railroad employees are told that they have a reserve in the form of a trust fund in the Treasury which draws interest and can be resorted to at any time in the future to provide retirement and other benefits, so persons coming under the so-called social-security old-age and survivors insurance and the civil service annuity plans are told the same thing.

As in the case of railroad employees who are assured that a tax of 3 percent compound interest on their so-called reserve or trust fund will be levied upon the public to build it up, so also those coming under these other plans have a like assurance.

In the case of social security, the tax would be equal to more than 2 percent compound interest, and in that of the civil service annuity plan 4 percent compound interest, on the respective amounts of funds paid into these accounts.

The point here is that railroad employees are not only being taxed, through hidden taxes added to the necessaries of life, to help pay the interest on their own false trust fund, but they are also being taxed in the same way to help pay the interest on the illusory trust funds held by the Treasury for employees covered under social-security and the Federal civil-service retirement plans. They are further being taxed, in the form of hidden taxes on the necessaries of life they buy, to provide the contributions made by their own employers and those coming under social security. And they are being taxed to pay the 8-percent contribution which the Government makes toward the civil-service retirement plan.

Thus, we see that all of these plans are but parts of a whole. It is through the payment of consumer taxes by the public that employers coming under the Railroad Retirement and Social Security Acts are provided with the funds to make their contributions to the retirement plans provided by such acts. This feature alone strongly identifies these plans with each other.

To understand the railroad retirement system it is necessary to study it in connection with the social-security plan and also the Federal civil-service retirement system.

We stated that railroad employees have nothing to show for the $642,000,000 which they and their employers paid into the Treasury and which was used to pay Government expenses but an I O U; that is, a credit on the books of the Treasury for $642,000,000 of Government securities. Now it is claimed this credit is a true reserve, that it can be converted into cash at any time by actually issuing the securities and selling them to investors. That is, the Government could levy a general tax upon the public to raise the cash to replenish the railroad retirement account, because selling to investors the securities held against the $642,000,000 is, as previously stated, only deferred taxation.

This raises the important question as to who composes the public. Just who are the folks that will have to pay the taxes to replenish the spent funds of the railroad retirement, social security old age, and unemployment and civil service annuity accounts when it becomes necessary to restore the funds to such accounts to meet required benefit payments? But before answering this question let us be sure that we have a clear understanding as to just how the several beneficiary groups coming under these plans provide the taxes which the employers pay into these retirement accounts and also the so-called interest which the public pays on these accounts.

It is very important that railroad employees fully understand that the taxes which railroad companies contribute to their retirement account are not really paid by them. Those taxes are shifted on to shippers and others who use their services. In turn they are passed on to distributors, wholesalers, retailers, and so forth, and finally charged to the consuming public.

The same is true, of course, with respect to the taxes paid into the social-security account by producers of raw materials, manufacturers, and the several handlers involved in getting finished products to their ultimate destination where the consumer finally takes over the tax load. That these taxes are ultimately paid by the consuming public is not theory but obvious fact.

The dollars which railroad employees and the employees coming under social security and Federal civil service pay out for the necessaries of life, food, clothing, shelter, heating, lighting, telephone service, automobiles, and so forth, contain, hidden from the eye, taxes which railroad employers pay into the railroad retirement account, and which employers in manufacturing, processing, utility, and other plants pay into the social-security account. Some but not all of the taxes paid into the Federal civil-service annuity account are provided through consumer taxes.

There are about 1,500,000 railroad employees covered under the Railroad Retirement Act, and 40,000,000 fully covered and a great many more partially covered under the so-called Social Security Act. It will be seen that these groups form a large part of the taxpaying public.

It is unnecessary to speculate on the relative amount of consumer taxes these groups pay. But the proportion is so great as to make it practically impossible for railroad employees over the years to receive in the form of retirement and other benefits as much, or perhaps nearly as much, as they originally paid in.

Under the Railroad Retirement Act, employers and employees each have been paying into the retirement account from 2¾ to 3½ percent of the pay roll. Employers have been paying into the unemployment fund 3 percent of the pay roll. Employees do not contribute to the unemployment fund.

Under the Social Security Act, employers and employees each pay into the old-age and survivors' insurance fund 1 percent of the pay roll. Employers pay into the unemployment fund 3 percent of the pay roll. Employees do not contribute to the unemployment fund.

Under the Federal Civil Service Retirement Act, the Government—taxpayers—which means you, now contributes approximately 8 percent of the Federal pay roll to the civil-service retirement fund, while the employees contribute only 5 percent. Civil-service employees have no unemployment fund.

To what extent have railroad employees, as well as those covered under so-called Social Security and the Federal Civil Service Retirement System, already been bound by the Government to pay twice for the retirement and other benefits promised them, or been obligated to pay considerably more than they have been led to believe was their only contribution?

How much taxes has the Government collected from these groups for such benefits, but spent on itself? How much in I. O. U's has the Government exchanged for this cash? Following are some revealing figures and were as of March 31, 1946:

So-called trust funds held by the Treasury
Railroad retirement trust fund	$642,000,000
Federal old-age and survivors' insurance	7,224,400,000
Unemployment trust funds (includes railroad unemployment fund, Federal and State unemployment funds under Social Security Act)	7,378,200,000
Federal civil-service retirement fund	2,159,900,000
Total	17,404,400,000

Railroad employees and their employers, industrial workers coming under social security and their employers, Federal employees and the Government—taxpayers—have already paid around $17,400,000,000 in taxes for retirement and other benefits which the Government has spent for other purposes.

The employees who contributed a large part of this sum, and for whose benefit the remainder was contributed, have nothing but I O U's from the Government to show that this money has been handed over to it.

The Government must this year collect taxes from the public in an amount equal to approximately 2.3 percent of $17,400,000,000 or more than $400,000,000. Railroad employees will have to pay their share of this in the form of hidden taxes.

But we are only at the beginning of the program. How much more will the employees and employers coming under the several Federal Government retirement plans have to hand over to the Government to finance its operating costs?

Railroad employees and employers have already directly paid taxes to the Government which it has spent for operating purposes amounting to $642,000,000—minus $43,000,000 which was collected from the public and paid into the account as interest. It is my understanding that the present Railroad Retirement System is insolvent. I also have information that the System would be insolvent if the Crosser amendments were passed.

Suppose the committee amendments should pass. The railroad employees and employers would each have to pay 2½ percent more than they are now contributing. According to the actuarial studies made in connection with the committee bill, with this increased cost of 5 percent for employees and employers combined, the railroad retirement account would ultimately reach a figure of between $10,000,000,000 and $15,000,000,000!

Railroad employees would be bound to pay in direct and hidden taxes more than half of this $10,000,000,000 to $15,000,000,000 to the Government which would be spent by it for operating purposes. In any event railroad employees would accumulate a total of I O U's amounting to between $10,000,000,000 and $15,000,000,000.

The Social Security Board in its actuarial study No. 19 estimates the amount of social-security taxes that may be required to keep this account solvent will ultimately reach a figure of $92,000,000,000. Workers coming under social security would finally have an accumulation of I O U's amounting to the above figure because the Government will have spent the money for operating purposes.

It is my understanding that the so-called civil-service trust fund will reach a figure of approximately $5,000,000,000 before it begins to level off. Civil-service employees will then have an I O U to that amount because here again the Government will have spent this money on itself.

It will be noted that civil-service employees have a great advantage over railroad employees and those coming under social security because the Government's—taxpayers'—share of this is so much greater than that of the civil-service employees. The Government pays 8 percent while employees pay only 5.

Then there is the so-called unemployment trust fund composing the railroad unemployment insurance account and the State unemployment insurance activities account, which amounts to roundly $7,500,000,000. No one can know how much higher this debt will go.

Here, then, we have projected a total of, say, $120,000,000,000 of Federal debt which is to serve as a financial foundation for the Railroad Retirement System, social-security and old-age-survivors' insurance, and civil-service annuity plans.

Security for aged railroad employees resting upon a $120,000,000,000 nonproducing debt.

With all deference to the thinking of those who contrived this scheme, to me it appears so fantastic and irrational that I cannot conceive how it was possible that it ever saw the light of day. The only security a public debt such as this could possibly provide would be political security.

To be sure the argument runs that the Government merely borrows these funds from railroad employees and other employees coming under these retirement plans, that if it did not borrow from such employees it would be compelled to borrow from the general public. So we are told that the indebtedness of the Government would be the same in either event.

This is, of course, a specious argument and can come only from an unwise and improvident personnel in control of the Government, from one that is forever running the Government into debt. The very idea of deliberately planning to create a public debt of $120,000,000,000 in and of itself conclusively proves this, in my judgment.

It should be borne in mind that the war had nothing to do with the planning of this debt. It was planned when the railroad retirement and social security plans were set up, which was years before the war.

A frugal and judicious government would know that a large public debt, regardless of the purpose for which it might be created, can never be a benefit to a nation as a whole or to a substantial portion of the community like that composing the groups coming under the several retirement plans here under consideration. Such a government would be aware that a large public debt is always a menace to the general welfare and would strenuously discountenance its creation.

Of course, those railroad employees who happen to be old enough to retire and to exercise their pension rights during the earlier part of this retirement plan will seemingly fare pretty well. This aspect of the plan is very deceptive. The impression is given that future benefits will be the same as they are now. This is altogether out of the question. As time goes on the net returns to retired railroad employees must necessarily continuously diminish.

Even those who are already on the retired list are not as well off as it might appear. They are finding it difficult to make ends meet with the income they derive from the retirement system. The cost of living is constantly rising. The dollars which were paid into the retirement plan have since the start of it been steadily losing in value or purchasing power. The tax dollar collected from railroad employees for the retirement fund during the first few years after the plan was put into operation will purchase no more than 60 cents worth of what they did then.

This loss of purchasing power of the dollar will obviously have an important bearing upon future retirement benefits. How long the dollar will continue to lose in buying power before it becomes stabilized, there is no way of telling. Present indications are that this can continue for many years. This will strongly operate to further reduce the net benefits accruing to railroad employees under their so-called retirement system.

We should pause here for a moment to meditate on why the dollar is losing its purchasing power. We need not go into details. The steady loss of purchasing power which the dollar is undergoing is directly caused by the Government's policy of financing Government deficits with printing-press money. The banks alone hold more than $100,000,000,000 of this printing-press money. There is very much more than this in existence. It is this enormous volume of Government printing-press money which really constitutes inflation. Rising prices are but a symptom of inflation. This ought to explain why some Members of Congress have worked so strenuously to stop deficit financing and make the men in control of the Government live within the income they derive from taxes. Here is to be found the reason why those men in Congress believe they are on the side of the working people and poor—when they insist upon economy in Government spending.

After all the financial structure of the Railroad Retirement System can be no sounder than that of the Government itself. Inevitably, also, the finances of the Government can be no sounder than the dollar. Printing-press dollars are not sound dollars.

It would be unfair on my part as Representative to Congress not to mention that farmers, self-employed, and others not covered by any of these Federal retirement systems, help to pay in the form of consumer taxes the contributions which railroad and other employees pay into the accounts of such plans. They must likewise also help to pay the so-called interest on the several so-called retirement funds.

Why should these citizens who derive no return whatsoever from these plans be compelled to support them in this manner? I am sure that railroad employees do not wish this. Few, if any, of them even know that this is taking place. Such an injustice as this cannot be condoned by any fair-minded and honest person. Only corrupt politics can forgive such a fault as this. But even with this help railroad employees still stand to become heavy losers.

Railroad employees have no trust fund in the Treasury. The $642,000,000 which went into what is called a trust fund has been spent by the politicians to pay operating expenses of the Government and replaced by I O U's. The ten to fifteen billion dollars which would be paid into this account, mostly by railroad employees and employers, as provided in the committee amendment, would also be used to pay operating costs of the Government and replaced by I O U's. As heretofore shown, this fund can only be replenished by taxing railroad employees twice. Railroad employees can never hope to get back as much as they paid in. The railroad retirement system is essentially a scheme to provide more taxes for Government spending.

I wish railroad employees to understand that it is not with any pleasure that I have made this analysis of their retirement system and arrived at the conclusion herein set forth. But being in a position where I am compelled to stand up and be counted, no choice has been left to me but to tell the truth as I see it so that railroad employees may understand my vote on this measure, H. R. 1362.

In view of my understanding of the operations of the railroad-retirement system, I cannot possibly vote to force railroad employees to pay any additional taxes into their so-called retirement account, as this bill provides, because this additional contribution would be sunk into public debt in the manner heretofore indicated with inevitable loss to future beneficiaries. In the interest of the aged railroad employees themselves, and the public in general, I am conscience-bound to withhold my approval of this measure.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The gentleman made reference to security to the politicians. There is no security to the politicians. Everywhere they have had a totalitarian government, sooner or later they liquidated their friends.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Let me speak for a moment in relation to a matter that has been discussed by the able and always persuasive gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]. He stated, in effect, that there is no governmental system under which an employee can receive compensation for a disability that is not service-connected.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to correct a misstatement: "or a certain minimum length of time had first been served." That was also in the gentleman's statement.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, the addition suggested by the gentleman from Ohio will neither diminish nor increase the effect, if any, of what I purpose to say.

By way of refutation of the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, attention is invited to section 710 of the Federal Civil Service Retirement Act, which provides for the payment of a disability annuity, "after 5 years of service," to a Federal employee who becomes totally disabled for useful and efficient service in the grade or class of position occupied by him, "by reason of disease or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on his part." This section contains a proviso to the effect that proof of freedom from such vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct for a period of more than 5 years next prior to becoming so disabled for useful and efficient service shall not be required.

But the system of benefits involved in the debate which is in progress is wholly free from governmental cost; it is financed entirely by railroad employers and railroad employees.

And what are the relevant facts concerning the payment of disability benefits under private pension plans now in operation throughout the country? Volume 1 of Industrial Pension Systems, published in 1932 by the Industrial Relations Counselors, New York, sets forth the results of a study of over 300 retirement pension plans. It is shown that 235 of these plans, which are sponsored by 44 railroads, 43 public utilities, 108 manufacturing establishments, 28 banking and insurance companies, and 14 other concerns all provide for the payment of retirement pensions for disability. It appears that under many of these plans there are no age requirements and in others that the age requirements range from 50 to 65 years. The service requirements range from 1 to more than 10 years.

It is further shown that only one of the 235 plans requires that the disability for which the pension is paid shall result from an accident in line of duty; and only 7 of the plans require that the disability result from incapacity incurred in line of duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia be permitted to proceed for one additional minute in order that he may yield to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEELY. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I thank the gentleman for calling this matter to the attention of the Committee. May I say to him that my statements in regard to this proposition and the solicitation of opinion about it were made in good faith, and I think correctly. If the gentleman will recall what I said, I had reference to governmental planning, not private planning. I recognize, of course, that many such private systems, agreements between management and men, undoubtedly have been worked out, but that does not follow the pattern here, where by governmental action we impose on the employer a burden to which he does not voluntarily assent. The civil-service provision, of course, is a situation under which the Government stands in the position of the employer. As the gentleman has pointed out, it more nearly approximates the situation of the private plans about which he has talked than, say, the social-security plan, which by governmental action imposes on employers a burden to provide benefits for employees. I thank the gentleman for calling this matter to the attention of the Committee in order that a more thorough understanding may be had of it.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, please let me assure the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, his good faith was never doubted.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. The figures the gentleman has been giving us come from what document or book?

Mr. NEELY. My first reference was to section 710 of the Federal Civil Service Retirement Act. The second was to volume 1 of Industrial Pension Systems, published in 1932 by Industrial Relations Counselors, New York. The data to which attention has been invited may be found at pages 493 to 497, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has again expired.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of an increase in railroad-retirement benefits as proposed by the two measures on the subject that are receiving consideration by the House.

In my congressional district we have thousands of retired railroad employees who in normal times did not receive a sufficient pension or annuity to meet the cost of living. At the present time, due to inflated prices, these retired employees are actually in want. Many are faced with seeking employment or depending upon charity to secure the necessities of life.

Many retired railroad employees are suffering from disabilities that are not covered under the existing Railroad Retirement Act. These employees are not eligible for pension or annuity benefits, and in a spirit of justice and fair play the present law should be amended to cover these cases.

I am sincere in my desire that the existing Railroad Retirement Act be amended so that benefits may be liberalized, as I feel they are inadequate in view of the increasing cost of living. As evidence of my interest in the increase of pension and annuity payments, I was among the 218 Members who signed the discharge petition to bring railroad-retirement legislation to the floor before the Seventy-ninth Congress adjourns. Therefore, it is my earnest hope that we will approve liberal changes in the present law as the plight of retired railroad employees demands positive action and abandoning mere lip service and pious expressions.

Mr. PRICE of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Crosser amendment because of my personal knowledge of the working conditions of railroad employees.

At the time of my birth my father was an employee of a railroad and continued with them for about 20 years. As a small boy, and during the time I attended high school, I was well aware of the inadequacy of the pay as well as other conditions, by no means favorable, under which my father worked. In addition to my father's connection with the railroad, two of my uncles who lived in our home also worked with railroads and at different times two of my brothers were so employed. At present, one of my brothers is working for a railroad and has been so employed for about 30 years.

I also have a personal knowledge of the subject before us, for when I was about 15 years of age, during summer vacation from high school, I was employed by a railroad. I worked in the storeroom of a railroad shop as delivery boy, at the handsome wage of 12½ cents per hour, 10 hours per day, 6 days per week. The work I was called upon to perform would have caused a draft horse to balk.

When I finished high school, I secured what I thought was a real position in a railway yard office. On this job I worked 8 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year, and in leap year, for good measure, 366 days. I earned $133 per month, and straight time was paid for overtime, but I earned no overtime unless I doubled, which meant a 16-hour day. Of course, any time I took off was deducted from my pay. At that time no retirement benefits were provided for railroad employees, and no provisions were made for employees who became ill.

When I had been employed on this job for about 2 years, the case of a fellow employee caused me to stop and think. He had been with the company for about 25 years and received the same salary I did. He became ill and was forced to take time off. This time was deducted from his pay, and as he had a family to support, he began working when he should have been home in bed. After a few months he died. I decided to look for another job and in a few months left the employment of the railroad.

We all know that the working conditions of railroad employees have improved during the last few years, but there is still room for much improvement. The railroads now have a so-called retirement plan, but those who are really familiar with its provisions will tell you that it is no better than social security. Most railroads now give their employees a week's vacation, and some give even 2 weeks to employees who have been with the company for as long as 5 years. At the age of 65, employees are allowed to retire, provided they have 30 years' service.

I feel sure you will agree with me that a man who has worked for 30 years under the conditions I have just described to you is entitled to retirement regardless of age. I have known many men who have reached 65 years of age and completed 30 years of service and retired, but I can vouch for the fact that only a very few lived for more than 2 or 3 years after retiring. Why compel a man to work until he is practically dead before allowing him to receive the benefits for which he has toiled so long and for which he actually has paid his hard-earned money?

The employees of all the railroads in America deserve a rising vote of thanks from the entire population of the United States for the wonderful contribution they made to the war effort. These men and women actually performed miracles in the vital field of transportation at a time when they could easily have changed employment and increased their compensation, in many instances, twofold. Therefore, I am convinced that Congress owes this group of loyal citizens a fair and decent retirement program. I hope the Members of the House will show their appreciation by voting for the Crosser amendment and thus bestow upon the employees of the railroads of America a "well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of attention to the remarks of my distinguished colleague the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] and I regret that he did not have more time to explain some of the retirement systems in force and referred to in the documents from which he quoted during his remarks just a few moments ago.

I believe that the present railroad retirement legislation should be improved and perfected. In my opinion the Crosser amendment will serve that purpose. It has had careful study by the railroad employees. After all, the employees probably know more about the provisions of existing law, and the needed amendments, than anybody else. The Crosser amendment meets the situation so far as giving adequate protection to employees and dependents is concerned.

From time to time I get letters from employees who have been retired under existing law or from their survivors. They certainly point out the defects under the law as it now stands and in my opinion the Crosser bill about which they have written me takes care of many of these hardship cases.

When employees become disabled by reason of sickness or from other causes, they should become eligible for something in the way of retirement benefits. The railroad men know this and they want the law changed to accomplish that purpose.

Then they are very much concerned about the wife if either death or disability should come to them. They feel that the law should meet such a situation. I agree with them in that conclusion and I hope that the Crosser amendment prevails.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer sundry amendments to the committee substitute correcting typographical errors.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. BULWINKLE:

Page 70, line 23, strike out "or" and insert "and."

Page 99, strike out lines 23, 24, and 25, and insert in lieu thereof the following indented paragraph:

"(3) By striking out the words 'this subchapter' and 'This subchapter' wherever they appear in such subchapter and by inserting in lieu thereof 'this part' and 'This part', respectively."

Page 102, line 19, strike out the period which appears after the word "part" and insert in lieu thereof a comma.

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to section 1 of the committee amendment?

Are there any amendments to be offered to section 2 of the committee amendment?

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HINSHAW: On page 67, strike out lines 6 to 15 inclusive and insert:

"2. Individuals who, on or after January 1, 1947, shall be 60 years of age or over and have completed 30 years of service."

Renumber succeeding paragraphs in quotes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of offering this amendment is to bring the bill closer in line with what the railroad workers themselves actually want, and in line with the provision that is made in the bill for women railroad workers. As you will note, the women are treated differently than the men. They are entitled to retire at the age of 60 years if they have completed 30 years of service, whereas the men shall be 65 years of age, and if they retire earlier than that and after the age of 60, the retirement annuity which they will receive shall be reduced by one one-hundred and eightieth for each calendar month such individual is under the age of 65 when the annuity begins to accrue. It is interesting and important to note that at age 60 a woman has a 10-year longer life expectancy than a man, and hence her annuity will cost more than a man's.

This is very complicated. I should like to have seen the committee have time enough to obtain an actuarial report on various combinations of facts in connection with this legislation.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] was very eager to have the bill brought to the House. The funds of the committee were not adequate for a full and complete actuarial study. Consequently, several of us who wanted to find out what these things might cost the men and roads were unable to obtain those reports and bring them to the floor of the House.

Actually the men in the railroad service are interested in very, very few things for themselves, according to my observation and from my talking with a great many of them, in fact several hundreds of them in meetings. The thing they are most interested in is adequate retirement plan at the proper age, that is thoroughly well financed; that is actuarially sound and solvent and that will permit them to retire after some reasonable number of years of service. If it were possible to do so, I should like to see a differential made at least in favor of the operating employees, those men who are out in all kinds of weather, trainmen, locomotive engineers, firemen, conductors, and the ground personnel. They really take it on the chin in all kinds of weather and they get to be old men, even though they are active, long before their time. In the late war, men returned to the service, called to help Uncle Sam in this war, and worked even at 72 and 74 years of age and occasionally older. They did a wonderful job, but I want to tell you this, that seniority is very important to the railroad workers, for it is the older men who get the faster runs and better schedules; and it is those men who should be permitted to retire at an earlier age in order that the public who use the roads may live longer and ride in greater safety and that these people who serve the public in the cabs of the engines and on the trains may have a chance to retire and live to a ripe old age.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Has the gentleman estimated the cost of this?

Mr. HINSHAW. I just stated that I had not estimated the cost. As a matter of fact we do not have a complete actuarial study of the various propositions.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I may say to the gentleman that it will run between eighty and a hundred and twenty millions.

Mr. HINSHAW. I do not know; the gentleman may be correct. We did not have any definite actuarial figures. It is quite possible that I should not offer this amendment, but I wanted to do so in order to indicate to the Committee that what the men who work on the railroads themselves really want is not the Crosser bill, it is something like this amendment I have proposed.

Mr. BULWINKLE. If the gentleman will yield further, it will cost between 2 and 3 percent of the pay roll.

Mr. HINSHAW. Possibly so, but the men say they are willing to pay whatever is necessary to finance such a plan.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the gentleman from California, my colleague, that I offered a similar amendment in the committee which was to be taken up at a later date. I am certainly very glad to support the gentleman's amendment, because it is not a compulsory retirement but a voluntary retirement to those who feel they are not qualified to serve longer.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is right; and the amendment was opposed in the Committee by those who supported the Crosser bill.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. RIZLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman as a member of the committee who has studied both bills, whether the rate provided in the bills together with the additional benefits that are conferred in both bills is sufficient to take care of this fund without creating shortages.

Mr. HINSHAW. I believe the rates are inadequate in the Crosser bill. I know they are intended to be adequate in the committee bill. If there is one thing the men insist upon, it is that their retirement system be financially sound so that their annuities can be paid without question when they retire. At present the system is declared insolvent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'HARA: Page 71, line 17, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 3. Section 3 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3 (a). The annuity shall be computed by multiplying the individual's years of service by the following percentages of his monthly compensation; 2 per centum of the first $100, 1½ per centum of the next $100, and 1 per centum of the next $100.'"

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, I have submitted this amendment to provide some slightly higher retirement annuity benefits for railroad employees who have averaged wages of more than $50 per month, minimum annuity benefits for the employee with a current connection with the railroad industry which provided for railroad employees with average wages of $50 per month or less under section 210, page 23, of the Crosser bill, also at page 72 of the committee bill.

The amendment which I have offered proposes certain annuity benefits for the employee whose average wages may be in excess of $50 per month. Under the present Railroad Retirement Act and under the provisions of H. R. 1362, the formula for providing annuity benefits, as you will note, is based and computed by multiplying an individual's years of service by the following percentages of his monthly compensation: Two percent of the first $50, 1½ percent of the next $100, and 1 percent of the next $150.

The amendment which I have submitted merely extends the present 2 percent to $100 in average wages, instead of the first $50 of average wages; extends the 1½ percent provision for the next $100; and provides for the present 1 percent on the next $100 of average wages, instead of the present last $150 of average wages.

I believe that there must be some proper recognition given the increased cost of living conditions and the fact that those increased living costs apply to the retired employees as well as to the employee who continues in his regular employment and at wages which are considerably more than would be provided him if he is to retire.

There also appears the need to increase the annuity benefits—as proposed in this amendment—in order to lessen the differential between the income received by the employee while he is in service and the amount of annuity benefits he may expect to receive on retirement so that he may retire as promptly as possible when his retirement age arrives and provide opportunities for the younger employees to secure promotion or advancement in their positions.

For example, the employee who has worked up to a position in which he receives some $200 per month might hesitate at this time to retire when he becomes 65 years of age if he is to receive benefits of but $90 per month but would probably be more inclined to retire promptly at the age of 65—if he might receive at least one-half as much in retirement benefits as he would receive in wages.

This amendment would increase the annuity benefits of the employees approximately 10 percent, on those whose wages were $80 per month, or more.

May I say to the membership of the House that no one can tell exactly what this amendment will cost. I sincerely hope it will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, of course we are all interested in the general principle of railroad retirement. During the course of the years this law has worked very well and has given benefits to hundreds of thousands of railroad and former railroad men.

For sometime it has been evident that changes and liberalizations of the railroad retirement law should be undertaken. I understand that considerable study has been made of this subject, but of course the law is very technical and change of this act should be made only with full knowledge of what effect each change may have upon every portion of the law. Some time ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] introduced H. R. 1362, having for its purpose the amendment to the Railroad Retirement Acts and it is my opinion that we should support the original Crosser bill. I, therefore, am taking this time to express the hope here today that it will be favored in the coming test vote as to the type of liberalization legislation which we should have.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that during the war the railroadmen of this country worked tirelessly, patiently, and patriotically. They did their full part in the industrial field to carry the supplies to the various point in this country and to the seaboard that they might be delivered to our armies across the seas. In spite of dissatisfaction with archaic provisions of the original railroad retirement bills they nevertheless carried the full burden of their responsibility without complaint and are, therefore, entitled to full consideration in any changes which may be made to retirement legislation. They are the people who are to be served by this retirement legislation and are called upon to make contributions in support of it. Without the full approval of the railroad men, I doubt that any amendment will be very satisfactory.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

The gentleman in closing his statement said there was no estimate possible of the cost of his amendment. That estimate will run right around $52,000,000.

Mr. O'HARA. I meant to say no exact estimate. I do not think the gentleman means it will cost that.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I thought before anyone voted they should know what they are voting on.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important amendment. It is fair and equitable. It should be adopted. It is similar to the one that I suggested a moment ago when I talked under the 5-minute rule. This amendment simply provides a little more equitable annuity payment to the man who receives higher pay. I think he is entitled to it. The cost is not so great compared with the total amount that we are expending for annuities.

The man who gets $50 a month in annuities now, or $200 per month, pays the same rate under the present law. That particular feature is not changed under the measure here presented. A man whose monthly wage is $100 now would get monthly annuity payments of $52.50 under the present law. Under this amendment we increase that amount only up to $60. If he is paid $150 salary, he now receives $75, and under the pending amendment this would put him up to $82.50. If he is making $200 salary his annuity would be increased from $87.50 to $105 per month. If his pay is $250 he now receives an annuity of $105. This amendment would increase it to $120. And the employee who receives $300 per month, and whose annuity is $120, would be increased to $135 per month.

This is just a little recognition that is fair and equitable. This amendment ought to be adopted. I am satisfied that if the Members were familiar with the situation, they would support this amendment without any objection at all. The only possible objection, if there is one, is the additional cost of approximately $50,000,000, but $50,000,000 is only a small portion of the amount involved in this legislation, as you well know. The employers and the employees share these payments, so it is not a public burden. It is equitable. It accords a little more recognition to the man who receives a little higher wage than the minimum of $50 or $60 a month and who contributes substantially to the retirement fund.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I shall be glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, who also is very much interested in this problem.

Mr. PITTENGER. Was this amendment considered in the committee?

Mr. REES of Kansas. The amendment was very ably and clearly presented by Mr. John T. Corbett, who is national representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. You will find his complete statement in the hearings. I believe at page 404.

I now find that no action was taken by the committee on the proposed amendment. I have read the hearings and do not find any testimony against it. As I have just stated, the amendment before us now is similar in language as the one submitted by Mr. Corbett. The locomotive engineers, the trainmen, and other railroad-employee organizations are in favor of this amendment. It ought to be adopted. I trust the membership will support it.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, an able member of the committee in charge of this bill.

Mr. PRIEST. May I inquire if the gentleman has information as to what percentage of pay-roll tax increase would be necessary if the amendment is adopted?

Mr. REES of Kansas. The tax on this particular item will be increased a little. But it will be more than offset by savings I have heretofore pointed out. I should add, you are going to need to increase the tax in larger amounts than required by this amendment in order to take care of a deficit in this fund, which deficit, I am informed, is getting bigger at the rate of $10,000,000. This seems incredible to me, but such statements have been made by members of the committee having this legislation in charge. Railway employees are deeply concerned with respect to the solvency of this fund, but this increase is so small as compared with other expenditures under this legislation. I trust you will support this amendment.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, $50,000,000 would be about 1¼ percent of the pay roll. I understand that those who are supporting H. R. 1362 have not asked for this provision. It is apparent here that we are about to create a great burden, at best, on account of this legislation. The committee has tried to minimize the cost as much as we thought was consistent with this constructive piece of legislation. It is necessary, if we are going to stay within reasonable bounds at all, to reject many of these enticing amendments that on the face seem important and humane. We must face this problem in a very practical way if we are going to keep this legislation within reasonable bounds. Therefore, I regretfully feel that I cannot support this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 2?

Are there any amendments to section 3?

Are there any amendments to section 4?

Are there any amendments to section 5?

Are there any amendments to section 6?

Are there any amendments to section 7?

Are there any amendments to section 201 on page 91?

Are there any amendments to section 202?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BULWINKLE:

Page 93, line 8, after the word "fund" where it appears the second time, and before the period, insert "other than as provided by section 11 (e) of this act."

Page 93, in line 14, strike out "and"; and in line 16, after "act" and before the period, insert the following: ", and for the transfer of amounts to be credited to the fund pursuant to section 11 (e) of this act."

Page 94, in line 25, strike out "and" and insert in lieu thereof a comma; and on page 95, in line 4, after the comma insert "and such transfers as may be required pursuant to section 11 (e) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act,"; and on page 95, in line 6, strike out "payment or refund" and insert "payment, refund, or transfer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 202?

Are there any amendments to section 203?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BULWINKLE:

Page 95, in line 7, strike out "amendment" and insert "amendments"; and in line 9, insert "(a)" after "203."; and in line 13, strike out "and"; and in line 17, insert after the parenthesis and before the quotation marks the following: ", and all amounts transferred to the fund pursuant to subsection (e) of this section."

"(b) Section 11 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, as amended, is amended by adding after subsection (d) thereof the following new subsection:

"'(e) If the aggregate amount credited to the fund during any calendar year pursuant to the Railroad Unemployment Tax Act and section 8 of this act is less than $3,000,000 there shall be transferred from the account and credited to the fund, on or before January 31 of the next calendar year, an amount equal to the amount by which $3,000,000 exceeds such aggregate amount.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 203?

Are there any amendments to section 204?

Are there any amendments to section 205?

Are there any amendments to section 301 on page 98?

Are there any amendments to section 302?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BULWINKLE:

On page 110, strike out lines 2 to 19, inclusive, and insert the following: "paragraph:

"'(4) Tax collected under Railroad Unemployment Tax Act.—All taxes (including all interest, civil fines, civil penalties, additional amounts, and additions to the tax) collected pursuant to the Railroad Unemployment Tax Act shall be deposited directly with the Secretary, or with any Federal Reserve bank, or with any other bank designated by the Secretary, pursuant to section 10 of the Act of June 11, 1942 (56 Stat. 356; 12 U. S. C., Sup. IV, 265) or pursuant to the Act of June 19, 1922 (42 Stat. 662; 31 U. S. C., 1940 ed., 473), to receive such deposits, by the officer receiving or collecting the same, to be credited in accordance with section 1553 (a).'"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago 218 Members of this House signed a discharge petition to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of the bill, H. R. 1362, which is not the bill we have before us. Only part of that bill with reference to which we signed the petition is before you, and that is the name of the man who introduced it, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER]. That bill is not here. I take it for granted that the 218 Members who signed the petition did so because they wanted to do something for the railroad employees. I just want to make it clear that you do not have that bill before you. This bill does not satisfy the railroad employees. I do not mean that we have to satisfy them 100 percent because I do not think anyone ever is. The bill we have before us is little less than nothing. The railroad employees want us to act on the Crosser bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman does not mean to say that the bill is worth less than nothing when it contains survivor benefits which are not provided by existing law and when the bill takes care of widows. Surely the gentleman is wrong on that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the gentleman wishes to make an observation, why he can make it. I am saying just exactly what I think and what the railroad employees think, and they are the ones who are interested in this bill as well as the railroads.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield for an observation if the gentleman wishes to make an observation.

Mr. LEA. This bill proposed by the committee provides benefits to the railroad men and their beneficiaries or dependents of $65,000,000 a year. It provides a system more liberal than any other under the social-security program.

Mr. HENDRICKS. As I was saying when I was interrupted, the bill, which we signed the petition to discharge, is not before us. I am trying to give you the privilege to vote this bill down so that we can act on the bill which you voted to discharge.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I simply wanted to say in reply to the gentleman who interrogated you that the Railroad Retirement Board has endorsed the Crosser bill 100 percent.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Well, we know that the railroad employees know something about what they want. The railroad employees are entitled to something. As I said this morning, a few months ago we voted on the land-grant bill, which returned hundreds of millions of dollars to the railroads. Just a few days ago when the President appeared before us, as I stated this morning, in 1 hour and 55 minutes we voted the most drastic antistrike legislation we have ever voted on, slapping the railroad employees in the face. I voted for that legislation, and I am not apologizing, because we were facing a crisis, but now it is time to help these men who did such a good job during the war. We do not have the Crosser bill before us. If you want to vote on the Crosser bill and help the railroad employees, then vote down this committee amendment, and the Crosser bill will be before us so that we can take action on that bill which we petitioned out of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and which the railroad employees want.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I was going to ask the gentleman if the parliamentary situation was not such that the committee amendment is offered as a substitute for the Crosser bill, and unless the substitute is defeated, the Crosser bill would not come up.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is offered as an amendment, but you are correct as to the proper parliamentary procedure. If you want to vote on the Crosser bill, vote down this committee amendment, and then the Crosser bill will be before us and we can amend that if necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I hesitate very much to detain the House any longer at this hour, but I feel that a few words should be said following my good friend from Florida.

It has been explained on the floor a number of times already the procedure by which the committee proposal came before the House. It is the procedure, I am certain, that is followed by every committee of the House. The Committee on Military Affairs followed somewhat similar procedure just a few days ago with the terminal leave pay bill. In the case of the pending bill a discharge petition was placed on the Speaker's desk and signatures obtained, after the committee, by a majority vote, had instructed the legislative counsel to put into form the recommendations drafted by the subcommittee and approved by a majority of the committee. Then, the Crosser bill was reported by the full committee with the amendment that is now pending, under the rules of the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRIEST. I yield.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I may say to the gentleman that I have not condemned the committee on its procedure. I was simply explaining that the Crosser bill was not before the House, and the way to get it before the House.

Mr. PRIEST. The gentleman will agree with me, then, that the procedure is the regular procedure?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Of course.

Mr. PRIEST. Now, just in a very few minutes, in an effort to give the House a few comparisons, I would like to point to five or six main points in existing law and in the Crosser bill and in the committee substitute.

Under the present law the question of coverage is designed, generally speaking, to cover all persons who are regularly regarded as railroad workers. The Crosser bill would add freight forwarders, railroad-controlled motor truck companies, and extend the coverage to include many others. I am aware of the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] has said that if he had an opoprtunity he would offer an amendment to clarify that. But as it is in the bill today the coverage is almost unlimited. The committee bill stands by existing law on the question of coverage.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. PRIEST. I yield briefly.

Mr. BECKWORTH. That is not the first time, however, the gentleman has stated that the brotherhoods came before the committee. They also stated that it was not their purpose to include anyone except a person who actually and truthfully was predominantly a railroad employee. That has been greatly exaggerated.

Mr. PRIEST. I thank the gentleman. I want to go ahead for a minute or two.

Retirement benefits: Under existing law men and women at age 65, irrespective of length of service, may retire; both men and women at age 65, after 20 years but with a cutback of one one-hundred-and-eightieth each month by which their age is under 65. The Crosser bill provides the same as present law except retirement of women at age 60 with no cutback would be permitted. The committee bill is exactly the same as the original Crosser bill on the question of disability retirement. That has been explained. Under existing law, persons with 30 years or more of service who become totally and permanently disabled, occupationally or otherwise, may retire regardless of age. If a worker has less than 30 years of service he may claim a pension at age 60 subject to the reduction of a cut-back for each month under 65.

The Crosser bill proposes individual disability, occupational or otherwise, for work in regular employment after age 60 or with 10 years of service and no cutback. It provides for an occupational disability for regular occupation after 20 years if they have a current connection. The committee bill provides for the cutback provisions of the present act for disability for employment for hire at age 60 and less than 30 years of service. An additional amendment was adopted which required the disability to be connected with the employment.

On the matter of computation of retirement annuities, there is no change in the present act, either in the Crosser bill or the proposal of the committee.

Maximum benefit provisions are the same in both bills and are in accordance with existing law. The Crosser bill increases minimum benefits above present law, and the committee adopted the Crosser bill provisions in that respect.

The committee bill provides for survivor benefits on the same basis as social security, while the Crosser bill runs around 25 percent higher.

The greatest difference, perhaps, is the matter of unemployment-insurance benefits. The committee left existing law as it is, while the Crosser bill provided for increases in weekly compensation up to $25 for 26 weeks, and provided for sickness and maternity benefits as unemployment. These are the fundamental differences in the law today and the proposals before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the House will vote down this committee substitute overwhelmingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee substitute for the pending bill.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt the Committee divided and there were—ayes 119, noes 123.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. BULWINKLE and Mr. CROSSER.

The Committee again divided and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 129, noes 136.

So the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO) there were—ayes 123, noes 78.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1362) to amend the Railroad Retirement Act, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code; and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1947

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE], I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5990) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TABER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand an amendment has been placed in the bill raising the Federal contribution from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000. Does the gentleman understand and expect that the conferees will bring back that amendment in disagreement for a separate vote?

Mr. GARY. That is the intention of the House conferees. I can assure the gentleman that the amendment will be brought back to the House in disagreement for a vote.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. When this bill came to the floor of the House it came without an increase in the Federal contribution. The Senate, so we understand, increased that item from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000. An understanding has been reached this afternoon that in order to facilitate the disposition of the appropriation bills the conferees on this bill will bring the bill back in disagreement on that item in order that the House may have a separate vote on it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. COFFEE, GARY, FLOOD, O'NEAL, ANDREWS of Alabama, STEFAN, HORAN, and CANFIELD.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1947

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 6837) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 2311), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan reserved all points of order on the bill.

TRAINING OF OFFICERS FOR THE NAVY

Mr. JOHN J. DELANEY, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 638, Rept. No. 2312) which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5426, a bill to provide for the training of officers for the naval service, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. HAGEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT BILL

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CROSSER. I understood that when this bill was put over until today from a week and a half ago because of some exigencies that arose in the East we were to continue its consideration until it was disposed of after we did take it up. Am I correct in that statement?

The SPEAKER. That may or may not be the situation. The Chair cannot answer the gentleman at this moment. It may be the next order of business. The next order of business will probably be the War Department appropriation bill and then this bill. That may be the situation or it may not be.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ZIMMERMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Did I understand the Speaker to say that the military appropriation bill would be the first thing up tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair said that it probably would be. He did not say positively that it would be the first thing up.

Mr. TABER. I simply ask the question for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] is recognized for 45 minutes.

STARVING PEOPLE OR AMERICAN DOLLARS

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon I took advantage of the 1-minute period on the floor of this House to suggest that a rather curious situation exists in the United States at the present time, and to say that I intended to give some figures and some information regarding it today.

The United States is being asked by many nations of the world, to help feed the starving peoples of those nations. There are times when this interest in the food supplies of the United States goes beyond the customary terms of a request. As an example, I suggest the advertisement which appeared in the New York papers some days ago, inserted by the India Famine Emergency Committee, asking the Members of Congress, by that public but indirect method, eight questions; among them: How much wheat is the United States going to ship to India in June, July, and August?

And why are we feeding our grain to livestock in the United States, when it could be used to feed human beings? And why we do not make the white bread of the United States darker than we have made it? And why we don't reestablish rationing in the United States? And why we do not eat potatoes and other substitutes for wheat, so that the wheat produced in the United States may be shipped abroad? And, finally, what statements we have made individually or collectively in Congress, and what action we have taken, or what action we intend to take, on the urgent need of increasing our help, not only to India, but to the peoples of other countries who are in dire need?

This is not said with any thought of criticism or depreciation of the urgent needs of starving people. I am calling attention only to the fact that other nations are requesting, sometimes very pointedly, that the United States come to the aid of these other nations. We have always complied willingly, in this country, with the requests from any nation in the world where there are starving people. In fact, we seldom wait for requests.

In the Times-Herald of April 27, 1946, Acting Secretary of State Acheson was reported as advocating the seizure of the wheat and flour needed to fulfill the promises made by American officials to send food to the starvation areas. I quote:

> Acheson told reporters that, if you want to get wheat or flour, what you have to do is to go out and take them.

The Washington Post, on May 28, reported the setting up of a 20-nation council for the control of the food of the world; to control food and allocate it in a time of world need.

I mention these things to show the general acceptance of the fact that a desperate food situation exists in the world, and that as usual the United States is expected to supply the food or the money for its solution.

At the same time we are supplying these foodstuffs, in practically all cases at our own expense, some of the nations involved are shipping large quantities of concentrated foods, either directly from the starvation countries, or from areas immediately adjacent to the starvation countries, into the United States to be sold for American dollars.

The concentrated foods, to which I refer, include dates, figs, walnuts, almonds, filberts, cashews, and other food products.

The quantities in which they are being shipped into the United States equal, and in some cases exceed, prewar shipment figures. Let me give you the figures on several of these items for the last 7, 8, or 9 months. These are the most recent figures I have been able to obtain. I will show in this first table the average prewar and the current rates of importations, and then project that to an annual rate, concerning which I will speak later.

	Average, 1935–39	Latest period available		Projected annual rate	Percent of prewar
		Months	Quantity
	Tons		Tons	Tons
Almonds	2,678	8	7,817	11,725	438

[1] Average.

A question has been raised by the opponents of this proposal to feed these commodities to starving people, rather than ship them to this country for sale, concerning the accuracy of these projected percentages.

I have therefore obtained another table, which I will now insert in the RECORD, showing the month-by-month comparisons. This table is even more interesting than the first, which was challenged:

Specified edible tree nuts—Comparison of 1935–39 average imports with 1945–46 current imports by months and by totals through April 1946

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield willingly to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. In the matter of the shipment of these different products into the United States the gentleman knows that when the people in other countries buy our grains and fats in the United States the Export-Import Bank puts up the money.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I was going to ask the gentleman if he used the word "buy" advisedly.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. They buy with our money, but when they ship their other things in here, of course, they get paid by American consumers. They therefore have everything to gain. They double up their dollars here in the United States from the domestic sources.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman may be interested to note the comparisons in the table I have just inserted between the 1935–39 period and the 1945–46 period. The table shows that present shipments to this country of almonds, filberts—which should interest the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. NORBLAD]—of almonds, filberts, and cashews are respectively 325 percent, 459 percent, and 120 percent of the prewar shipments.

The commodities I have mentioned—dates, almonds, filberts, figs, and so forth, all have exceptionally high food values. Nuts average more than 3,000 calories per pound. They contain valuable properties: Oils, proteins, vitamins, and minerals. For example, almonds alone contain more protein than meat, more calcium than whole milk, more iron than bread, raisins, or oranges.

I have seen an advertisement from the California Almond Growers Exchange, which showed the equivalents of a pound of shelled almonds. You might be surprised, Mr. Speaker, to realize that a pound of shelled almonds is the equivalent of 4 quarts of milk or 2 dozen eggs, or 2 good-sized chickens, or of approximately 3 pounds of beef, or of more than 4 pounds of fish.

Suppose we translate the above figures, 42,591 tons, showing the nuts, dates, and figs imported into the United States for a period of not over 7 or 8 months, into understandable calories and food values.

Forty-two thousand five hundred tons of these foods contain 181,000,000,000 calories. The food value of these few imports alone would supply the entire District of Columbia for more than 2 months, with 3,000 calories each day per person.

It would supply 1,000,000 people with 2,000 calories per day, for more than 90 days. That is the European nutritional objective and it is the equivalent of 1,850,523 bushels of wheat.

It is, therefore, the equivalent of 185,052,352 full pound loaves of bread, or enough to supply every family in the District of Columbia with a loaf of bread each day for more than 2 years.

It will interest my friends from the west coast and the New England area to know that it is the equivalent, in wheat, of the food for approximately a million and a half hens for 1 year. It would produce almost 28,000,000 tons of poultry meat, or it would raise approximately 2,000,000 turkeys.

Peanuts are produced in the United States in large volumes, increasing volumes, I might say; more than enough to supply the domestic consumption. The probable almond production for the coming season is indicated as three times the average annual prewar consumption.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I assume somebody will use the argument that a person cannot live on nuts alone.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I take that up in a moment. The point has been raised by the opponents.

Walnuts have been on an export basis since 1933. Filberts are being produced in a quantity equal to a prewar consumption. The prospective production of pecans is 20 to 25 percent above prewar consumption.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, to be the simplest sort of common sense, to suggest that at a time when famine has laid its cold hands on the peoples of so many nations, that all food commodities available anywhere in the world should be channeled into the food-deficit areas, particularly when these concentrated foods come from or near the famine countries. There would be obviously a substantial saving in transportation costs. The use of these foods might reduce the quantities of foodstuffs that the United States is planning to send to the deficit areas. I do not need to add that it would decrease the costs to the United States, and consequently help meet issues which are of rising interest to people of this country. These are the increasing national debt, and the annual governmental deficits.

It is difficult to make an accurate comparison of the values of these imports, and food being sent from this country to the famine areas. It is possible to make approximate comparisons based on prices at which the imported commodities are being offered currently, and on the wholesale prices of the commodities which the United States is exporting to the food-deficit areas. Almonds, which I used as a previous example, are being offered on the New York market at approximately 50 cents per pound. Deducting duty, freight, and shipping charges, and deducting 10 percent for commissions and insurance, would leave a dollar value of about 31 cents per pound for almonds in Italy. If, on the other hand, we take the wholesale market price at New York, of the foods we are shipping to Italy, and add freight and shipping charges, we can get some rough idea of the value in American dollars of the foods laid down there. We can then translate that into equivalent caloric values, to get the following table:

Foreign cost almonds compared with cost of equivalent food value in export commodities

	Cents
Almonds, 1 pound, cost in Italy	31.00
Equivalent food value in:
Wheat flour	10.00
Canned ham	67.26
Canned pressed pork	70.95
Fresh meat, round, grade A	90.58
Fresh meat, round, grade B	72.54

The table shows that it is cheaper to use wheat, and nobody denies that, any more than anybody is suggesting that we stop the shipment of wheat or flour. The table does show, however, that based on equal caloric values, almonds in Italy are much cheaper than the canned or fresh meats we are also shipping to that country.

This is not a temporary matter. There are indications that imports of these nuts, dates, and figs, will increase in the next few months at a rapidly accelerating rate. There are large stocks in the warehouses in Europe, carried over from the last crop year, and crops are reported maturing this season in excess of previous seasons.

As we read the figures that I am putting into the report today, we should remember, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a localized matter. I mention that specifically because, as I approach a revelation of the opposition to the proposal that we use these foods in the famine areas, it will be discovered that one of the arguments presented is the rather curious argument that this is a local matter, affecting only California, or perhaps only California and one or two other States.

I have not been able yet to see what that has to do with the question of using the most readily available food to feed starving people, but I can assure you that, whether the argument is good or bad on its own merits, it is certainly an error geographically.

Mr. NORBLAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon. I acknowledge his interest and help in the investigation of this problem.

Mr. NORBLAD. This also very vitally affects the northwestern portion of Oregon.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I thank the gentleman, because I see no reason for the argument having any ground as to whether or not it is local, but even if there were grounds for it, it certainly is not correct.

Peanuts are raised in the United States in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. Pecans are grow in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, Oklahoma, and Texas. Walnuts are grown in California and Oregon. Filberts are grown in Oregon and Washington. Almonds, so far as I know, are grown only in California commercially. Dates are grown in California and Arizona, and in very small quantities in a few other States. Figs are grown in California and Texas. It will be observed, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that 19 of the 48 States are interested in the statements I am making on the floor of the House this afternoon. These 19 States are represented by 180 Members of this House. I assure you it is not a local matter.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. What is the situation as far as peanuts are concerned. I did not get the situation.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I have no figures for the importation of peanuts. I do not think we have imported any in the past year.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I would say that during many years we have heard a lot of adverse statements about the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, and how bad it is and has been. It has always been amusing to me to note that the peanut people have been able to keep a duty that was more than the crop raised 25 years before the war.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The duty is 7 cents.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes. It is sectional favoritism that has not been accorded other nuts.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I should add, I think, that I have here a telegram from Mr. H. E. Wallace, of the Georgia-Florida-Alabama Peanut Association, joining with the producers of other nuts, and of dates and figs, in the protests I speak of today.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield to my colleague from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. I think it should be stated that when the gentleman says "7 cents" he means 7 cents a pound or $7 per 100 pounds, which is a very fancy tariff, indeed, on peanuts.

Mr. PHILLIPS. If we were to take the production of nuts alone in the United States, we would find at least 75,000 individual nut growers, with an investment in orchards, harvesting equipment, and processing plants, of approximately $1,000,000,000.

The second argument against using these concentrated foods to feed starving people, is the one that American growers are seeking to maintain the high-price levels which have prevailed during the war years. There is no truth in this statement, as every member of the House Committee on Agriculture knows. During the presentation of the case for the producers of nuts, dates and figs, not one word was said about prices in the United States, nor about attempting to maintain the price level. In fact, the wholesale market in the United States is already 25 cents to 40 cents below the wholesale price ceiling fixed by OPA, under the Price Control Act.

I think it would be well, at this point, if I were to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a complete table of the imports of five of these foods; almonds, filberts, cashews, figs and dates, from seven specified countries, including Spain, Turkey, Italy, Portugal, France, and India. The table shows the importations from these countries over a specified time—up to the most recent figures available—and then translates the quantities shipped into this country into caloric values and the equivalents in bushels of wheat:

TABLE 1.—Imports, in tons, of specified foods, showing caloric content and caloric equivalent in bushels of wheat

I would also like to insert, based on information secured from the Department of Agriculture—almost all of it is contained in Agriculture Bulletin 549, Approximate Composition of American Food Materials, June 1940—a translation of the values of almonds, filberts, pecans, walnuts, brazil nuts, cashews, pistachio nuts, dates and figs into calories per pound, and then a similar translation for bacon, beans, beef, cheese, eggs, flour, ham, pork, prunes, potatoes, raisins, sugar and salmon. I offer these only as of general interest in an intelligent discussion of the subject.

Finally, while I gave part of this next table in the discussion, I think it might be well to insert as table No. 3, a comparison of the money values, of almonds versus wheat flour and meats, here and abroad, to show the basis on which the abbreviated summary, already used, was computated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with all this information before us, and with an earnest desire on the part of the United States to see starving people fed, what is the opposition to the suggestion that this food should be used, so far as possible, to feed starving people rather than brought to the United States over great distances to be sold here for American dollars?

I have not even suggested, so far, that the people of the United States are also interested in American dollars, particularly when they are being asked to take their own American dollars and spend them for food to be shipped to the famine countries. I take for granted that nothing more need be said about the urgency of that campaign. The ambitious Mr. Bowles is annoying the air waves constantly with his attempts to connect the continuation of the Emergency Price Control Act and the need for food for starving people. He and Mr. Clayton went so far as to attempt, unsuccessfully, to draw Mr. Hoover into the argument. School children are being asked to collect canned goods, and so are members of various women's organizations. The former head of UNRRA, Mr. Lehman, is the sponsor of a movement to collect packaged and canned foods and turn them over to UNRRA, now under the direction of Mr. LaGuardia, so that these foods may hopefully be sent to famine countries. We are reducing the carry-over of grains in the United States to a point where drought or crop failure could produce an embarrassing situation, while other countries, with greater interest in some cases, in the countries where the famines exist, are carrying greater stocks and surpluses of the same grains. I am trying to point out that the American people have a very direct interest in what I am talking about.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I wondered about that, and I wondered if Mr. Clayton was so interested in feeding the people, why he would not raise some food instead of raising so much cotton that we have to pay $20 a bale to get rid of it after we raise it.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I think the trouble with Mr. Bowles has been that he has been spending so much time indulging in hysterical outbursts on the radio that he has no time to administer intelligently the job the President gave him, and perhaps the same thing applies to Mr. Clayton.

Mr. Speaker, the answer to my own question, concerning the origin of the opposition, is that human nature is a very interesting thing. Seventy-five years ago Charles Kingsley said: "There is a great deal of human nature in man."

And everyone who has at any time served in any legislative body will unhesitatingly confirm that epigram. There has been a striking display of human nature, in some of its more selfish aspects, both before the Committee on Agriculture, and privately in the offices of members of that committee, over the past few weeks, in connection with the discussion over nuts, dates, and figs.

You would suppose that everyone in the United States would be willing that all concentrated foods should be used, as I said, so far as possible, to feed starving people. Evidently the importers of nuts, and the salters, and the confectionery industry, and to a less extent, the drug industry, have not felt that way. About a week after the first hearing before the Committee on Agriculture, at which the case was presented, just about as I have presented it above, I was visited by the Washington representative of the National Association of Retail Druggists, who told me that he had been instructed by his national office, to oppose the proposal of the nut producers for "a bill to stop the importation of foreign nuts," or to put a quota upon them. I suggested to him, in the simple language of a Congressman, that he should not stick his neck out too far, as first of all, there was no such bill, but merely a hearing before the Committee on Agriculture, with the presumption that a committee resolution would result, directed to the State Department, or UNRRA, or to the people of the United States at large, saying what the situation was, and suggesting that all of these various agencies, and the foreign nations themselves, unite in some sort of an arrangement to limit exports to this country, and to use the available foods close at hand.

I also said that I thought the druggists in my district would feel—as I think the American people of all professions and all businesses, everywhere, would feel—that so far as possible; first, this food should be used primarily for people who need food; and, second, that while we have a sufficient quantity of home produced commodities, there should be some reasonable limitation placed upon the importation of competing commodities in a surplus market, or a market which is approaching a surplus market. I told him that I was quite sure that the retail druggists in my district would take that attitude. I observe, however, that so far as the Washington office of the National Association was concerned, my druggists are still being represented as opposed to the proposal now before the Committee on Agriculture.

That was only the opening of the door. The next step was a request, to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, that a hearing be given to the opponents of the bill. That was a very reasonable request, except that when the attorney for the peanut salters appeared before the committee, his first statement was the familiar one, as I recall it, that he had not had sufficient time to prepare a statement, nor had he been advised of the bill nor of the hearing.

After long years of service in any legislative body, certain tactics become rather familiar, and the usual dilatory tactics are among the most familiar. As a matter of fact, an editorial on this subject appeared in the Pacific Rural Press for May 11, 1946. The proposers of some reasonable consideration, have made their attitude known publicly for some time.

I will insert, at this point in the RECORD, the editorial I have just referred to from the Pacific Rural Press:

WHILE THEIR CHILDREN STARVE

In the matter of feeding her starving peoples, Europe, as ever, carries a prayer book in one hand and a cash book in the other.

The same is true of the politicians in starving India.

Let's set out the facts and look at them.

Europe had a big yield of almonds last year, 81,000 tons shelled basis.

Those almonds are good food; they contain about 2,800 calories per pound, which is twice as many calories as the charity leaders say is necessary to save European lives.

Is Europe using those almonds to save the lives of her hungry people?

Indeed not. She is shipping them to us by the boatload. On the docks of Italy starving children watch them being loaded out for the United States. Our own 1945 crop of almonds was large, and we had no need for imports, but they want our dollars, and they undersell us in our home market to get our dollars.

And we give them food.

Up to the 1st of February, India had dumped in the United States cashew nuts equal in tonnage to our entire 1945 almond crop. The tariff is negligible.

And we will give India free food to replace the cashew nuts sold to us.

This is not by way of criticizing our charity. To feed these hungry people is our duty and our privilege.

But criticism is due the greedy folk abroad, and Uncle Sap, who lets them get away with it and who gives away our home market to these greedy foreigners to the detriment of our producers at home who carry the load of feeding the world.

The flood of foreign nuts into our market is already big and getting bigger. India dumps most of her cashews into this country. Europe dumps almonds and filberts in the good old easy United States. That hurts the walnut and almond crops of California, the walnut and filbert crops of the Northwest, and the pecan crop of Dixie.

We have a law against dumping in this country, but the State Department has never enforced it.

It is apparent the prayer book is to be used only on Sunday.

The Committee on Agriculture plans to hold a second hearing, for the opponents of the idea, the end of this week or the first of next. I hope it may be held soon, because the sooner it is held the sooner we will know exactly the position that the retailers and the wholesalers and the importers and the salters wish to take in this matter. I think it is a matter of interest to the American people.

During the 2 weeks that have elasped the opponents have not been idle. I will now insert in the RECORD, at this point, a letter from the office of the Red Line Commercial Co., Inc., dated June 11, 1946, and addressed to one of their customers in Minneapolis:

RED LINE COMMERCIAL CO., INC.,
June 11, 1946.

GENTLEMEN: Certain Pacific coast interests have put recommendations before the House Agriculture Committee to prohibit or allocate, or place under quota, the import of foods into this country or the export from foreign countries. The object is that no food should be exported from famine areas and countries that are not famine areas should export their surplus to famine areas, and nothing should come to this country. They stress the value of nuts as a food and, of course, the main object is to keep all imported nuts out of this country so that the domestic tree nut interests have this country for themselves without competition from foreign nuts.

Needless to say, there are many arguments against a program of this sort. It would kill foreign trade; it eliminates the opportunity for these foreign countries to obtain dollars for the purpose of importing other necessary and vital foodstuffs or products; it would be worse than a tariff barrier because it would be a prohibition and a restriction of imports, resulting in continued Government regimentation and regulation. Last, but not least, it would kill the salted-nut business, severely handicap the manufacturing confectioner, and deprive the public.

The imported nut section of the Association of Food Distributors, the Manufacturing Confectioners' Association, the Peanut and Nut Salters' Association, and many other associations will be heard, and, of course, all these associations will protest against such recommendations at the hearing.

Unfortunately, however, it is the individual Congressmen who have to be convinced that they must vote against these recommendations. Today, only 2 out of 30 Congressmen on the committee are on our side. We have to see to it that at least 15 out of the 30 are on our side. The only thing that can change Congressmen is hearing from their constituents.

It is, accordingly, urgent that you, as our representative contact immediately 10 of your customers and get them to send wires to their Congressmen. This must be done this week because the hearing will be early next week. If a Congressman gets 10 telegrams from 10 constituents, it is likely to alter his position and that is the only way his position can be altered. Unfortunately, it cannot be altered to the same extent by hearings.

Please get busy immediately and have 10 of your customers send telegrams to their Congressman. The telegram can be brief, and, of course, the important part of it is: "We oppose" or "We are against." For example, a simple telegram would be:

"We urgently request you oppose pressure of domestic tree-nut interests to prevent importation of nuts. If domestic nut interests are successful it will prevent export of many United States manufacturers. As nuts are luxury food of foreign countries can use dollars paid for nuts to purchase from our domestic food surpluses about 10 times the food value of nuts shipped here."

We repeat, please do this job immediately; if possible. Have those who are sending the telegram send a copy to us.

Yours very truly,
RED LINE COMMERCIAL CO., INC.

P. S.—In your State the Congressmen on the House Agriculture Committee is Congressman AUGUST H. ANDERSEN and wires should be sent to him care House Agriculture Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

You will observe the frankness of the letter. After reciting the few general arguments, familiar to all of us regarding foreign trade, and the desire of foreign countries to obtain dollar exchange for the purpose of importing other commodities, including other foods, the letter says:

Last but not least, it would kill the salted-nut business, severely handicap the manufacturing confectioner, and deprive the public.

Mr. Speaker, with an even more charming frankness, the letter continues:

It is the individual Congressman who have to be convinced that they must vote against these recommendations.

The letter refers to the proposed recommendations that we use this concentrated food to feed starving people.

Today, only 2 out of 30 Congressmen on the committee are on our side.

There are only 26 members of the House Committee on Agriculture, and there has been no indication whatever as to how the members of the committee feel on this subject, or intend to vote. The Red Line Commercial Co. must have a crystal ball.

We have to see to it that at least 15 out of the 30 are on our side. The only thing that can change Congressmen is hearing from their constituents.

I thought, Mr. Speaker, that you would be very much interested in seeing how laws are made. The letter continues:

If a Congressman gets 10 telegrams from 10 constituents, it is likely to alter his position, and that is the only way his position can be altered. Unfortunately, it cannot be altered to the same extent by hearings.

That is to say, Mr. Speaker, that if you have a case which cannot be presented before a committee in such a way as to appear to the members of that committee to be sound and to justify the support of the committee, then you may be able to get what you want by sending 10 telegrams to each member of that committee. The letter is even thoughtful enough to suggest how the telegram should be worded:

The telegram can be brief and, of course, the important part of it is "we oppose," or "we are against."

And then finally, as you will observe from the postscript to the letter, no doubt is left in the mind of the person who received it, as to how the telegram should be addressed. This telegram, sent to people in Minneapolis, naturally suggested that the 10 telegrams from 10 different constituents, should be sent to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

ANDRESEN], although I would point out respectively to the Red Line Commercial Co., that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] spells his name Andresen, and not Andersen, and that there is an old political axiom that it does not make much difference to a man in public life what you say about him, just so you spell his name correctly.

That is not the only letter I have. I have another, sent by another wholesaler or salter, to one of his customers in Philadelphia. It just happens that I used to live in Philadelphia, and still know some people there. I have the name of the firm to which this letter was sent, and of the firm sending it, but I said that I would not insert this information in the RECORD, and consequently I print the following letter without salutation or signature. You will notice a marked similarity between this letter and the one before it:

IMPORTANT

GENTLEMEN: Some of the Pacific-coast interests have made recommendations to the House Agriculture Committee, which would result in the prohibition or allocation, or placing under quota, the import of foods into this country, or the export from foreign countries. Their idea is to prohibit food being exported from countries, within the famine area.

They particularly allude to nuts as a food, and the main objective is to keep all imported nuts out of this country, so that the domestic nut growers have the American market for themselves, without competition from foreign nuts.

There are, naturally, many sound and strong arguments against such a program. First of all, it would kill foreign trade, as it would eliminate the opportunity of these foreign countries to obtain dollars needed in the importing of other necessary and vital food, farm machinery, etc. It would really be worse than a tariff barrier, as it would be continued Government regimentation and regulation, and what is more important, it would kill the salted-nut business, and work a terrific hardship on the manufacturing confectioners, bakers, grocers, and many other industries.

The Manufacturing Confectioners Association, the Peanut and Nut Salters Association, the imported nut section of the Association of Food Distributors, and other associations will be heard at a hearing of the Agricultural Committee of the United States Congress, all of them protesting against such a recommendation. There are 30 Congressmen on the committee and only 2 of them can be definitely counted on our side. Therefore, we have to see that at least 15 are convinced that such a program would be disastrous. The only way a Congressman can make up his mind on an issue is to hear from his constituents.

We, therefore, urge you, as our representative to contact immediately 20 of your customers, and see that they send wires to the Congressman from your State on this committee, namely, J. ROLAND KINZER. It is imperative this be done this week because the hearing is set for early next week. The telegram should be in different wording, but the main part is "we oppose" or "we are against." For example, a simple telegram would be:

'We strongly oppose the recommendation of the Pacific coast tree-nut industry to prohibit or allocate or place under 'the import of foods into this country or the export of food from foreign countries.' We respectfully request you to oppose the taking of any action in this direction."

But please change the wording on each wire, and we repeat, please do this immediately and advise us by return mail who is sending the telegrams. This is for the benefit of all concerned, and the country, in general.

Yours very truly.

It takes twice as many telegrams to influence the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as it does to influence the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Certainly it does not take very many telegrams to influence me if it only takes 10.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I can say for both the gentleman from Minnesota, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that no matter how they vote on any issue which results from this discussion, their decisions will be based on the merits of the case, as they see them, and not on 10 wires, nor on 20 wires, from 20 of the customers of the firms to whom such letters were sent. I am equally sure that both gentlemen still believe in the constitutional method of committee hearings, and do not agree that the only way a Congressman can make up his mind on an issue is to hear from his constituents.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PHILLIPS. So I came to the conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that the importers of foreign nuts, the salters, and a few people whom they have been able to draw into the picture, like the confectioners, in an entirely unselfish and impersonal way, wish, so far as possible, to get imported nuts, in the greatest possible quantities, and at the lowest possible prices, in competition with nuts, dates, and figs, grown in the United States. If this means that concentrated foods are to be brought from areas near famine counties, then, unfortunately, that is too bad for the starving people, but should not be taken into consideration by the druggists, the confectioners, the wholesalers, the salters, or the others in this broad-minded and unselfish group.

I rise today, Mr. Speaker, to remark, without any hesitation whatever, that this attitude and this position do not represent the feelings of the people in those business groups who live and do business in the Twenty-second District of California.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, there has been some misunderstanding in the national offices.

Who else, Mr. Speaker, opposes or questions the proposal of the American producers of nuts, dates, and figs? I doubt if very many others do oppose the suggestion, but in order that the record may be complete, I will insert under the privilege of extending my remarks, a letter from the Department of State, signed by Mr. Winthrop E. Brown, Chief of the Division of Commercial Policy, addressed to the manager of the California Almond Growers Exchange, and also a reply from the manager of that exchange, Mr. D. R. Bailey, to Mr. Brown.

Under the same privilege I will insert a letter from Mr. L. A. Wheeler, Director of the Office of Agricultural Relations, of the Department of Agriculture, here in Washington, addressed to the California Almond Growers Exchange, and the reply of Mr. Bailey to that letter. I will also insert a letter written by Mr. J. W. Parks, of the Dried Fruit Division, Fruit and Vegetable Branch, Production and Marketing Administration of the United States Department of Agriculture here in Washington, also sent to the California Almond Growers Exchange, and again I will add the reply of Mr. D. R. Bailey, general manager of the California Almond Growers Exchange, to that letter.

This, I think, Mr. Speaker, should conclude the material necessary to present today to you and to the Members of this House. I might ask myself a few questions and give myself the answers:

Question 1: Is it proposed that a bill be introduced in this House to control the importation of foreign foods, particularly nuts, dates, or figs? Answer: No such bill has been proposed.

Question 2: Is it suggested by the producers of any of these commodities that the importation of these foodstuffs be shut off, temporarily or permanently? Answer: No such proposal has been made.

Question 3: What is the reason for the suggestion that this matter be discussed before the Committee on Agriculture? Answer: The reason, as explained by the representatives of the several commodities listed, is because nuts, dates, and figs are concentrated foods of great value, and are grown in the countries to which we are being asked to ship food—quite often as a gift—or are grown in nearby areas. It seems to the producers of these foods, as it seems to me, that it would be a sensible thing to use all foods which are quickly and readily available to feed hungry people.

Question 4: What is the secondary object of the proposal? Answer: The secondary object is to discuss and perhaps works out some solution governing the importation of nuts, dates, and figs into the United States in quantities greater than prewar importations, at a time when these same commodities grown in the United States are approaching surplus.

Question 5: Is it proposed that all nuts, dates, or figs be consumed in the countries producing them? Answer: No such thing has been proposed. It would be impossible.

Question 6: Is it proposed that starving people should live on nuts, dates, or figs to the exclusion of other foods, or when starvation cases require nutritional care? Answer: This is the familiar red herring. It was never thought of by the advocates of the proposal.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman know of any instances where nuts that came into this country have been sent back again to feed the people who raised them?

Mr. PHILLIPS. No. That is a very interesting question. I should like to explore that and I shall do so. I continue the questions:

Question 7: What proposal has been made by the American producers, in the way of solution? Answer: No specific proposal has yet been made. I have an idea that the proposal, when left to the members of the Committee on Agriculture, will approximate one or both of the following: First. That the various agencies of the United States Government, such as the State Department, the Department of Agriculture, and UNRRA, be asked, so far as possible, to work out a program making the greatest possible use of foodstuffs in the countries to which we are shipping relief food, or readily available to them; and, second, that the State Department consider the idea of limiting voluntarily the importations of these nuts to perhaps 110 percent of the prewar average, just as the State Department made a similar arrangement voluntarily with the manufacturers of Swiss watches, regarding the importation of that particular commodity.

Mr. Speaker, if the importers and packers of cheap imported nuts wish to maintain that source of supply, so they can put on the market a little package of mixed nuts containing a few American-grown nuts together with a larger quantity of imported nuts, particularly cashew nuts—which we do not raise in the United States—rather than putting on the market a little package of American-grown pecans, or almonds, or filberts, simply because the package containing the imported nuts means a larger profit to the wholesaler, packer, and perhaps to the retailer, that is their privilege. But I do want you, Mr. Speaker, and the Members of the House to know what is going on, what the facts are regarding the importation of these nuts, dates, and figs into the United States, and finally just what sort of a campaign is being carried on, not openly before the Committee on Agriculture, where the Constitution says these people have a right to be heard, but underhandedly through the method I have just revealed above.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to present this case dispassionately. I would like to keep this discussion on the reasonable plane of whether we should use food for starving people, or to increase the profits of importers and wholesalers. However, if I hear much more about this outside-of-the-committee method of wrecking a proposal whose advocates have consistently kept it in the open and before the committee, I could be aroused to the point of discussing it on other grounds, as for example, the comparative sanitary conditions of imported dates with dates grown in the United States, and the relative sanitary conditions of the nuts and other products involved. I might even get to the point of calling upon the United States Public Health Service to do those things in this connection which the law requires it to do, but which are apparently overlooked. In fact, Mr. Speaker, if brought to that extreme, I could make this a really interesting discussion.

The letters to which I have referred follow:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 7, 1946.

MY DEAR MR. BAILEY: I have your letter of May 18, 1946, and your similar letter of even date addressed to the President. With your letters you enclosed copies of the resolution adopted by a group of nut growers' and processors' associations asking that the United States representative on the UNRRA oppose exportation of foodstuffs from countries receiving gifts of foodstuffs from the organization and that European countries receiving such gifts prohibit exports of foodstuffs as long as assistance continues.

This resolution in effect attempts to answer the very complex question whether the United States should insist upon diversion of other countries' productive and distributive facilities to emergency food provision as a prior condition to aid. It seems to the Department of State that the answer to this question is not as simple as is suggested in the resolution and that such an extreme policy is contrary to our own best interests.

It is reasonable that the countries in which famine conditions exist should in general utilize their own stocks of foodstuffs before seeking outside assistance and it is my understanding that in planning the supply program for a given area, the UNRRA takes into account all indigenous food supplies, including edible nuts. The relief program provides only the difference between estimated minimum requirements and indigenous supplies. Any export of edible nuts would, therefore, result in a decrease in the total relief provided, since relief supplies would not be increased to offset exports.

It is, however, quite a different matter to ask countries, some of them having at best very low standards of living, to divert their entire output of major export crops of specialty foods to local consumption, since complete prohibition of such exports would curtail the ability of the countries in question to earn foreign exchange needed for the purchase of foreign goods essential to reconstruction and rehabilitation. Any delay in recovery in these countries might easily extend the period of abnormally low staple-food production by aggravating shortages of such things as seed, farm equipment, or building materials which could have been imported and paid for out of the receipts from the sale of export crops abroad. Delayed recovery of normal food production would in turn add to the quantities of American foodstuffs needed for direct relief.

Furthermore, the approach suggested by the resolution is comparable to the still more extreme view that to qualify for relief-food shipments a country should divert all of its agricultural production to foodstuffs. Any attempt to convert land and labor skills normally used for production of goods, such as flax, cordage fibers, rubber, and other non-food specialty crops would result in encouragement of much high-cost and inefficient food production, large net losses in total world production, and a great impetus to agricultural self-sufficiency generally.

Encouragement of agricultural self-sufficiency is quite likely to result in reduction of opportunities for American agricultural exports in the future, when we may again urgently need export markets, since self-sufficiency programs once started are difficult to terminate.

The policy suggested would certainly react disastrously upon our broad program to relax trade barriers in which great hope is being placed, both here and abroad. At present the United States is the leading exponent of this program, and without our leadership and whole-hearted cooperation it could not be carried through. If we now asked other countries to curtail their ability to reestablish more economic patterns of production, they would certainly be unwilling and in most cases unable to contemplate any relaxation of import controls which we might otherwise obtain at the forthcoming conferences on trade and employment. I am sure you know the importance of this program and hope that upon further consideration the associations which have adopted this resolution will appreciate the reasons why a policy of long-run self-interest requires that we promote rather than discourage effective production and expansion of international trade.

For the Secretary of State:

Sincerely yours,

WINTHROP G. BROWN,
Chief, Division of Commercial Policy.

CALIFORNIA ALMOND GROWERS EXCHANGE,
June 12, 1946.

Mr. WINTHROP G. BROWN,
Chief, Division of Commercial Policy,
Department of State,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BROWN: Thank you for your letter of June 7, with your comment on the nut industries' resolution dealing with the exportation of foodstuffs from the food deficit areas of Europe and Asia into food surplus areas such as the United States. I am gratified to note that you call it reasonable to expect that "the countries in which famine conditions exist should in general utilize their own stocks of foodstuffs before seeking outside assistance." Comments on our resolution have come to us from many sources—congressional, editorial, and from individual citizens—all of whom agree on the validity of this basic point.

In your own analysis of our resolution, as expressed in your letter, I believe you have misinterpreted in some degree the intent and nature of our proposal. We do not suggest that a country should "divert all of its agricultural production to foodstuffs." Nor do we ask that the United States should "insist upon diversion of other countries' productive and distributive facilities to emergency food provision as a prior condition to aid." We only question the propriety of food shipments from countries whose citizens are starving and who claim relief from the United Nations.

It is, of course, possible that here on the Pacific coast we have been too seriously impressed with our Government's insistence that people abroad are starving and that every effort must be made to supply them with wheat and meat, even though it may involve the closing of our own flour mills and the liquidation of our own poultry flocks. Our school children are asked to contribute canned goods, a single can, if you please, in order that children abroad may eat. The advertising council, with the approval of the United States Department of Agriculture, has released advertising to drive home the fact that people are starving. The headline on one advertisement asks, "I wonder how many people will starve this year?" and answers this headline with the statement, "The President says maybe even more than during the war."

With these facts in mind, I am sure you will not be surprised at the average American's feeling that the emergency is now, that people are starving now, and that even the Department of State's long-range program to raise the standard of living in other countries, and to promote the resumption of normal international trade, might yield to the pressing and immediate need for food.

We do not believe that the policy we have suggested "would react disastrously" upon your "broad program to relax trade barriers, in which great hope is being placed both here and abroad." In view of the emergency situation mentioned in the preceding paragraph, we are inclined to think that a greater hope might be afforded the hungry people of Europe and Asia if food could be made available to them in sufficient quantities right now. Food is a weapon, we have been told. Surely our leadership in world relief is of equal importance with our long-range program for international trade.

Your interesting letter brings up the subject of dollar exchange. On this point we would suggest two things; first, that the desire of other nations for dollar exchange should not be permitted to disrupt the marketing of domestically produced commodities, and second, that the people now receiving relief supplies cannot eat this dollar exchange. It is our understanding that this country, and all other such fortunate nations, are already making an all-out effort to supply needed foodstuffs. We do not see where the possession of dollar exchange would increase by a single ounce the total volume of food available. The sole question revolves around our available supply of food and this is already stretched to the limit. Under these conditions, may we not rule out the matter of dollar exchange in considering this world food crisis? The only way to increase available supplies in Europe is for Europe to retain and use its own available food supplies.

It seems to us here on the coast that there has been a great deal of misunderstanding about this matter of dollar exchange. We have been led to believe that UNRRA is supplying relief and rehabilitation supplies, not only foods, but seeds, agricultural equipment, and other items necessary to restore the economy of the war-shattered countries. Certainly there are other Government agencies engaged in making monetary gifts or loans to these countries. Surely no hungry nation is required to sell us her own food supplies in order to get dollar exchange.

May I suggest that the Department of State's whole long-range program for international trade involves a philosophy which not only fails to meet the immediate needs abroad, but is regarded by hundreds of thousands of American producers as a threat to their own security. Scores of American industries have already gone on record in direct and complete opposition to the theory that American industry, American farmers, and American labor must compete directly with low-cost peasant and coolie labor abroad, and that the national interest or world interest will in any way be served by the elimination of the countless industries in which our citizens have invested their lives and fortunes. The logical outcome of this policy would make us a nation of specialists, engaged only in certain mass production enterprises, and dependent upon producers abroad who are admittedly more efficient—if low costs due to cheap labor constitute efficiency—in the production of shoes, textiles, chemicals, ceramics, sugar, cotton, wool, and other commodities on which our national life depends.

This present situation, pertaining to the importation of edible nuts, dates, and figs, well illustrates the consequences of such a policy. Due to disturbed currency exchange rates and the total disruption of normal markets for Europe's production of edible nuts within her own borders, the United States market is now being deluged with an unprecedented volume of imports. Estimates for the year's total indicate almond, filbert, and cashew imports amounting to 564 percent, 438 percent, and 122 percent, respectively, of the normal volume during the four prewar years 1935–39. We feel that no other nation in the world would permit its domestic markets to be so disrupted, nor would remain indifferent to the welfare of its own citizens. Nor do we believe that this condition suggests such an attitude on the part of our own Government, but results rather from the failure of Government authorities to fully realize the seriousness of the situation.

We sincerely urge that a constructive approach to this whole situation lies in a common-sense effort to allocate world food supplies into the distressed areas rather than into food surplus areas such as the United States. I believe that our resolution clearly indicates that this allocation is asked only for the duration of the food emergency. While this further statement is not involved in our resolution, we feel that the present dislocation of world markets and the present tendency to dump the world supply of edible nuts on the United States market may well last for a considerably longer period; and some permanent system of import quotas will undoubtedly be necessary if disturbed conditions abroad are not to totally ruin American producers for the purely temporary advantage of foreign producers of similar commodities.

We are enclosing copy of a statement presented on behalf of the edible tree-nut industries to the House Committee on Agriculture May 28, together with a summary statement thereof.

These enclosures will provide certain statistical information which may not have been available to you at the time your letter was written. We sincerely urge a reappraisal of our resolution in the light of the facts contained therein, and are confident that you will agree that action along the lines of the resolution will at least serve in the present crisis to alleviate the critical food supply problem and to afford a temporary measure of protection to our domestic producers.

Yours very truly,

D. R. BAILEY,
General Manager.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, OFFICE OF FOREIGN AGRICULTURAL RELATIONS,
Washington, D. C., May 29, 1946.

Mr. D. R. BAILEY,
General Manager,
California Almond Growers Exchange,
Sacramento, Calif.

DEAR DAVE: Reference is made to your letter of May 20, with which you enclosed a resolution endorsed by the organizations representing the almond, filbert, walnut, and pecan industries regarding the question of the shipment of edible nuts out of countries which are receiving food from abroad.

Your letter and the resolution raise two questions: The first concerns the appropriateness of shipments of nuts out of countries that are deficient in food products generally. The second concerns the effect of the importations of such nuts on the producers in the United States.

As regards the first question, I can inform you that the gist of the matter has been called to the attention of delegates attending the recent meeting held here in Washington under the auspices of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization. I can assure you, also, that the question will be called to the attention of the International Emergency Food Council which was recommended by the conference to be established in the near future. May I point out, however, that nuts have not been under allocation by the Combined Food Board and so far as I know will not be under allocation by the new international food allocating authority.

As regards the second question, that is, the effect of the imports of edible nuts into the United States on the domestic producers of the same or similar nuts, I am unable to find in the record a substantiation of the charge of dumping. It is true that the imports in recent months have been at a higher rate than the imports in the years immediately preceding the war, but they have not been as large as in the early 1930's or in the decade of the twenties. Furthermore, and this is important from the point of view of the charge of dumping, these foreign nuts have been sold at virtually record high levels. The principal reason for the imports, of course, is that prices in this country have been relatively high and importers in the United States and exporters abroad have been desirous of taking advantage of the favorable market conditions here. I might perhaps also add that the dollars which are obtained from the sale of the nuts in the United States are being used by the countries receiving them to purchase essential supplies in this country, including food as well as agricultural products in surplus supply, such as cotton and tobacco.

Sincerely yours,

L. A. WHEELER,
Director.

CALIFORNIA ALMOND GROWERS EXCHANGE,
Sacramento, Calif., June 10, 1946.

Mr. L. A. WHEELER,
Director, Office of Agricultural Relations,
United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR LES: Thank you for your letter of May 29. We are pleased to note that the question of the appropriateness of shipments of nuts out of countries that are deficient in food products generally has been called to the attention of the delegates attending the recent meetings of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization and will be called to the attention of the International Emergency Council.

We have understood that nuts have not been under allocation by the Combined Food Board. It is our understanding that this Board was developed during the war for the allocation of essential commodities in short supply among the Allied Nations. We can readily understand that nuts were not placed under allocation as a war essential commodity, especially since even during the war, nuts were in rather large supply in various parts of the world, with domestic production largely covering our United States needs.

However, it seems to us that the postwar problem, particularly in relation to the alleviation of famine, is substantially different. I am sure no one will question the highly nutritious character of nuts as a food, and the fact that their highly concentrated form facilitates their transportation and distribution. The fact that the calorie-equivalent of nut, fig, and date imports to date amounts to 1,850,000 bushels of wheat indicates that had these secondary foodstuffs been channeled into the starvation areas, a considerable drain on our already overtaxed food supplies might have been avoided. We are sure that American millers, cattle producers, and poultry men will be in complete accord with this statement, and we will continue to urge that world nut supplies should be allocated by the new International Food Board so as to channel them into deficit areas rather than into food-surplus areas such as the United States.

We cannot agree with your statement that imports in recent months "have not been as large as in the early 1930's or in the decade of the twenties." Based on the monthly average for the past 8 or 9 months, the projected importation of the several varieties (except brazils) amounts to over 33,000 tons on a shelled basis for the current-crop year. While imports of brazils are just beginning, your Department has estimated a total supply of 24,000 tons, with indicated imports of 10,000 tons, which would make an indicated total of 43,000 tons of imported nuts during the current-crop year. Such a total compares with an average of 25,273 tons for the period of the early 1930's (1930–33), and with 37,644 tons for the decade of the twenties.

In considering, as you suggest, the effect of these heavy importations on United States producers, it should be remembered that not only is the supply of imported nuts reaching unprecedented levels, but that our domestic production has also increased tremendously since the 1920's. In the 4 years, 1922–25, average annual production of domestic tree nuts was only 23,247 tons; in the 4 years, 1941–44, the annual average was 58,740 tons, or an increase of over 150 percent. Similarly, our current domestic production rate is two-thirds greater than the 25,124-ton average for the period of the early 1930's.

Insofar as almond imports alone are concerned, the volume since September 1, 1945, has exceeded 7,077 tons shelled and 225 tons unshelled, or more in an eight-month period than the total volume of any year during the 1930's. Moreover, tremendous investments in land, machinery, and irrigating facilities have nearly trebled our domestic almond acreage since 1920, and have resulted in domestic production in recent years more than 50 percent over the 1930–39 average and safely in excess of the average total United States supply for the same period, including both imported and domestically produced almonds.

Turning from the supply to the demand side of the picture, it is needless for us to point out the seriousness of the situation when the confectionery trade, which absorbs in the case of almonds some 65 percent of the total United States supply, is seriously affected by shortages of sugar, chocolate, fats and oils, and other essentials.

The effect of importations on United States producers might then be considered to involve a probable weakening in demand on the one hand a vastly increased supply on the other. The total supply of almonds for the next crop year, assuming that imports continue at their present rate, and without counting any carryover, will be approximately 29,000 tons, shelled basis. This consists of 18,000 tons anticipated domestic production and 11,000 tons of imports, or a total 65 percent greater than the total supply of almonds during the decade of the twenties, and more than three times the supply during the years 1934–1941. The filbert situation reflects substantially the same general excess of supply over past consumption.

Perhaps in my letter I did not use the term "dumping" in its technical sense. However, on May 31, the New York Journal of Commerce carried the following information:

"Reports of increased offerings of Italian shelled almonds for shipment, at lower prices, upset the general position of the nut market. * * * Reports were that Italian almonds were priced at around 51 cents."

Similarly, one of the largest importers in the United States wrote me recently to the effect that "the April 11 issue (New York Journal of Commerce) * * * clearly imparts the determination of Italy to export all it can possibly export, and I do say once more that price will be no issue."

Obviously, the producer who sees these Italian almonds offered at some 30 cents per pound under OPA ceilings is inclined to use the term "dumping."

When the domestic producer sees again that the Department of Agriculture has estimated the current Mediterranean almond production at 81,000 tons, shelled, he becomes even more concerned, especially when he knows that the almost complete elimination of normal markets for these nuts in Germany, Holland, Belgium, and the Scandinavian countries has resulted in the domestic market becoming the target for the world crop. We are under no illusions as to the possibility of maintaining what you have termed "relatively high prices" for almonds and other edible nuts, but we sincerely suggest to you that any comparison of present prices with prewar prices is misleading when we consider that grower returns today are made in what some Government officials have termed "a 59-cent dollar."

We have no quarrel with any other nation's desire to secure dollar exchange, although we do not believe that their pursuit of dollar exchange should be allowed to wreck the market for domestically produced commodities. Furthermore, we do not believe that possession of dollar exchange will feed hungry people in the food-deficit areas, nor will it increase by one iota the total volume of food available to the starving people of the world. In other words, we are now making an all-out effort to allocate our already thinly stretched food supply, and all the money in Europe will not increase this food supply by a single ton. So, may we not rule out the matter of dollar exchange as it applies to this world food crisis. We suggest that one way to increase available supplies in Europe is for Europe to retain and use its own stocks of edible nuts, figs, and dates.

Your publication, Foreign Crops and Markets, reports that India has banned peanut exports to conserve for use in India all available food stocks.

Although peanuts do not equal almonds in nutritive value, this action shows India's intention to place the welfare of her people above the considerations of dollar exchange. Logically, this ban should be extended to include cashew nuts.

Recent advertising released by the advertising council and "approved by the United States Department of Agriculture" asks in its headline, "Wonder how many people will starve this year," and continues with the statement, "The President says maybe even more than during the war."

This Government release puts the question bluntly, "How many people will starve?"

Under these conditions we cannot see the propriety of exporting a single pound of food from famine areas, especially not when our Government's desperate efforts to secure relief wheat are closing American flour mills and causing the liquidation of our poultry flocks.

We sincerely urge that a realistic approach to this situation will serve the double purpose of relieving distress conditions both in the famine areas and among our domestic nut industries. We believe that the authorities in Washington have not been fully aware of the supply situation faced by the edible tree nut industries, and particularly by the almond industry. We believe that the official estimates which have been made of both production and imports are far below what we will encounter the coming year. We urge that these estimates be carefully reviewed, and that you reappraise the situation in the light of such revised estimates.

Sincerely yours,

D. R. BAILEY,
General Manager.

P. S.—Since your letter covers a number of very pertinent points, we have taken the liberty of forwarding copies to certain interested authorities, along with copies of this reply. I feel sure this action will meet with your approval.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, PRODUCTION AND MARKETING ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., June 7, 1946.

Mr. D. R. BAILEY,
General Manager, California Almond Growers Exchange,
Sacramento, Calif.

DEAR MR. BAILEY: Your letter of May 18, 1946, to Secretary Anderson, with enclosures relating to the nut import situation, has been referred to us for reply.

We have been giving considerable thought to the prospective tree-nut supply and price situation. On the basis of information available to us now, supplies in the United States for the 1946–47 season, including domestic production and imports, may be more than 10 percent greater than last year's record supply. In view of the prospective supply, some decrease in nut prices may materialize. With the exception of walnuts, prices in recent years have been considerably above parity or comparable prices.

We have brought the nut-import situation as related to world food supplies to the attention of representatives of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration and the Food and Agriculture Organization of United Nations. It appears that among the principal countries of origin of United States nut imports—Spain, Brazil, Turkey, and India—only the latter is considered a famine country. We are informed that shipments of American food to India have been on a commercial basis and have not been donations by UNRRA or the United States Government. It is recognized that Italy, which is a famine country, has, according to recent trade reports, made some nut shipments. In regard to the possibility of channeling nuts from nonfamine countries to the famine countries we understand that UNRRA's policy is to use its funds largely for purchase of foods, such as grains or other basic foods with lower unit costs.

It is our understanding that when you were in Washington the situation regarding nut imports was presented to the House Agricultural Committee for its consideration. We recognize the concern of the industry regarding the prospective supply and price situation and shall do everything we can to help the industry to obtain fair and reasonable prices this year.

Very truly yours,

J. W. PARK,
Dried Fruit Division, Fruit and Vegetable Branch.

CALIFORNIA ALMOND GROWERS EXCHANGE,
June 13, 1946.

Mr. J. W. PARK,
Dried Fruit Division, Fruit and Vegetable Branch, Production and Marketing Administration, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PARK: This will acknowledge your letter of June 7 in answer to our letter of May 18 to Secretary Anderson relating to the nut-import situation. We thoroughly appreciate your concern over the serious problems of oversupply and inevitable price decline faced by all domestic producers of edible tree nuts, and your desire to assist the industry to obtain fair and reasonable prices.

We believe, however, that Washington authorities are not yet fully aware of the extent of this emergency. I make this statement advisedly, and in particular reference to your statement to the effect that "domestic production and imports may be more than 10 percent greater than last year's record supply."

Of course, your phrase, "more than 10 percent," would cover a possible oversupply amounting to 60, 80, or 100 percent, but we suggest that a more accurate picture of the serious problem facing the nut industries will be given if more specific estimates are employed. For instance, estimates for the year's total importations of almonds, filberts, and cashews amount to 564, 438, and 122 percent, respectively, of the volume during the four prewar years 1935–39. Total importations of all edible nuts, including almonds, brazils, walnuts, cashews, and filberts, are currently estimated at 43,000 tons, shelled basis, which total is more than 65 percent above the 26,424-ton average volume of imports for the prewar decade of 1930–39. In the face of this unprecedented volume of imported nuts we have official crop estimates indicating an all-time record domestic production of almonds, and heavy crops of walnuts, pecans, and filberts.

I am sure that the Department of Agriculture is fully aware that still other factors are adding to the gravity of this present emergency. As you know, a certain amount of currency manipulation, plus the complete disruption of normal markets for Mediterranean nut production in Holland, Belgium, England, Germany, and the Scandinavian countries, have combined to make the United States market the target for the entire world's exportable surplus of edible nuts. In view of our domestic production, which averaged 58,740 tons for the period 1941–44 and has increased 150 percent over the 1922–25 average and more than 65 percent over the 1930–33 average, it is obvious that serious marketing difficulties must occur if some immediate action is not taken, especially in view of the fact that shortages of sugar, oil, and other items have adversely affected the market for domestically produced nuts in the confectionery and nut-salting trades, which normally absorb so large a portion of our crop.

From the foregoing, it should be apparent that the phrase, "more than 10 percent," is dangerously vague and fails completely to give an accurate picture of the supply-demand problem facing our producers.

We are under no illusions as to the possibility of maintaining the edible nut market at its present level. However, we suggest that any comparison of present price levels with those prevailing in the prewar years should be considered in comparison with what some Government officials have termed our present "59 cent dollar." As a matter of fact, domestic producers of edible tree nuts have enjoyed a considerably smaller price increase over the prewar years than have producers of other basic and specialty crops.

We are aware of the fact that Spain, Turkey, and India have been the source of most of our nut imports during the past year. I believe you will find that our correspondence to date has not included Brazil on this list. As your records will show, very small quantities of Brazil nuts have reached this country, and these only in recent months. You undoubtedly know, however, that the Department of Agriculture estimates that some 10,000 tons of Brazil's current production may be expected to appear in the American market during the next few months.

Although the nut industries have felt that their position had been made completely clear, it is evident that considerable misunderstanding has developed as to their specific request for a diversion of nut imports. May we emphasize here our belief that world supplies of edible nuts, dates, figs, and all foodstuffs should be channeled into the general food deficit areas rather than into food surplus areas such as the United States. Congressional opinion, editorial opinion, and public opinion have been uniformly in accord with us on this issue.

With respect to your statement that UNRRA's policy is to use its fund largely for the purchase of food such as grain and other basic foods with lower unit costs, I would like to call to your attention the following tabulation:

Foreign-cost almonds compared with cost of equivalent food value in export commodities

Almonds, 1 pound, cost in Italy	$0.31
Equivalent food value in:
Wheat flour	.10
Canned ham	.6726
Canned pressed pork	.7095
Fresh meat, round, grade A	.9058
Fresh meat, round, grade B	.7254

Again I want to thank you for your sympathetic attitude toward our problem. We are confident that once the seriousness of the surpluses of edible tree nuts is thoroughly appreciated by the United States Department of Agriculture, we can expect immediate action to alleviate what will otherwise develop into a deplorable market condition.

Yours very truly,

D. R. BAILEY,
General Manager.

P. S.—Since your letter covers a number of very pertinent points, we have taken the liberty of forwarding copies to certain interested authorities, along with copies of this reply. I feel sure this action will meet with your approval.

D. R. B.

(Mr. PHILLIPS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include tables and letters.)

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. NORBLAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JOHN J. DELANEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORBLAD. Mr. Speaker, may I compliment the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] on his excellent presentation to the House. He has covered the field so thoroughly that there is little that I can add by way of statistics covering the general situation.

I do wish, however, to call the attention of the House to the fact that this situation is seriously affecting the orchardists of the State of Oregon and particularly those in the fertile Willamette Valley. Thousands of people in Yamhill, Marion, Washington, Clackamas, Polk, and Benton Counties depend upon this industry for their livelihood and unless these edible foreign nuts are consumed in the European market and their import to this country stopped, very serious harm will be done to our own people. It seems absurd to me to ship great quantities of foodstuffs to Europe and yet allow ever-increasing imports of edible nuts, which are so rich in vitamins and protein content.

It is not my desire to demand that the people of Europe should exist on these edible nuts alone as that is of course out of the question but certainly they can be used to supplement their other foodstuffs.

Our present policy which allows for importation far in excess of the prewar figure not only deprives the people of Europe of food but will place the edible nut industry in the position which it held but a few years ago. And that position was not a healthy one. As an example may I cite a personal case. My father-in-law purchased an orchard at Dundee, Oreg., shortly after the First World War for a figure in excess of $10,000. The orchard retained its value for some several years thereafter but then started to gradually diminish in value. By 1936 the valuation on this property was such that it was, in common with others, of no value for sale purposes. A few years later he disposed of it for about $2,000 after all the years of work which he put on this property. During recent years this property, along with others in the Willamette Valley, has produced a decent living and reasonable margin of profit and will continue to do so unless our Government permits continuation of these European imports.

All we ask is that our people be permitted to continue their right to make a decent living and at the same time that European nations are not allowed to build up their dollar exchange at the expense of both their starving people and the American farmer.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, it is almost 6 o'clock. It has been a hard day. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on next Thursday instead of this afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JUNE 21, 1946

(Legislative day of Tuesday, March 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, who renewest our sight with the fresh gladness of the morning, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth! Through the changing pageant of nature with form and color which thrill the senses, Thou makest Thyself known to us; for beauty is but Thy handwriting. Through shining lives of men and women that rise in moral splendor even as lowly vines climb to blossoming glory, we glimpse the heights of Thy holiness. We give Thee thanks for all interpreters of Thy mind who, with brush or pen or uttered word, bring even one more syllable of reality, one more gleam of the truth which makes men free.

In this our Father's world, while striving in the day's heat valiantly as men, may we keep our faith simple and our hearts happy as children. In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

INCLUSION OF RELIGIOUS FREEDOM IN INTERPRETATION OF "FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS" BY UNITED NATIONS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 290), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas thousands of men and women, hoping for an escape from persecution in other lands, sought during our colonial period an asylum in this country; and

Whereas the adoption of the first 10 amendments to our Federal Constitution in 1791 assured to the citizens of the United States certain fundamental freedoms, which the Government was denied the right ever to invade, among which was the freedom of religion; and

Whereas the extension of fundamental freedoms to all men everywhere is recognized in the Charter of the United Nations as one of the primary objectives to be earnestly sought for; and

Whereas the American tradition embodied in our basic law, includes freedom of religion as of first importance among the recognized fundamental freedoms: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States approve in principle Article VII in Woodrow Wilson's proposed draft of the Covenant of the League of Nations made in 1919 to the Paris Peace Conference which is as follows:

"Recognizing religious persecution and intolerance as fertile sources of war, the powers signatory hereby agree, and the League of Nations shall exact from all states asking admission to it, the promise that they will make no law prohibiting or interfering with the free exercise of religion, and that they will in no way discriminate, either in law or in fact, against those who practice any particular creed, religion, or belief, whose practices are not inconsistent with public order or public peace."

And be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to direct our representatives in the United Nations Organization to so interpret the words, "fundamental freedoms" as to include freedom of religion, and to take such action as may be necessary to secure as soon as possible favorable action upon this interpretation by the Assembly of the United Nations, to the end that religious persecution by any civil state may be outlawed throughout the world.

"'(b) Each man inducted on and after October 1, 1946, under the provisions of subsection (a) shall serve for a period of training and service of eighteen consecutive months (excluding time served while pursuing a course of instruction in a university, college, or other similar institution of learning), unless sooner discharged. Each man inducted prior to October 1, 1946, under the provisions of subsection (a) who shall have completed a period of training and service under this Act of 18 months or more (excluding time served while pursuing a course of instruction in a university, college, or other similar institution of learning) shall, upon his request, on and after such date, be relieved from his period of training and service under this Act. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, whenever, after January 1, 1946, the Congress declares that the national interest is imperiled, such periods of training and service may be extended by the President to such time as may be necessary in the interest of national defense.'

"SEC. 4. Section 3 (e) of such Act, as amended, is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 5. (a) Section 5 (e) (1) of such Act, as amended, is hereby amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof the following new sentence: 'No person shall be deferred for employment in industry except upon the basis of his then status in an industry essential to the national health, safety, or interest.'

"(b) Section 5 (e) (3) of such Act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(3) After May 14, 1946, no individual who has a child or children dependent upon him for support, or with whom he maintains a bona fide family relationship in their home, shall be inducted without his consent for training and service under this Act. As used in this paragraph, the term "child" includes a child legally adopted, a stepchild, a foster child, and a person who is supported in good faith by the individual in a relationship similar to that of a parent and child but such term does not include any person eighteen years of age or over unless such person is physically or mentally handicapped.'

"(c) Section 5 (e) of such Act, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'(4) Any man inducted under the provisions of section 3 (a) of this Act who has a child or children, as hereinabove defined, dependent upon him for support, or with whom he maintains a bona fide family relationship in their home, shall, upon his request after August 1, 1946, be relieved from his period of training and service under this Act.

"'(5) No individual shall be inducted without his consent for training and service under this Act, if he has served on active duty in the land or naval forces of the United States outside the continental limits of the United States or in Alaska; or if he has served on active duty in the land or naval forces of the United States for a period of at least six months after September 16, 1940 (excluding the time that any such individual so served while pursuing a course of instruction in a university, college, or other similar institution of learning). The provisions of this paragraph shall cease to be effective during any period after January 1, 1946, when the Congress or the President shall declare that the national interest is imperiled.'

"SEC. 6. Section 5 (m) of such Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(m) No individuals shall be called for induction, ordered to report to induction stations, or be inducted because of their occupations, or by occupational groups, or by groups in any plant or institutions, except pursuant to a requisition by the land or naval forces for persons in needed medical professional and specialists categories.'

"SEC. 7. Section 16 (b) of such Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) The provisions of the third sentence of section 3 (a) of this Act shall become inoperative and cease to apply at twelve o'clock post meridian on July 1, 1947. All of the other provisions of this Act, except the provisions of sections 3 (b), 3 (c), 3 (d), 8, and 16 (b), and the fourth and fifth provisos of the second sentence of section 3 (a), shall become inoperative and cease to apply at twelve o'clock post meridian on March 31, 1947, or on such earlier date as may be specified in a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress for that purpose, except as to offenses committed prior to such date. One day prior to the date of the termination of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, as herein or hereafter specified, all remaining functions and responsibilities of the Personnel Division established under the authority of section 8 (g) of such Act, and all records and balances of appropriations which have been utilized or are available for use in the administration of such functions of the Personnel Division of the Selective Service System, shall be transferred to such agency of the Federal Government as the Congress may designate, or, if none is so designated, to such agency of the Federal Government as the President may designate.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6084) to amend the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, so as to provide an increase in pay for personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(c) Section 11 of the Act of March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. 1274; 34 U. S. C. 701), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) Retired members of the band of the United States Marine Corps and former members of the band of the United States Marine Corps heretofore transferred to the Fleet Marine Corps Reserve shall have their retired pay and retainer pay computed as now authorized by law on the basis of the pay provided in section 11 of the Act of March 4, 1925, as amended by subsection (c) of this Act, which pay shall include increases for all active duty performed since retirement or transfer to the Fleet Marine Corps Reserve in the computation of their longevity pay: Provided, That nothing contained in this Act shall operate to reduce the present pay of any former member of the band of the United States Marine Corps now on the retired list or drawing retainer pay.

"Sec. 2. (a) The second and third paragraphs of section 8 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) The seventh paragraph of section 8 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

" 'When the total pay and allowances authorized by this section for any person shall exceed the rate of $550 per month, the amount of the allowances to which such person is entitled shall be reduced by the amount above $550.'

"SEC. 3. The first paragraph of section 7 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

Every such officer shall be entitled to the money allowances for subsistence and for rental of quarters authorized in sections 5 and 6 of this Act for officers receiving the pay of the sixth period.'

"SEC. 4. The second paragraph of section 1 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

'The first period, $2,160; the second period, $2,400; the third period, $2,760; the fourth period, $3,300; the fifth period, $3,850; and the sixth period, $4,400.'

"SEC. 5. The increases in pay resulting from the amendments made by this Act to the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable to the active duty, retired, retirement, or retainer pay of all persons whose pay is governed by, or by reference to, those sections of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended, which are amended by this Act.

"SEC. 6. Hereafter the retired or retirement pay of any person whose name is borne on the emergency officers' retired list of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States and who is entitled to receive retired or retirement pay shall, in lieu of being computed upon the basis of the pay to which he was entitled at the time of his discharge from his commissioned service, be computed upon the basis of the rate provided in the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, as amended by this Act, for an officer of corresponding grade who is credited with the same number of years of service for longevity purposes as the number with which such person is credited.

"SEC. 7. The increases in pay provided by this Act shall become effective on the first day of the first calendar month following its enactment, and no increase in pay for any period prior thereto shall accrue by reason of the enactment of this Act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, Mr. KIRWAN, Mr. NORRELL, Mr. GORE, Mr. JONES, Mr. JENSEN, and Mr. DWORSHAK were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, yesterday several amendments to the Navy Department appropriation bill were passed over. I now refer to the amendment to section 109 on page 43 and ask that it be considered.

I may say, Mr. President, that is an amendment known as the Overton amendment and has been in appropriation bills for a number of years, and has been from time to time amended. As it is presently written in the Navy Department appropriation bill it appears in the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which has been passed by the Senate and the conference report agreed to by both Houses. It also appears in the third urgent deficiency bill which has been approved by both Houses; in the legislative bill as passed by the Senate; in the District of Columbia appropriation bill as passed by the Senate; and in the Interior Department appropriation bill as passed by the Senate. Certainly it ought to remain in the Navy Department appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 43, after line 2, it is proposed to strike out:

SEC. 109. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

And in lieu thereof, to insert:

SEC. 109. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, another amendment passed over is on page 39, lines 19 to 24, which is known as the stop-watch amendment. The amendment to the provision in the bill—a provision which has been incorporated in previous Navy Department appropriation bills—prohibits the use of the stop-watch—and this is the amendment—

Unless representatives of the employees are given the opportunity to check any such time studies as may affect the amount of work asked of them and to protest under the established grievance procedure any work requirements believed unreasonable.

It was thought in the committee that this would make a very workable provision because under it the Navy Department would have to work in cooperation with labor and its representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the amendment was passed over at the request of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON].

Mr. OVERTON. It was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Another amendment passed over—there are two of them—are to be found on page 13, lines 18 to 21. I doubt if there will be any controversy in respect to that amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the two amendments are related, are they not?

Mr. OVERTON. They are related.

Mr. WHITE. It seems to me that there is sufficient controversy about them that there ought to be a quorum present.

Mr. OVERTON. I have no objection at all, and I was going to make that suggestion.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Capper	Gerry
Andrews	Carville	Gossett

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, there are two amendments appearing on page 13 of the pending bill. The first amendment that should be considered is the second amendment on the page.

While the bill was pending in the House there was inserted on the floor of the House a proviso to this effect:

Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the manufacture, assembly, repair, or overhaul of torpedoes at the Naval Ordnance Plant, Forest Park, Ill.

The effect of that amendment, of course, would be to dispense with the manufacture of torpedoes at the plant at Forest Park, Ill. That plant is built for that purpose, and the result would be to put the plant in grease.

On the other hand, for many years torpedoes have been manufactured at Newport, R. I. During the war the Navy Department concluded that it was necessary to have an additional torpedo plant. So a plant was constructed at Forest Park, adjoining the city of Chicago. The Forest Park plant is modern and, according to the testimony, one of the best in the world for the manufacture of torpedoes. The plant at Newport is not so modern. It has grown and expanded from time to time, but is not so modern as is the plant at Forest Park.

The Navy Department recommended that the provision which was inserted on the floor of the House be stricken from the bill, because representatives of the Department said in effect that better torpedoes and at less cost could be constructed and were being constructed at Forest Park than at Newport, and that it would be in the interest of the Navy Department and of the Government that the plant at Forest Park should be continued in operation. The committee apparently arrived at the same conclusion, and determined that it would be to the best interest of the Government that the plant at Forest Park be continued.

There is no necessity for both plants. Therefore the manufacturing of torpedoes at Newport would be discontinued if the plant at Forest Park were continued. However, at the Newport plant there are two activities in connection with torpedoes which still remain. One is designing and the other is testing. Therefore the continuance of the Forest Park plant would not operate as a complete closure of the Newport plant. It would continue in operation for the purpose of designing and testing torpedoes, which is a very substantial part of the activities at that plant.

There is quite a controversy between Rhode Island and Illinois in connection with the matter. The details of the situation will be presented to the Senate by the two able Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. BROOKS] in behalf of the Forest Park plant, and the two equally able Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN and Mr. GERRY] on the part of Rhode Island and Newport.

However, I wish to make this observation: I believe that in any event the language inserted by the committee in lines 18 to 21 should be retained. The language is as follows:

Of which $350,000 shall be available for placing the equipment at the naval torpedo station, Newport, R. I., in condition for operation.

If the provision which the House inserted, which is destructive of the Chicago plan, should be retained in conference, the Government then would have to go to Newport to continue the manufacture of torpedoes. It would be necessary that $350,000 be immediately spent at that plant in order that it might properly continue in the manufacture of torpedoes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In connection with the last statement made by the able Senator from Louisiana, I should like to propound this question: In the event the Senate should sustain the report of the Senate Committee on Appropriations to strike out lines 21 to 24, and the bill should go to conference with the amendment containing the $350,000 available for placing the equipment at the naval torpedo station at Newport, R. I., in condition to operate, would the conferees have the right to strike out the $350,000 in the event they should fail to sustain the position of the Senators from Rhode Island?

Mr. OVERTON. Certainly. In the event that the Senate should agree to the committee amendment striking out lines 21 to 24, and that were agreed to in conference, the conferees, I assume, would strike out the $350,000 allocation to continue operations at Newport.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, when the naval appropriation bill was under discussion in the House of Representatives, Representative FORAND, of Rhode Island, offered an amendment to the appropriation for the Bureau of Ordnance, as follows:

Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the manufacture, assembly, repair, or overhaul of torpedoes at the naval ordnance plant, Forest Park, Ill.

This amendment was adopted and is part of the bill as it came from the House. When the bill was under consideration by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, the Navy Department, in a letter to the chairman of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, suggested that this item be deleted from the bill. However, the subcommittee voted to retain the item in the bill. Later the full committee voted to delete it.

The Newport Naval Torpedo Station was established in 1869 and continually since that date, that is, for about 77 years, has designed, manufactured, repaired, overhauled, and tested torpedoes for the Navy with the greatest efficiency and success. During the War the Navy Department established an additional plant at Forest Park, in Illinois, and this was operated by the American Can Co. When hostilities ceased, the members of the Rhode Island congressional delegation, because of rumors that the Forest Park plant was to supplant the Newport plant for manufacturing torpedoes, conferred many times with officials of the Navy Department relative to this matter. At these conferences the Navy Department for a long time withheld information from us, at the same time carrying out a policy it had adopted, and which had not been approved by the Congress. That policy is based on the claim that the Navy Department has the right to abandon any naval establishment—temporary or permanent, and whether or not established by or with the approval of the Congress—and to establish new plants as substitutes without the authority of the Congress.

Admiral Hussey even went so far at a hearing of a subcommittee as to assert that the Navy Department could close the Naval Academy at Annapolis just as they did the torpedo manufacturing plant at Newport. To quote him directly from the hearings on this bill at pages 227 and 228, I quote as follows:

Admiral HUSSEY. I would consider it certainly within the Secretary's authority, reverting to the school question, to close the school when there was no longer any need for it without feeling that it had to come to Congress and ask for authority.

Senator GREEN. Would they have authority to close Annapolis?

Admiral HUSSEY. If the need could be met some other way; yes, sir.

Apart from this general policy, with which I disagree, and which I believe should be considered carefully by the Congress, there are other phases of the matter which I should touch upon.

What has actually happened at Newport is that thousands of permament civil service employees who have given the best years of their lives to the Government, many of whom have worked at the naval torpedo station for 20, 25, yes, even 30 years, were thrown out of work, with only the short 30 days notice required by law. These include men who have regarded their work at the torpedo station as their life work, who have established homes, bought and mortgaged houses in Newport. These include men who wanted to enter the armed services, but were urged by their superiors not to leave the torpedo station, on the ground that they could render greater service to their country there. They include men who did enter the armed service, and after years of service were honorably discharged, and came back to Newport and were told there was no more work for them there. It must be remembered in this connection that this torpedo station is the only manufacturing establishment in or near Newport, and that all of these men, young and old, civilians and veterans, are forced to seek work elsewhere. These men are not covered by present civil service retirement laws except in a few special instances, and they would have to forfeit the retirement benefits to which they had been looking forward.

In contrast to this, the Navy Department recommended at the new Forest Park establishment, which was manned by employees of the American Can Co., the blanketing in of all these American Can Co. employees, designated "war service employees," without any examination whatever. The Civil Service Commission complied with this request.

As a result, long-time employees at Newport with 20 or 30 years of honorable service, are out of work, while war-service employees at Forest Park with only 2, 3, or 4 years' service, have now permanent jobs. This is most unfair; and the civil service employees in New England, who know these facts, are coming to the conclusion that there is no future in working for the Government. It is true that the Civil Service Commission has recommended the enactment of legislation which would, in part, care for these employees. However, as yet Congress has done nothing at all to enact such legislation.

It may be true that in peacetime there is not enough call for torpedoes to warrant the maintenance of both the Newport torpedo station and the Forest Park plant in operation. They both might be needed in time of war, and for that case one of them should be placed in grease as a stand-by plant.

Many times, at hearings and conferences, Navy officials have led the Rhode Island congressional delegation to believe that the Newport plant would be kept intact and would be used as such a stand-by plant. However, within the last week it has been called to my attention that the War Assets Administration is to conduct a sale at Newport, and that prime metals, machinery, tools, some production equipment, and some miscellaneous materials are to be sold.

Admiral Hussey, chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, definitely assured Representative FORAND, of Rhode Island, this very week that no machinery was to be sold at Newport. Let me read you a letter from Mr. FORAND I have just received:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1946.

Hon. THEODORE F. GREEN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GREEN: Because I know of your deep interest in our efforts to secure resumption of torpedo work at the naval torpedo station, Newport, R. I., I am sure you will be interested to know that after I learned on last Sunday of the report circulated in Newport that the machinery at the torpedo station was to be declared surplus and sold by the War Assets Administration, I talked with Admiral Hussey of the Navy Department on Monday morning and told him that word had been received in Newport that $3,500,000 worth of torpedo manufacturing equipment at the station was to be declared surplus, that it was being cataloged, and scheduled to be disposed of at an on-the-spot sale beginning June 24.

Admiral Hussey emphatically told me that the report was false, that there was no foundation for the rumor and that the Navy's policy relative to the torpedo station had not changed.

I then asked him if I was safe to say that the report was false and that there was no foundation for the rumor and he stated "definitely so."

In view of the persistence of the rumor a resolution was adopted by the Board of Aldermen of the City of Newport on June 15 and a copy was sent to my office which I in turn transmitted on yesterday to the Secretary of the Navy with a request that he furnish me promptly with the facts concerning this reported sale of the machinery at the torpedo station as surplus equipment.

I am furnishing you with this information so that we may continue to work together in our efforts to restore torpedo manufacturing to Newport.

Sincerely yours,

AIME J. FORAND,
Member of Congress.

It is difficult to reconcile this letter from Representaive FORAND with another letter I have also just received, dated June 19, from Lt. Gen. E. B. Gregory, Administrator of the War Assets Administration. The letter reads as follows:

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1946.

Hon. THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GREEN: The following information is given in answer to your telegram of June 18.

As of May 30, 1946, our regional office at Boston had on hand in its inventory account surplus property located at the Newport Naval Torpedo Station having a declared cost of approximately $1,350,600. It consists principally of prime metals, some production equipment, and miscellaneous materials.

On March 11, 1946, Rear Adm. C. H. Cotter, Vice Chief of Material Division, Navy Department, transmitted to us a list of naval activities by States recommended for site sales. That list included the Naval Torpedo Station at Newport under category 2 of the priority clearance group for naval installations.

This Administration has tentatively scheduled a site sale at the Newport Naval Torpedo Station for August 12. Preparations for the sale are scheduled to begin June 24.

Sincerely yours,

E. B. GREGORY,
Administrator.

Let me also read to you, Mr. President, in this connection a memorandum dated June 18 from former Representative W. S. Jacobsen, now the Senate liaison officer for the War Assets Administration. The memorandum reads as follows:

WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., June 18, 1946.

Memorandum for Senator GREEN:

This concerns your inquiry regarding the naval torpedo station at Newport, R. I.

According to information obtained for Col. Matthew Robinson, Deputy Administrator for the Office of Acquisitions, the War Assets Administration has received information from the Navy Department that the unremoved equipment and material at the above station, consisting of metals, machinery and tools, was surplus as of May 31.

The amount declared surplus at annex No. 1 is $1,423,000; the amount at Goat Island is $1,000,000.

WAA is now conducting site sales throughout the country, and I am advised that a tentative date for the sale at Newport, R. I., has been set for August 12 through Ocober 12.

W. S. JACOBSEN.

Mr. President, in view of Admiral Hussey's statement to Representative FORAND, I trust that he will take steps to cancel the sale referred to by the War Assets Administration.

In this connection I present a resolution sent me by the board of aldermen of the city of Newport. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Board of Aldermen in session assembled request that the War Assets Administration, Regional Director, Boston, Mass., and the chief of the Rhode Island office of the War Assets Administration be requested to defer any contemplated sale of the machinery at the Naval Torpedo Station at Newport, R. I., until after the passage of the naval appropriation bill and same is signed by the President of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a conference be arranged between the mayor of the city of Newport and the chairman of the representative council with the officials of the War Assets Administration so that the city of Newport may have an opportunity to present the reasons for this request.

In board of aldermen, June 15, 1946.

A true copy. Attest:

HENRY B. WHALEN,
City Clerk.

The claim is made that the Forest Park plant is modern and fully equipped. This is probably true, but it must be remembered that much machinery has been shipped from the Newport Torpedo Station to Forest Park. I wish to add further that it was the skilled and trained experts of the Newport torpedo manufacturing plant who trained the supervisors and employees at the Forest Park establishment. Those same experts are now thrown out of work at Newport while those whom they trained are operating at the Forest Park plant.

Furthermore, Mr. President, it might be well to call to the attention of the Senate that the Navy Department officials have stated that the Newport plant would still be used as a research center. In view of their previous reports it is hard for me to understand what the Navy plans to do with the naval establishment at Newport. If they do use Newport as a research unit, the torpedoes will be designed there and the plans and specifications shipped to Forest Park, where they will be manufactured, and then the torpedoes will be shipped back to Newport for testing in the salt water of Narragansett Bay, and in most cases loaded on ships there. This is far from practical, and it is not good business. It is a costly arrangement for the Government to adopt.

I am making this statement that my colleagues in the Senate may fully understand the significance of this abandonment by the Navy Department of this old naval institution established and maintained by Congress for 77 years and the substitute for it of a new establishment elsewhere without the knowledge, consent, or approval of the Congress.

Mr. LUCAS obtained the floor.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Rhode Island. Does the Senator have any objection to the committee amendment on page 13, allocating $350,000 for the equipment of the naval torpedo station at Newport?

Mr. GREEN. No.

Mr. OVERTON. May I ask the Senator from Illinois if he has any objection to the amendment?

Mr. LUCAS. I have no objection to the amendment. If the Senate sustains the position of the Appropriations Committee in its amendment in line 21, the $350,000 item will be deleted.

Mr. GREEN. I do not wish that statement to be misconstrued later. It seems to me that the conference committee has the right to accept either one of these proposals, or to deny either one of them.

Mr. OVERTON. The conference committee will have the right, but I think the logical procedure would be to delete the $350,000 item.

Mr. GREEN. All that is a matter for the conference committee to decide.

Mr. OVERTON. It is for the conference committee to decide, but I should like to dispose of the first amendment if there be no objection to it. I refer to the amendment on page 13, in line 18, beginning after the word "Maryland," and ending in line 21 with the word "operation."

Mr. LUCAS. Before we dispose of the amendment, I may say that it would seem to me, as I understand the situation, that it would cost the Government $350,000 to open up the plant in Newport.

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct. If the plant at Chicago is abandoned under the House provision, it will cost $350,000 to equip the plant at Newport.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 13, in line 18, beginning after the word "Maryland," and ending in line 21 with the word "operation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The clerk will state the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, beginning in line 21, it is proposed to strike out: "Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the manufacture, assembly, repair, or overhaul of torpedoes at the Naval Ordnance Plant, Forest Park, Ill."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I listened very attentively to the argument and discussion made by my very good friend from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], and from that argument I reached the conclusion that the able Senators from Rhode Island want the station at Newport maintained primarily because it was established there in 1869. Everyone is proud of antiquities in his State, and I can understand why the two distinguished Senators from Rhode Island desire to keep this plant in existence in Rhode Island; but, Mr. President, in this modern world, time does move on; change takes place; nothing remains static, and when the time comes that a plant, wherever it may be located, is inadequate to do the job which is necessary from the standpoint of national defense, no argument, either on the ground of age or location or anything else, can challenge the position that at the very least it should be supplemented.

It is admitted and undisputed that the Forest Park plant, located in Chicago, Ill., is the most modern and best equipped from the standpoint of modern machine tools for the production of torpedoes of any plant that exists in the world.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the torpedo plant at Forest Park, Ill., is now manufacturing an electric torpedo that cannot be manufactured anywhere else in the United States, not even at Newport.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Is it not true that some of the machinery was taken from Newport and sent to Forest Park, and that that is the reason why today the Forest Park plant is better equipped?

Mr. LUCAS. I do not understand that to be the case. I understood that certain tools, jigs, dies, and other facilities were transported from the Newport plant to the Forest Park plant, but so far as the electric torpedo is concerned, that is something new, something which is being experimented with for the national defense.

Mr. President, why was the plant at Forest Park built in the first place? It was built there during the war because the Congress of the United States, and every responsible individual who was interested in national defense, felt that as a matter of safety and security plants which were making weapons and instruments of war should be scattered here and there throughout the United States. So this torpedo plant, at a cost of $21,000,000, was placed near the city of Chicago, and is still operating.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that it is my understanding that parts of the torpedoes which are assembled at the Forest Park plant are not manufactured there. I refer to the electrical parts.

Mr. LUCAS. All I know is what Admiral Hussey says, and what the testimony shows with respect to that. There is no doubt that the record shows that the electric torpedoes are being made in the Forest Park plant near the city of Chicago, and that is the only place in America where they are being made. If I can read the English language, I think that is what Admiral Hussey said.

Mr. President, we do not consider in this debate the relative interest or advantages between Rhode Island and Illinois. It is a question which involves the security and the safety of the entire Nation. That is all there is to the question. The Senate only last week voted to continue to have boys 18 and 19 years old taken in under selective service. Why was that done? It was because we have commitments which we have made in the past, growing out of the war, and because of conditions now prevailing throughout the world we desire to continue to be ready for any emergency which might arise.

I am told that today there are more men under arms throughout the world than there were in 1939, when World War II broke out; yet because a plant has been in existence since 1869, though it is now considered out of date by the best experts of the Navy, and who, having the country's interests at heart, desire to continue the torpedo plant near Chicago, Ill., there are those who want us to go back to the old way of doing things.

I am a little surprised that my distinguished and close friend from Rhode Island, who is as tolerant and possessed of such a world-wide outlook on international and national affairs, cannot see the great advantage of keeping this plant as it is at the present time, rather than putting it in grease, as the amendment would do. Once this plant is put in grease, that will be the end of it; it will not be a stand-by plant; it will become surplus property, and in view of the way the industries are now bidding for plants, the Navy will not have any trouble in disposing of that plant, with all its fine equipment and the tools which are in it.

There is no proposal to take away from the Newport plant everything that is there. The Navy proposes to leave two of the main departments, two of the important and up-to-date departments which have to do with designing, research and the testing of torpedoes.

The Senator from Rhode Island has made an eloquent plea for men who have worked all their lives in the plant at Newport and who might be thrown out of employment. Under the Navy plan, the Rhode Island plant will take just 600 fewer employees. Before the matter is ended, under the Veterans' Preference Act which was passed in 1944 most of those 600 will be replaced within a short time by veterans of World War II if Admiral Hussey's testimony is correct. And what is going on in Newport with respect to the application of the Veterans' Preference Act is going on all over the United States in similar plants.

What about the torpedo the Navy is making in Illinois? What about a comparison with respect to the cost, for instance? Let us consider merely one little item. The testimony shows that the average cost in Forest Park was $7,914.08, while at Newport, with the old equipment which had to be used, the torpedoes cost on an average $9,040 apiece. In other words, it was not a question of the skill of the men employed in the Newport plant. The sole question was one of having up-to-date equipment with which to do the work, and do it more economically and faster.

Mr. President, we need everything we can get to keep this country in a strong condition, in the face of present world conditions.

Much has been said in the debate, and was said before the Committee on Appropriations, about the cost of transporting the torpedoes from the plant in Chicago to the Atlantic coast. There is no torpedo plant on the Pacific coast at the present time. A great number of the torpedoes necessarily will have to be sent to the fleet, or to the proving grounds along the coast of the Pacific. If the question of cost should enter into the conclusions of Senators, remember the savings in shipping from Chicago to the west coast rather than from Newport to the west coast. But I submit the question of costs is only incidental. It is solely a question of whether or not the Senate and the House of Representatives want to keep our war equipment up-to-date, so far as the development of torpedoes is concerned. That seems to me to be the basic question.

Yet, if the Forest Park plant is dismantled and the work is concentrated at Newport or elsewhere along the Atlantic coast, the plant there will be vulnerable to attack. It is said that under modern conditions any plant anywhere is just as vulnerable as at any other place, from the standpoint of an attack by an enemy. That premise I seriously challenge. The real reason such plants were dispersed during the war was that, scattered, they would be less vulnerable to destruction by the enemy. The responsible officials tried to decentralize our industries in between the Rockies and the Alleghenies to a great extent, as a matter purely of safety and security of the plants from attack from without.

What happened to this question in the House of Representatives? How does this amendment get before us, Mr. President? The Committee on Appropriations had nothing to do with the amendment in the House of Representatives. The members of that committee did not consider the amendment which would prohibit the spending of any money in making torpedoes in Forest Park, Ill. At least, if the Rhode Island delegation appeared before the committee at that time, the committee paid no attention to their pleas. But, finally, when the appropriation bill came to the floor of the House, an amendment was offered by Representative FORAND, who said:

> We are simply asking that this new, temporary plant out there in Forest Park be put in grease.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas said:

> The gentleman means he would close up a $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 plant—the best one the Bureau of Ordnance has—and let it go to pot?

Mr. President, the vote on that question was 36 for the amendment and 27 against the amendment. Only 63 Members of the House of Representatives voted on that amendment—only 63 Representatives could be found to vote on such a vital amendment.

When the bill came to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, that committee, by a vote of 14 to 5, said that the Navy's position was sound, and that the plant should be left at Forest Park. This is in accord with what Admiral Hussey said in his report, and I quote from his statement:

> The Department is of the firm belief that it is to the best interest of national defense to carry out the manufacture, repair, and overhaul of torpedoes at the Forest Park plant and strongly recommends that the proviso quoted above be deleted.

Mr. President, I submit with all the sincerity I possess that the Navy Department is not attempting to discriminate against any section of the Nation. These men, who have been trained for the particular purpose of taking care of the country in great emergencies, are interested only in giving to the country the best that planning can give. Mr. President, in my opinion, this question should not have been brought here at all by an amendment of this character upon the appropriation bill, in view of what the Navy has said in its testimony before the various committees.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. If this language, which was put in the bill by the House, is left in the bill, does that mean the abandonment and complete uselessness of this plant?

Mr. LUCAS. I will say to my able friend from West Virginia that this plant would immediately be placed in grease, as it is said. That means it would be shut down. What would happen to that plant in the future is a serious question. I undertake to say that if the Congress tells the Navy, "We want only one torpedo plant in this country to make torpedoes in time of peace, and we by our vote say: We want that plant to go to Newport, R. I.," then that plant near Chicago, in which we have an investment of some $21,000,000, will, in my judgment, be given to the surplus-property group for disposition. When that is done, out goes the finest plant that genius and capacity and industry has ever been able to build for making torpedoes. That is what I am talking about. I am not making the plea for Illinois. I am making the plea for my country. I am making the plea for national defense. If I look to our future I cannot overlook any element of security.

Mr. President, on the question of employment much can be said for both plants, if Senators want to argue that point. At the present time some 500 returned veterans from World War II are now working in the Illinois plant, and according to the telegram which I received from the American Legion post which has been organized at that plant, before the end of the year some 900 of the 1,200 employees in this plant, will be veterans of World War II.

Mr. President, Senators may talk from now until doomsday about cost, and other minor items, but the sole question for the Senate to determine is whether Congress is to say to the Navy, "We are going to supply our judgment for yours on the important question of making torpedoes." I should say that perhaps there is not a Senator on the floor who knows very much about the technique, the know-how, or what it takes to make up-to-date torpedoes which could be used in the event we had to use them.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I asked the able Senator from Illinois whether, in his opinion, if the position taken by the House is sustained by the Senate it would result in closing down the plant in Illinois, and, as I understand, the Senator said he believed it would close down the plant in Illinois. I now ask him the question: If the position taken by the Senator from Illinois is sustained, would it necessarily mean the closing of the plant in Rhode Island?

Mr. LUCAS. I understand that then the plant in Rhode Island would be put in grease. But there are three different segments of the plant in Newport, R. I. I may be wrong about this, and my friends can correct me if I am. Two of those departments are going to remain. One will be used for research work and the other for testing, and will employ a great number of men. But the third part of the plant, which makes torpedoes, will be put in grease. It is my understanding, however, that the third part of the plant is so connected with the other two parts of it, that it would not be sold to a private concern. It would be a stand-by plant for future emergency work.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUFFMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Senator from Illinois made a statement regarding the original placing of this plant in Illinois. I think perhaps the record should be made clear on that point. I recall the time when it happened. The main reasons for establishing the plant in Illinois, as I recall—and I opposed such action at that time because there is also a torpedo plant at Keyport, Wash., similar to the one at Newport, except that the plant at Newport manufactures torpedoes—the main reason for establishing the plant in Illinois had to do with labor conditions surrounding both of the other plants, congestion, lack of housing, shortage of labor, and the Navy urged a speed-up in the building of torpedoes and gave all this as reason for moving inland. I appreciate that the defense angle, the dispersement of plants, was one factor involved. But what I first stated comprises the main factor. There is no question about the statement made by the Senator from Illinois regarding the question of cost.

What the Navy should have done was to enlarge the two existing plants on the east coast and on the west coast, instead of going inland and building this new modern plant. The Navy did not do that, however. Now a new question is presented here. But I think in fairness both to the Keyport and the Newport plant the Senator from Illinois should mention the cost of moving torpedoes from Illinois to both coasts.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not think there is any question but that the plant on the west coast does not manufacture torpedoes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Technically we do not manufacture torpedoes. Technically we assemble them there. But technically the plant can manufacture torpedoes and has done so in case of emergency.

Mr. LUCAS. It is not the type of up-to-date plant that I am talking about. It is wholly inadequate, so far as the manufacturing of torpedoes is concerned.

Mr. MAGNUSON. We do not have the facilities to do what they do at Newport and at Forest Park, Ill.

Mr. LUCAS. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But I contend that what the Navy should have done in the beginning was to have enlarged the two torpedo plants at Newport and Keyport instead of building a new plant inland.

There are tremendous freight costs involved, because no torpedoes are used in the Middle West. They are all used in the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct, and that is one of the reasons this plant should remain in Forest Park. It would cost much less to send torpedoes from Chicago to the Pacific coast than it would to send them from Newport to the Pacific coast. While the Senator from Washington is making a defense here for the plant in his State, he knows that if the position of the Senator from Rhode Island is sound, any torpedoes that come out to the Pacific coast must come from the Newport plant, and that none of them will come from his plant. So from the angle of freight costs on torpedoes shipped to the Pacific coast, it will certainly be less expensive if the plant in Chicago is retained in operation.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. The torpedoes will have to come from Newport anyhow because they will have to be tested there.

Mr. LUCAS. Maybe so.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Is it not a fact that if torpedoes are manufactured at Newport, and if they are to be shipped to the Pacific they will be carried on Navy ships through the Panama Canal? The torpedoes would not be shipped overland. Cruisers and other Navy vessels, while they are on cruise, may as well be used to carry torpedoes through the Canal and up the west coast.

Mr. LUCAS. My friend the Senator from Connecticut may be a transportation expert. I am not. I do not know how torpedoes are shipped.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator seemed to entertain the idea that the torpedoes would be shipped overland. From what he said I thought he was an expert on that subject.

Mr. LUCAS. I am talking about how the torpedoes are to be shipped from Chicago, Ill. They will certainly have to be shipped by freight from Chicago to the Pacific coast, and they will be shipped by freight from Chicago to the Atlantic coast.

Mr. McMAHON. According to the Senator from Rhode Island, they will have to be shipped to Newport to be tested; and when they get to Newport they will be placed on battleships and cruisers and shipped through the Panama Canal to the Pacific. That will give our naval vessels something to do.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator can get any consolation from that argument he is welcome to it. I will not be diverted by the question of a few dollars of costs. In connection with the question of cost, if one were to figure the costs from all angles the chances are that the torpedoes would be made for less cost in Chicago than if they were made in Newport.

At least, the record shows that during the war they were made for $2,000 less at Chicago than they could be made at Newport. As I previously stated, that is primarily because of the up-to-date machinery and equipment. I am pleading that such machinery and equipment be not destroyed, put in grease, or sold to a private concern.

The Navy says emphatically, "We want the plant at Forest Park, Ill., continued." So far as I am concerned, that should be sufficient. Were there a war in progress we would not hesitate to follow the recommendation of the Navy if it said it wanted the plant at Forest Park. At the time the plant was placed in Illinois there was no question as to whether it was a good deal or a bad deal. No Senator objected to it then. Now, in time of peace, when we should always prepare with the best we have, we find these ancient and fallacious arguments being made as to why the plant should remain in Newport, R. I. I submit that the Senate and the House of Representatives would commit an egregious error if they did not follow the recommendation of the Navy in this case.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a telegraphic message from a very distinguished citizen of the State of Missouri which I think is entitled to weight in the consideration of the problem now before the Senate. The message comes from Lloyd C. Stark, who was Governor of Missouri from 1937 to 1941. He is a graduate of the United States Naval Academy of the class of 1908. He served as a naval officer from 1908 to 1912, serving in Turkey in 1909, in South American waters in 1910, and in the submarine service in 1911. He has not only distinguished himself in his service to the Navy, but he has also served in the Army. He was major, battalion commander, and acting assistant divisional chief of staff of the Eightieth Division, and commanded the Three Hundred and Fifteenth Field Artillery of the American Expeditionary Forces in the Argonne from 1917 to 1919.

Not only has he served with distinction in both the Army and the Navy, but his ability has been recognized among the Governors of the United States, as is evidenced by the fact that he was chairman of the Governors' Conference of the United States in 1939, served as president of the Council of State Governments in 1939, and was a member of its board of managers from 1941 to 1946.

The telegraphic message to which I refer was received in Washington on June 4. It is addressed to me, and is as follows:

LOUISIANA, MO., June 4, 1946.

Senator FORREST C. DONNELL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Rhode Island Congressman's amendment to $4,000,000,000 1947 naval appropriation bill prohibiting allocation any fund to operate modern naval torpedo plant at Forest Park, Ill., contrary to best interest of Navy. Passage would (1) prevent use of Navy's most modern torpedo plant; (2) return to use of older, less efficient Newport plant already closed; (3) shift torpedo storage to vulnerable coastal location; (4) force Navy to use torpedo plant it does not favor; (5) establish precedent of closing other modern midwestern naval installations. Naval authorities prefer to continue this plant. Civilian experts carefully investigated and endorsed it. Strongly urge your opposition to this amendment.

LLOYD C. STARK.

Mr. President, in my opinion the observations of this distinguished citizen of our State and of the United States are entitled to very careful consideration by the United States Senate.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to obtain a little information from him. I believe the Senator stated that the name signed to the telegram was Stark.

Mr. DONNELL. Yes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Does he happen to be the same Stark who ran against Harry S. Truman for Senator from the State of Missouri?

Mr. DONNELL. He ran against Senator Truman for the nomination.

Mr. CHAVEZ. While Mr. Stark was Governor?

Mr. DONNELL. While he was Governor of the State.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Of course, Missouri had all the information the Senator from Missouri is now giving the Senate as to the wonderful service of the gentleman.

Mr. DONNELL. I think that is true.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, this amendment is very important. If we are to protect the morale of our civil servants and keep faith with what we are advertising to men who are asked to join the Navy because it is a permanent service and because it is a life work, we ought very carefully to consider the effect of abandoning the station at Newport. Civil-service employees who have been in the service for 25 or 30 years would be turned out at a time when their length of service would just fall short of entitling them to pension benefits, even though they were taken into the service with the assurance that they would have steady jobs, and while they might receive less pay—and they did—still they would always have their civil-service rights and pension benefits.

The unfortunate thing is that the Navy, by an autocratic act—and that is putting it mildly—would take these men from their work with absolute ruthlessness. They would be no longer employed. They would lose all the benefits and advantages which they have earned by their length of service. It would be done in a way which certainly would arouse criticism, because in the case of another plant, a plant that was built during the war for war purposes for the manufacture of torpedoes, they have deliberately blanketed into the civil service the men who were working in that plant. That was done quickly, and apparently with the intent of doing it before the Congress or the Naval Affairs Committee had an opportunity to object. Mr. President, I do not think that is a good picture to go out to the country, when we consider the national aspects. I do not think that is a good picture, when we are saying to our men, "If you enlist in the Navy, you will have a sure job and you will have it for life. Just look at the advantages of it." Mr. President, if the Congress were to enact legislation of this character, I, for one, would protest about giving out information of that sort, because if we are going to take the step which the Navy proposes in this case, and if we are going to set this precedent, we can do it in other cases; and when hard times come and the Congress wishes to cut down, what will be done then? These men will go out, and the action of the civil service in this case will stand out as a precedent.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me, to permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GERRY. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Is it a fact that the plant in Illinois was not operated by the Navy until recently?

Mr. GERRY. That is correct. It was operated by the American Can Co.

Mr. WALSH. Is it true that it was operated by a private company, under a contract with the Navy to produce torpedoes for the Navy?

Mr. GERRY. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Is it also true that during all this period of time, torpedoes have been produced at the Newport, R. I., plant by the Navy itself?

Mr. GERRY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not true that it was not until late last fall that the Navy decided to dispose of its plant or to wind up its operations in connection with the manufacturing of torpedoes, and to transfer that activity to Illinois?

Mr. GERRY. Yes; the Senator from Massachusetts is entirely correct. The Senator also will remember that we had a hearing set in regard to this matter, and the morning of the hearing the order went through.

Mr. WALSH. So the Government has no obligation whatever to the employees in Illinois because of the length of their service; does it?

Mr. GERRY. None. That is the point I am making.

Mr. WALSH. Do I correctly understand that the Senator from Rhode Island is insisting that, everything else being equal, the Government owes an obligation to the old-time employees at Newport who have worked there for years and who may be approaching the age of retirement?

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Massachusetts is absolutely correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. GERRY. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I should like to call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island to the hearings held by the Naval Affairs Committee in regard to this particular matter. I ask the Senator if he recalls that when Admiral Hussey, who was Director of Naval Ordnance, appeared before us, it developed that he, and he alone, had the responsibility of moving this age-old plant and industry from Newport, R. I., to any point in the United States to which he wanted to move it, and in the same way he could remove any ordnance plant from one point to another, merely by the stroke of his pen, and he and he alone had that power.

Mr. GERRY. Yes; and I should like to say to the Senator from Wyoming that Admiral Hussey reiterated that statement before the Appropriations Committee, and said that the Navy Department even had the authority to close Annapolis, if it wished to do so.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not think the Congress should acquiesce in the holding or exercise of any such power in the hands of any man.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, in view of the colloquy which has taken place between the able Senator from Rhode Island and the able Senator from Massachusetts, I should like to read into the RECORD what Admiral Crisp said on the question of the employment of the men who have been at the station for a long time. I read his statement:

Senator, under the rules and regulations which have been promulgated by the Civil Service Commission, which follows the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944, no veteran who has a performance record of "good" or better can be discharged from the plant until all other employees are gone, veterans and nonveterans.

With the large number of veterans, with the employment at Newport, the veterans' category predominated, and those people are now coming back, and under the Veterans' Preference Act must be given employment. We have to guarantee first of all 1 year's employment to any person who has a status in civil service, or any veteran who has a career status, who has a mark of "good" or better must be retained over all other employees, irrespective of the years of service that they have.

You will find cases of veterans having possibly 5 years' service who have a mark of "good" or better who have to replace, if reduction comes, any person in that plant, even though he has had 25 or 30 years of service, and that has happened at Newport and is happening at other shore stations. It is not confined to Newport.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator, let me say that is a confession in avoidance. It has nothing to do with action taken by the Navy Department. If anything was done in connection with the desire of veterans to return to work, it was done through an act of Congress, which Congress enacted because it wished to reward veterans, above all others. If the Navy Department was properly carrying out the work of construction of torpedoes at Newport, we would not have so much difficulty in the matter. The fact remains that, as the Senator from Wyoming has brought out, the Navy Department deliberately "cut off the heads" of those men, and did so with absolutely no feeling for them, so far as I could see. It was purely a cold-blooded proposition. In all my service in the Senate I have never seen attaching to the Navy Department such an autocratic attitude as I have seen in this case in the Navy's attitude toward the war powers which were granted to it to build plants in order to meet the necessities of the times. Such plants were built all through the country. But, Mr. President, it was never intended that those plants should be continued at the expense of old and established stations, or that the powers granted were to be construed, for example, as giving the Navy the power to close the Boston Navy Yard or to close Annapolis, if some admiral saw fit to do so.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GERRY. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it not a fact that no further expansion can be made with respect to the Newport plant insofar as the manufacture of torpedoes is concerned?

Mr. GERRY. Expansions may be made in the manufacture of torpedoes at the present time to meet future conditions.

Mr. LUCAS. My understanding has been that the officials have gone as far as they can go from the standpoint of expansion at Newport. Regardless of the conditions in the future, the plant is stymied.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator is speaking with reference to the number of torpedoes which may be made. Many plants were constructed throughout the country during the war period.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not talking only about numbers, but about the expansion of the plant. My understanding from the testimony which was given before the committee is that the plant at Newport is so located that if an attempt were to be made to expand its present facilities so that more and better torpedoes could be made, it would not be successful because of a lack of available ground for expansion.

Mr. GERRY. In Newport there is an older plant. My colleague has already brought out the fact that many machines have been taken out of Newport.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the plant at Newport was large enough during the war to employ more than 15,000 men.

Mr. GERRY. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. President, to my mind, we are asked to set a very dangerous precedent in regard to what may be offered not only to Civil Service employees but to any men who might be contemplating entering the service. If this amendment is agreed to, I would not feel like saying to any man that he could be sure of a certain job in the Navy. I have already covered that point.

Mr. President, let us get down to the hard-boiled practical side of what any business man would do. Torpedoes are designed at Newport. The craftsmen who design them, the men who make the blueprints, the men who work with the officers, are the skilled men who have worked in Newport for years and years. The Navy realizes that they must keep those men employed. They realize also that they must retain the services of those skilled men, and the facilities at Newport, in the planning and manufacturing of torpedoes if the torpedoes are properly to function.

Mr. President, I wish to emphasize that our torpedoes have functioned. Their efficiency has been outstanding. Torpedoes have been made at Newport ever since 1869. In passing I might say that it is worth while to remember the inventive skill which the men to whom I have referred have given to the Government. I know of one man, Mr. Moore, who worked in the station at Newport. I believe it was figured out that during his long service at Newport he gave to the Government something like $400,000 worth of patents. He never took a cent for them, and turned them all over to the Government.

Mr. President, I am afraid I am digressing, because the human side of the situation appeals to me very strongly. But when we consider the practical side we must consider also the fact that a proposal is being made to build torpedoes at Chicago on a fresh-water lake. Torpedoes cannot be tested in fresh water. They must be tested in salt water. So the fact is that all the torpedoes which are manufactured in Chicago must be transported to Newport and there tested on the range for defects, and put into final condition for shipping.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GERRY. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. How much duplication of effort is there if a torpedo is tested at a fresh-water point and later tested again, repaired, and adjusted at Newport? Would the same kind of machinery be used in making the adjustments as would be used in manufacturing the torpedo? In other words, would the testing at Newport involve a duplication of machines and effort?

Mr. GERRY. Yes; and a very bad procedure would be followed. After torpedoes are designed and manufactured they must be taken out on the range and shot in order to find out what, if any, defects they may have. In Newport such tests can be made right at the back door.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, is it not a fact that four or five test runs of each torpedo are required in order to prove and adjust it?

Mr. GERRY. Yes; as a general rule. Some of the torpedoes which were shipped from the West required 20 to 30 runs before they were fit to be used at sea.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And the testing must be done in salt water, in which they will be used?

Mr. GERRY. The testing must be done in salt water, and the torpedoes must be given their runs. To my mind, the most stupid thing on earth would be to design the torpedoes originally at Newport, then have them made in Chicago, sent back to Newport, and worked over again by the same men who designed them.

So far as the cost is concerned, I have never been able to agree with the Navy Department figures. The Navy Department charges only for shipping and the box in which they ship the torpedo. The Navy Department said that the cost would be from $25 to $35. I took the trouble to investigate the figures and I came to the conclusion that it could not possibly be done under $150. The Navy Department did not add the overhead; it did not add any check-up; it did not include other items which should be included.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, is it the Senator's statement that it costs $150 to transport a torpedo from Illinois to Newport to be tested?

Mr. GERRY. Yes. The testing, the overhead, and the checking, for example, were not included.

Mr. WALSH. And they would represent an additional charge?

Mr. GERRY. They would represent an additional charge.

Mr. WALSH. That is due to the fact that the testing is at one place and the manufacture at another?

Mr. GERRY. Yes. While the claim is made that the torpedoes are being made more cheaply in Chicago in reality they are not. As a matter of fact, so far as I could ascertain from the civil service wage rates, Newport was paying a lower wage under the civil service than was being paid at Forest Park.

The Forest Park plant, according to my understanding, was established by Secretary Knox. I think the testimony before the committee shows pretty clearly that Secretary Knox put it through, and the Navy Department went along with the Secretary. I cannot conceive of this step after the assurances I was getting from officers with whom I talked at Newport about the possibility of any other plant superseding Newport. My colleague had the same assurances that there was no idea of taking the plant away from Newport.

The only argument the Navy Department makes is that the range is a little bit shorter than they desire. Frankly, I do not think there is much to that argument, because the range at Newport can be lengthened. All that it is necessary is to put the floats back a little farther and probably exercise a little greater supervision over the warning boats and the signaling.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the Senator said that the Navy officials thought the range was somewhat short?

Mr. GERRY. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. It is just as long for torpedoes built at Newport as it would be for torpedoes built in Illinois and sent to Newport.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator is absolutely correct. As a matter of fact, the range at Newport is being used and the whole Atlantic Ocean is right outside the door. Furthermore, within a short distance there was a range from Block Island to Montauk. There has never before been any question raised on that score. I have also been informed—the admiral disagreed with me, but I think he was a biased witness—that it is possible now to test torpedoes by circling, so that the alleged shortness of the range would not bother them. In any event, the range could be lengthened. Newport has facilities to design torpedoes, to build torpedoes, and to test torpedoes. When they are ready to be installed on naval vessels, they can be shipped to the Pacific coast by boat or by plane, or in any other way that may be desired.

The Senator from Illinois referred to the fact that Newport was a more dangerous location and for defensive reasons in wartime it would be safer to have the plant located at Chicago. Mr. President, that idea has been exploded since this war and before. I know that before the war it was demonstrated—I recall I made a speech on the subject for which the Navy Department gave me the figures—that modern carrier planes could lie off Newfoundland and easily bomb Chicago by following the Arctic Circle. Planes fly by the shortest route and for that reason Chicago, Detroit, and other inland cities are just as vulnerable as Newport.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, when the Senator brought that matter up, I was going to point out to him and to the Senate that a plane with an atomic bomb coming from Europe would only have to go 25 miles farther to drop a bomb on Chicago than it would to drop a bomb on New York. The distance on the great circle route is only 25 miles farther to Chicago. I think it will be found that Chicagoans emphasized that point very strongly when they were desirous of having an international air base established at Chicago.

Mr. GERRY. I thank the Senator; I think he has answered the question much better than I did or could. I think that what he has said is unanswerable.

Mr. President, I cannot conceive of a business concern splitting up its plants in the way suggested in the case of the Government's torpedo plants, thus giving up the advantage of trained mechanics who have spent their lives doing a particular kind of work. Every private manufacturer I know tells me that one of the things industry wants are people who are trained in their own particular industry. So, I cannot imagine that any business concern for one moment would even consider moving from Newport and establishing a plant in Illinois.

There should also be considered the way the Forest Park plant was established by an order issued the morning before the Naval Affairs Committee met, and the order was kept secret from the members of the committee. So a protest was sent to the Secretary in a telegram which is incorporatd in the hearings.

It may be proper, more or less, to go on the theory that there is a more modern plant in Illinois because the can company which operated it conducted it very efficiently. I am not so sure the Navy Department is going to run in efficiently. But apart from that, I cannot see the validity of the argument that the Illinois plant must be maintained, unless it is thought we are going to war in about 5 years. We have not even had the atomic bomb test; we have not the faintest idea what kind of torpedo we are going to need or to make in the future. Not only that, but the Forest Park plant does not manufacture all the parts required. It does not make electrical battery parts. They are made by another corporation, and when they are put in at Forest Park they have to come back to Newport, and generally we find that they have not been installed properly, and we have to do the work over again.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me, unless we are willing to abandon all the advantages that Newport has and always has had, which to my mind far offset any temporary gain which might be obtained from a more modern plant in Chicago, the committee amendment should not be agreed to. With atomic energy, and all the other developments, if any new kinds of torpedoes are built within a year the Forest Park plant will have to be retooled.

The whole idea is fantastic. It is not only fantastic, but if the committee amendment shall be agreed to, we will have established the very unsound proposition that any bureaucrat in the Navy Department can close up any station anywhere without consulting the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, if there is one danger from which we are suffering now it is that we are delegating too much power, we are letting this person and that person have powers he should not have, instead of letting Congress have the control as it should have, and which it has unfortunately so largely given away.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the call.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hatch	Overton
Andrews	Hayden	Radcliffe
Austin	Hill	Reed
Ball	Hoey	Robertson
Butler	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Byrd	Johnston, S. C.	Stewart
Capper	Knowland	Swift
Carville	La Follette	Taft

Donnell	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Downey	McClellan	Tunnell
Eastland	McKellar	Tydings
Ellender	McMahon	Wagner
Ferguson	Magnuson	Walsh
George	Millikin	White
Gerry	Moore	Wiley
Green	Murdock	Willis
Gurney	Murray	Wilson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the able Senator from Louisiana a question. As I understand, we are about ready to vote on the amendment on page 13, from line 21 to line 24, inclusive, which strikes out those four lines. If those four lines should be stricken from the bill it would mean that the Navy could continue to make torpedoes in the plant in Chicago; so if we want to sustain the Navy's position, then the vote would be "yea" on this amendment?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator from Illinois is correct.

Mr. President, before a vote is taken on the amendment I think I should read some excerpts from the record which I consider controlling, and which influenced the committee in arriving, by a very large majority, at the conclusion it reached. The question was asked of Admiral Hussey by myself:

> Senator OVERTON. I assume that the Illinois plant is superior to the Rhode Island plant for the manufacture of torpedoes.

That was suggested by his previous testimony.

> Admiral HUSSEY. Yes, sir.
> Senator OVERTON. Is it very much superior?
> Admiral HUSSEY. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERTON. Would you mind elaborating on that?

Admiral HUSSEY. It is a completely modern plant built and laid out for the manufacture of all types of torpedoes, including electric torpedoes. It has the most modern equipment with space for additional installations should they ever become necessary. The plant is built according to the best present-day building standards for factories.

Further on I asked this question:

Senator OVERTON. Now, you have shown what a modern plant you have in Forest Park. Let us compare that with the Newport plant.

Admiral HUSSEY. The naval torpedo station at Newport, I am speaking solely of the factory part of the plant.

Senator OVERTON. That is the issue here. The manufacturing part of the plant.

Admiral HUSSEY. Yes, sir. It is a result of a growth since 1869. The factory has been added to year by year as new demands arose for torpedoes, as new demands arose for new items, particularly the matter of fuzes and primers, tracers, and as a sufficient justification to be made to Congress for additional buildings.

The island, Goat Island—

That is where the plant is situated—

is a cramped space, and it has been necessary to fit the buildings in like the pieces of a picture puzzle. The equipment in the shops is very crowded in a great many cases, and the shops are by no means as well lighted as are the shops at Forest Park. It is not possible to light them as well as Forest Park without very extensive improvements in day lighting which could not be accomplished in many cases, or without expensive improvement to the electric lighting systems.

Further on I asked a question in reference to the cost of manufacture, and Admiral Hussey made this statement:

The cost of building aircraft torpedoes in Forest Park, with 2,400 torpedoes, average $7,914.08 per torpedo. The cost analysis made by Newport on the same type was $9,040.44.

A difference of $1,000 between the cost of manufacturing aircraft torpedoes in Newport and in Forest Park.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. I dispute those figures given by Admiral Hussey. I think they are absolutely unfair. The only thing the admiral took into account in shipping the torpedoes was making crates to put them in and the carriage charge.

Mr. OVERTON. If the Senator will pardon me, what the admiral said had to do with the cost of manufacture of torpedoes. There was a thousand dollar difference in the cost. The cost of transportation of the torpedo after it is built is insignificant as compared with the savings made in the Chicago plant, as I understand the situation.

Mr. GERRY. I think the Senator is mistaken in that respect, because I think the cost of shipping the torpedoes is about $150 apiece.

Mr. OVERTON. Suppose it is; there we have $150 compared with a saving of $1,000 in the cost of manufacture. I have no interest in the matter, but I simply stated that that was the reason why the committee was of the opinion that the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy should be adhered to.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. In that contemplation, did they not include the whole overhead of all the departments at Newport?

Mr. OVERTON. They included the cost of manufacturing in the analyses made at both plants.

Mr. GREEN. I think on examination Admiral Hussey brought out the fact that the entire overhead of all the departments, designing, testing, and so forth, as well as the manufacturing of torpedoes, was included in the cost of the torpedoes at Newport, which would account for the difference, especially as I brought out in the examination that the cost of labor in Chicago was higher in every department than it was at Newport.

Mr. GERRY. I see some Senators have come into the Chamber who were not present a short while ago. Therefore I wish again to call attention to the point that the real question at issue is that while the American Can Co. manufactured parts of the torpedoes, they did not manufacture all of them. Parts were manufactured in other places. The important point really is that after the torpedoes were manufactured in Chicago the company had to send them to Newport to be tested, and they were sometimes tested as many as 20 or 30 times, if my recollection is correct. I do not have the figures here, but I know that some torpedoes were tested a great many times, which, of course, greatly increased the cost at Newport.

Mr. President, I cannot see how any business concern could justify the manufacture of parts of a torpedo at one plant, and then send to other plants for other parts, and assemble them into a torpedo, send the torpedo to another plant many miles away to be tested and put into final shape, when all that could be done in one plant at Newport.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, the figures which the Senator from Louisiana gave it seems to me do not represent a true comparison. As I understand the situation, the torpedoes manufactured at Newport, R. I., were manufactured by the Navy, whereas those manufactured in Chicago were manufactured by the American Can Co. Now what will be the cost of those torpedoes if the Navy takes that plant over and operates it itself? It is a well-known fact that the operation by a Government department, such as the Navy, is very much more expensive than the operation by a private concern. I can illustrate that probably more fully by giving the difference in the cost of the building of two battleships, the Indiana and the Alabama. They were built within 20 miles of one another at Norfolk. The Indiana was built by the Newport News Shipbuilding Co., a private company, and the Alabama by the navy yard at Norfolk. They were sister ships, our latest battleships. The Alabama cost $9,000,000 more than the Indiana. That indicates the cost of Navy building as compared with private building. I believe that the same thing would apply to torpedoes.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. OVERTON] has made a statement indicating that the fundamental question is where torpedoes can be manufactured cheapest, I desire to express a different view. I believe that the fundamental question is whether the Secretary of the Navy—and the same thing would apply to the Secretary of War—has the right to discontinue an important naval establishment which has had the approval of Congress, and set up something in its place. If so, we recognize his right to close all the existing establishments and start anew, according to his individual will. The same argument would apply to Army establishments. I do not believe that the Congress should condone such action.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the debate, but in view of the fact that some question has been raised with respect to cost, I desire to read into the RECORD part of a letter which was written by Admiral Hussey to my colleague [Mr. BROOKS] on June 8. Admiral Hussey stated as follows:

The costs involved are at Forest Park, the labor of putting the torpedo air flask and afterbody into their separate boxes, closing the boxes, and loading them into freight cars; en route, the freight costs; and at Newport, the unloading from the cars, unboxing, assembling the afterbody and air flask, and delivering to the range. As indicated in the table, the sums of these several items for each type of torpedo vary from four-tenths of 1 percent to fifty-five hundredths of 1 percent of the cost of producing the torpedo at Forest Park, including the overhead of the plant.

You may recall that during the hearing on Tuesday I stated that the cost of aircraft torpedoes at Forest Park had averaged $7,914.08, while at Newport the cost analysis, also including overhead, showed $9,040.44 for the same type of torpedo. The manufacturing cost at Newport is thus 14.2 percent greater than at Forest Park, against which comparison approximately a half of 1 percent for shipping is insignificant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 13, line 21, after the word "operation", to strike out "Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the manufacture, assembly, repair, or overhaul of torpedoes at the naval ordnance plant, Forest Park, Ill."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Fulbright	O'Daniel

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, today the Senate convened at 11 o'clock. The Senator from Washington wished to speak in regard to one of the amendments, and he arrived in the Chamber at 11:05, or shortly thereafter, but by that time the amendment had already been considered and agreed to.

I have discussed this matter with the Senator from Louisiana, and I now ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment, on page 39, in lines 19 to 24, was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. OVERTON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered, and the amendment is before the Senate.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, this is the committee amendment on page 39, beginning with the word "unless", in line 19 and ending with the word "reasonable", in line 24.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. BALL. Am I to understand that the Senator from Washington is now opposing the committee amendment?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes. I understand that the committee amendment has already been adopted, and I have asked unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which it was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote by which the amendment was adopted has been reconsidered, and the amendment is now before the Senate.

The question now is on the adoption of the committee amendment on page 39, in lines 19 to 24.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wish to say something about this matter, Mr. President. Prior to 1916 the Navy used in its navy yards a system involving a so-called time check on the workmen. The system is known by various names, but the most common name is the so-called Taylor time-check system. When the system is abused by an employer, it can become very vicious in practice. Most people in labor oppose it. Since 1916 almost all labor-management groups have completely abolished the so-called time-check system. It became so bad in the navy yards prior to that time that the late Senator Borah, who then was chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, called for a Senate investigation of the matter. The investigation was made, and as a result a lengthy report was filed. The report pointed out the vicious practices which had been engaged in under the system. The report was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD last year, following an amendment of similar import which was then proposed. In the report we find stated practically all the reasons why the so-called time-check system should be abolished in modern industrial practice.

The result of the so-called Borah report—and, incidentally, it was a unanimous report by the Committee on Education and Labor in 1916—was to place in all naval appropriation bills the content of section 104 of the pending bill, but without the committee amendment beginning in line 19 of this bill. This section has been a part of all naval appropriation bills for 30 years, since 1916. At various times Senators have attempted either to strike out or to modify amendments similar to this one. Section 104, which has been a part of all naval appropriation bills for 30 years, provides that no time-measuring device or time-measuring system or time study shall be imposed on the workmen in the navy yards. Last year the distinguished Senator from Minnesota sponsored in the committee an amendment which completely struck out that section, which is a prohibition of using the time-check system.

I understand that this year the Senator from Minnesota and perhaps other members of the committee have attempted to modify that restriction. That attempt has resulted in the committee amendment which provides, in substance, that no time-check system or time-measuring device shall be used in regard to the work of any employee unless representatives of the employees are given an opportunity to check any such time studies as may affect the amount of work asked of them and to protest under the established grievance procedure any work requirements believed to be unreasonable.

So the committee amendment would permit the Navy to use this system if it wishes to do so, and if the employees do not like it they can go to their grievance committee and protest. The result will depend upon the person in the navy yard to whom the protest is made. The Navy industrial management could say, "Well we are still going to use the system." Under an abuse of the wording of the amendment, it would be possible to go back to where we were in 1916, when the Committee on Education and Labor stated unanimously in the Borah report that no time-check system should be used.

The committee amendment does nothing to obviate the chance or the opportunity or the temptation on the part of Navy industrial management to use such a system. Labor and laboring groups, and also some persons in the naval shore establishments, have always thought that such a system should never again be inaugurated in the navy yards. It has been abolished in most private industries.

I do not know who in the Navy came before the committee and advocated the amendment, but I wager that no man in the shore establishments of the Navy Department will claim sponsorship of the amendment. Although they will testify, "We would like to have it, to be able to use it, if and when we may wish to use it," nevertheless, the Navy Department will never come before the Congress and actually sponsor such an amendment as this.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. BALL. The amendment actually was proposed this year by a Reserve commander in the Navy who was an industrial engineer in private life, and who, from his experience in the Navy while engaged in production, confessed that this method was unsound, and that the pending amendment, which conforms to the established practice in all industry, would result in great benefit to the Navy.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the Senator from Minnesota that I believe the same gentleman called on me and I told him that he was just about 30 years too late. I told him that 30 years ago we abolished the time-check system in all private industry and in the navy yards.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further to me?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I know what the Senator will say. He will say that in some industrial establishments there still is employed a system of time checking.

Mr. BALL. It is written into many bargaining contracts that the management, with the union participating, shall have the right to make time studies in order to determine how long a particular job will require, and determine other matters as well.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I understand that some collective bargaining contracts have been so drawn. I understand, further, that in most of such contracts there are contained prohibitions such as we have put into all appropriation bills for the past 30 years against the old system of time checking. Of course, in those few contracts in which the provisions are contained, if the union representatives do not like the way in which the system is operating, they have a right to do something about it. But in the navy yard the only right which the men have is the right to go to the grievance committee. The grievance committee in turn says to the management, "We do not like the way you operate this time-check system" and the management says, "Well, that is too bad," and that is the end of it. In another provision of this bill—I do not know whether the Senator from Minnesota had anything to do with it or not—if the men do anything about the condition with reference to which they have made complaint—that is, if they walk out, for example—they may be sent to jail because they would be striking against the Government.

Mr. BALL. Can the Senator from Washington refer to any collective-bargaining contract which contains a prohibition against time studies?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I understand there are several such contracts.

Mr. BALL. I have examined many union contracts, and I have never seen such a provision in any of them. I have seen, on the other hand, in many such contracts provisions by which the union cooperates with management in making time studies.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I have seen contracts with machinists' unions which contained prohibitions against the old-time checking system.

Mr. President, last year when this matter was brought before the Appropriations Committee the Secretary of the Navy testified. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] said:

> My attention has been called to section 105 of this bill, which is a prohibition on the Navy Department spending any of its appropriation on efficiency studies, in navy yards, for example. As you know——

The Senator went on to say that the Mead committee went to Norfolk and they were not tremendously impressed with the efficiency there. The Senator continued:

> Will you have any objection to striking it out of this bill?
> Mr. FORRESTAL. None.
> Senator BALL. Is there another statute?
> Mr. FORRESTAL. I think that is the case. As far as the question of time studies is concerned, it would be useful if we were able to have them. They are not a cure-all, as you appreciate, but it is one instrument that is available in any normal industrial operation.
> Mr. BALL. Will you let me know about that?
> Mr. FORRESTAL. Yes.
> Mr. GERRY. It was put in, Mr. Secretary, according to my recollection, in order to prevent this speed-up plan for labor that was being discussed at that time.
> Mr. FORRESTAL. I was about to add that it would be objectionable to the labor interests.
> Mr. BALL. The Bedaux speed-up plan?
> Mr. GERRY. It was a speed-up proposition.
> Mr. FORRESTAL. In the hands of an unscrupulous man or a man with a grudge against labor it could be an unfair weapon, all right.

That is the reason that, for 30 years, the Senate has been including in bills of this kind the prohibition about which we are speaking. The amendment, although there may be an attempt to modify it, means nothing. The Navy could go ahead and use the so-called time-checking and speed-up system. I do not believe I need to tell Senators how that system has been employed in the past, and how, time and time again, a fight has been made against the so-called Bedaux system and the so-called Taylor system. In times past, since the day of Senator Borah's report to the Senate in 1916, any examination of this system made in industrial establishments has proven that it should be abolished, and was abolished in most instances. I think the Government should follow through in connection with the contracts of the Navy Department. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has, throughout his argument, referred to conditions which prevailed back in 1916, 30 years ago. I hope that we are not to operate our whole Navy on the basis of conditions which prevailed 30 years ago. It is quite true that the so-called Bedaux system and the so-called Taylor system which were being advanced in industry at that time, constituted a deliberate speed-up which forced workers to speed up their work and not be rewarded by additional compensation as a result of increased production. I agree with the Senator from Washington that that system has been, so far as I know, completely abandoned by industry.

During the 30 years since 1916 a whole new profession of industrial engineering, without which we could not have in America the tremendous efficiency and mass production which we have, has been developed. An essential part of engineering and production of items in a factory is in time operations with a stopwatch. Generally, time studies in industry are made in cooperation with the union which represents the employees. The employees have a right to protest if they believe that they are being unfairly treated in connection with changes in the work schedule, or in connection with any particular operation which is changed as the result of the time studies.

The policy of the Government is not to have a contract with a union, but there are organizations of employees within every naval establishment. The workers have their regular grievance committees. On those committees are wise representatives of the men. The amendment merely provides that the employees shall be given an opportunity to check any time studies which the Navy decides may improve the efficiency of the naval establishment and its manufacturing facilities. The amendment is merely an attempt to increase production in naval establishments, and to improve the techniques by which increased production may be attained. It would be a good thing if we could get away from any kind of incentive payments in connection with naval employment. But greater productivity is the only proper basis on which we can continue to raise our standards of living in this country. It is in that situation, Mr. President, that the committee adopted this modification of the language of section 104. I hope the committee amendment will prevail.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I think it should be pointed out that the reason why this provision has been in the naval appropriation bills for all these years is that if this system is abused, or used viciously against an employee and his fellows, an employee may go to a grievance committee, and if the Senator from Minnesota understands how the grievance committee works, he knows the grievance committee will say to the navy yard management, "You are using this system in the wrong way" the management will say, "We think we are using it in the right way," and the employee has no right to do anything further about it. He has no contract. He is there under civil service. He has certain rights, and if he does not like his position he can quit; but he cannot well quit, because he has made that his life's work, and has seniority rights. Often, as it is used in private industrial practice, there is opportunty to misuse the system. In navy yards with the lack of opportunity on the part of the navy-yard worker to do anything about it, the chance of it being misused is even greater. That is why this prohibition has been in all naval appropriation bills. I do not see why we should go back to the conditions of 1916. The record of production in the navy yards can stand up with any private production records during the whole war, and the navy yards have operated for 30 years with this prohibition in the law.

The modification is not of any assistance. It practically nullifies the prohibition. I know some industrial Navy officers who would like to go back to the Taylor and Bedaux vicious time-check systems, but under the amendment, if they did it, and a grievance committee or an employee did not like it, they could lump it; there would be nothing they could do about it.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, apparently the Senator from Washington has very little confidence in the management of the Navy in its industrial establishments. I think the industrial management of the Navy is as enlightened as any other industrial management, and knows that an absolute requisite to getting production is getting along well with employees. I cannot see any danger in this proviso, such as the Senator sees, when the employees must be consulted as to any great abuse in the system.

As for efficiency in the navy yards, I have gone through several of them, and if what I have seen of men loafing on the job because the flow of materials has not been organized properly is a sample of Navy efficiency, I think it can stand a great deal of improvement.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, it seems to me that perhaps the Senator has not any confidence in the way the navy yards operate. I have a great deal of confidence that most of the men who operate the navy yards would not abuse this system, but we are thinking of the men who would abuse it, and that is why the time-check systems, the Bedaux and Taylor and all the other systems, have long since been abandoned. That is the reason for the prohibition.

I do not know who would use the system, but under the suggested amendment it could be used, and just as surely as this provision is put in the law, we will find some industrial manager of some navy yard abusing the system, or using it the wrong way, going back to 30 years ago, when we finally had to have a Senate committee investigate the whole matter, and the Senate practically unanimously agreed with the late Senator Borah, of Idaho, that the system should be abolished.

Mr. BALL. Industry long ago abandoned any thought of the Bedaux speed-up system, and it was abandoned; nevertheless, the time study has come to be an efficient part of the operation of industrial organizations, and I do not know why Congress should deny to naval industrial establishments the privilege of using modern techniques.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hill	Overton
Andrews	Hoey	Pepper
Austin	Huffman	Radcliffe
Ball	Johnson, Colo.	Reed
Butler	Johnston, S. C.	Robertson
Capehart	Knowland	Russell
Capper	La Follette	Saltonstall

George	Magnuson	Tydings
Gossett	Mead	Walsh
Green	Millikin	White
Gurney	Moore	Wiley
Hart	Murdock	Willis
Hatch	Murray
Hawkes	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to make some inquiries of the distinguished Senator from Washington. Was not a somewhat similar proposal to this before the Senate in 1945?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes, there was.

Mr. WALSH. I have before me the RECORD of May 15, 1945. A motion was then made to strike out what I assume to be the same language as is contained in this section, without the language added by the committee and now the pending amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And that was defeated by a vote of 21 to 40.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. No attempt is being made now to strike out the language which was retained in the bill last year?

Mr. MAGNUSON. No.

Mr. WALSH. But a new provision, or new language, is inserted, the purpose of which is either to modify or destroy or limit the language which is in the present law, and which was in the bill a year ago?

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Now will the Senator briefly and concisely state just what this language is and just what it does?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I will say first to the Senator from Massachusetts that section 104 is the prohibition on the use of time-study systems, time-check systems, in navy yards. That has been in these bills for many years.

Mr. WALSH. And from time to time efforts have been made to eliminate that language, but without success?

Mr. MAGNUSON. But without success. The present attempt, in my opinion, I will say to the Senator, in effect would strike it out. I will read the language of section 104:

SEC. 104. No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person or persons having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work.

Mr. WALSH. That is the present law.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes, that is the present law. But the committee has added this language:

Unless representatives of the employees are given the opportunity to check any such time studies as may affect the amount of work asked of them and to protest under the established grievance procedure any work requirements believed unreasonable.

In other words, by that language it is said: "You can go ahead and use the time-study and time-check devices if the employee is given an opportunity to protest to the grievance committee."

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator from Washington believe that the amendment would nullify the existing law?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think it would nullify the existing law, because the practical effect would be, as I said before, that if the worker did not like what was being done, he would go to the grievance committee, and the management would say, "Well, we are sorry, but we are going to continue this practice," and the worker has no redress.

Mr. WALSH. Then, those of us who favor the present law should vote "nay" on the amendment?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I desire merely to say that the Senator from Washington and I differ completely as to whether the amendment would nullify the present law. I think all the amendment proposed by the committee would do would be to put navy yards in line with the best practice in use in efficient private industrial plants, where such studies as these are made in cooperation with the employees.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I understand the question now before the Senate is on the adoption of the committee amendment on page 39, and that a vote "yea" would be a vote to adopt the language in italics in the bill on that page, and a vote "nay" would be a vote against the so-called time-check system.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words about this issue. As Senators will recall, this prohibition was placed in the law some years ago, and has been continued since that time as the result of a thorough investigation which consistently demonstrated the abuses which were being made of the time-check system.

I disagree completely with the statement of the Senator from Minnesota that the situation in a private plant, where the employes are organized, and have a collective bargaining agreement, and the right to strike against the employer if the abuses become intolerable, is analogous to the situation in a Government navy yard, where, it is true, the employees are permitted to organize, but where they do not have collective bargaining power such as they have in private employment. It is for that reason that it is important to retain this prohibition to prevent abuses which developed in the past, and are very likely to develop again in the future, because merely giving the employees the right to go to a grievance committee, without their being able to use their economic power as a collective group, is tantamount, in my opinion, to blowing a hole in the prohibition through which a 10-ton truck could be driven.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 39, beginning in line 19, and ending in line 24.

Mr. MAGNUSON. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any administrator, officer, or supervisor having responsibility for forming or carrying out personnel policies and regulations who does not, in good faith, attempt to adjust the grievances of employees, or who fails to meet and negotiate in good faith with the representatives of employee organizations.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, it seems to have become the accepted thing to include in every appropriation bill—

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr TAYLOR. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not know whether the Senator will be so happy, because I am going to make the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Louisiana for the purpose of making a point of order? He is not compelled to do so.

Mr. OVERTON. I can make the point of order later in my own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana can make the point of order in his own time later. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Louisiana for the purpose of making the point of order at this time?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to ask the Chair if the rule has not been that an amendment is not subject to a point of order because it carries legislation within it if it imposes limitations upon the use of an appropriation. I ask the Chair if he can distinguish the character of the pending amendment from that of the amendment which has been adopted in several appropriation bills, providing that no part of the funds carried by the appropriation may be used to pay any worker who belongs to an organization which asserts the right to strike against the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Chair to understand that the Senator from Idaho has yielded for the purpose of enabling the Senator from Louisiana to make the point of order?

Mr. TAYLOR. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair holds that the point of order——

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I made a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair was about to answer.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to hear the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the point of order is well taken. If the Senator will read the amendment, he will find that the amendment involves the question of good faith, and no one is designated to pass upon the question of good faith. The amendment necessarily provides for legislation, which provision is not present in the other amendments which have been adopted.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. Am I to understand the Chair to rule that what makes the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho subject to a point of order is that it contains within it, in line 5, the words "in good faith," and that if those words were deleted it would not be subject to a point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not at all. That is only one of the things to which the Chair was inviting the attention of the Senator from Florida. The amendment involves legislation. As evidence of that fact the Chair invites the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that it refers to an administrator, officer, or supervisor "having responsibility for forming or carrying out personnel policies and regulations who does not, in good faith, attempt to adjust the grievances of employees, or who fails to meet and negotiate in good faith with the representatives of employee organizations." There is no provision for anyone to pass upon the question of good faith, and there is no way to determine it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. I invite the attention of the Chair to section 109 of the bill, reading as follows:

SEC. 109. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

Does the Chair hold that that section is not subject to a point of order, by virtue of being legislative in character?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Florida that that question is not before the Chair. No point of order was raised in connection with section 109. The Chair invites the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that section 109 is a substitution for the language adopted by the House, and deals with the same subject, but uses different language. That is not the question now before the Chair, because that amendment has already been adopted. No point of order was raised in connection with it. The point of order raised by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is sustained.

The question now is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, before that step is taken, I wish to say that, as I understand, the Chair has also advised that section 109 is a substitute for a section in the bill as passed by the House, and that therefore the section would be subject to consideration by the conference committee because the provision adopted by the Senate is substantially different from that adopted by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I do not wish to delay action on the bill, but I can see in section 109 several practical problems regarding this language which I think should be answered, particularly in the conference committee before it is finally adopted.

For instance, it provides that any person who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States shall be subject to punishment for the commission of a felony, by being placed in jail for 1 year or by being fined $1,000, and shall also be subject to losing his pay. Such a provision might be seriously abused. A man might belong to an organization and yet not know whether it advocated the right to strike against the Government.

There are several other aspects of this matter. A man might have to accept his pay check while he was making an investigation of the organization. It might be necessary for him to accept his pay check before he made such an investigation, for he might need the money in order to live.

As I have said, this matter has several other practical aspects. Several have been presented to me, and I have written out some of them. Although there is no objection to prohibiting strikes against the Government of the United States, and as a matter of fact, most of the American Federation of Labor unions have in their charters a prohibition against strikes against the Government and most of the local unions have in their bylaws such a prohibition, nevertheless this language may cause much trouble if it is adopted as it now stands and if it is strictly enforced.

There are many questions which should be answered. For instance, a number of organizations of Government employees are affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and they have in their constitutions and by-laws, as I have said before, prohibitions against strikes against the Government. Presumably such organizations, by remaining affiliated, subscribe to the policies of the parent body. The United Mine Workers, for instance, resumed its strike in the coal industry after the Government had taken it over. Their position was sustained by some of the officials of the American Federation of Labor. Section 109 might be interpreted as prohibiting employees from belonging to organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The United Mine Workers are now an affiliate of the A. F. of L.

Suppose a man belongs to a union and suppose the union had said nothing about this matter, but suppose the United Mine Workers or some other union had in its charter a provision which gave it the right to strike against the Government, and suppose it did strike against the Government. Under this section, as I read it, if it were strictly enforced, if a man took his pay check for that month and if he did not previously examine the constitutions of the various organizations, he might be subject to being put in jail or to being fined $1,000.

So I think there are many questions to be considered in this connection, and I ask unanimous consent that the questions which I hold in my hand may be printed in the RECORD at this point, and I ask the Senator from Louisiana that they be considered in the conference in regard to this particular language, because the conference committee will have an opportunity to correct any practical abusive effects which the language might have.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Those who sponsor the language of section 109, above referred to, should be requested to state on the floor of the Senate how far they propose a Government employee may be held liable to the inhibitions and penalties of the section, if he belongs to an old-line trade-union which is, has been, or may become affiliated with the A. F. of L. The clearing up of the following points would be helpful.

A number of Government employee organizations which are affiliated with the A. F. of L. have provisions in their constitutions and bylaws which prohibit strikes against the Government. Presumably, such organizations by remaining affiliated subscribe to the policies of the parent body. The United Mine Workers resumed their strike in the soft-coal mine industry after the Government had taken over. Their position was sustained by officials of the A. F. of L. Does section 109 prohibit employees from belonging to organizations affiliated with the A. F. of L., even though the affiliated organization renounces the right to strike against the Government on the part of its own members? Are Government employees belonging to the national labor unions whose constitutions and bylaws are silent on this subject of strikes against the Government prohibited from belonging to such organizations? Will it satisfy the requirements of section 109 if such Government organized groups refrain from asserting the right or renounce the right themselves to strike against the Government?

Section 109 appears to require that employees fill out affidavits that they are not members of organizations that assert the right to strike against the Government. Such employees may be of the opinion that their organization has not asserted such a right, but upon investigation, the authorities may find that at some time in the history of the organization, such a pronouncement has been made and not subsequently rescinded. Would an employee who finds himself mistaken in the opinion of the construing authorities be subject to a fine up to a thousand dollars and imprisonment up to 1 year, or both?

Section 109 appears to be subject to a point of order, on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill; because even though similar language has been applied to other appropriation bills, they do not cover the naval appropriation bill. Hence, it is legislation on that bill and, under the Senate rules, can be adopted only by suspending the rules by a two-thirds vote.

Section 109 also appears to be unconstitutional, in that it compels the Government employee, in effect, to testify against himself, and makes a felony of a mere misunderstanding which has not resulted in the individual either striking or personally sanctioning a strike against the Government.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, so far as the Senator from Louisiana is concerned, he has no objection to the request the Senator from Washington has made.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, while this matter is under discussion, let me say that I had something to do with the drafting of the original amendment of the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Georgia. I know that in the minds of some employees some question has arisen, because a number of AFL unions, such as machinists' unions, carpenters' unions and so forth, have members who are employees of the Government.

I should like to make my interpretation of the amendment clear, and I think it is the interpretation which is made by the other sponsors of the amendment. My interpretation is that the language "who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States" means that the organization must be primarily an organization of Government employees. As a matter of fact, I do not think there is any secret that we were thinking primarily of the United Public Workers of America, the newly formed CIO organization, the constitution of which has been interpreted by the Washington newspapers as definitely asserting the right to strike against the Government of the United States. That is the important aspect of this language, as I read it. I do not think it would affect the A. F. of L. unions, which always have contended that there is no right to strike against the Government. Although they assert the right to strike against private employers, of course, they have never asserted a right to strike against the Government of the United States.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is it intended that the provision against the right to strike against the Government of the United States, as contained in this bill, particularly on page 44, would be sufficiently broad to apply to an organization which asserted that it had the right to strike, for example, against the United States Steel Co. or against a mine owner, if the steel company or the mines happened to be in the custody and possession of the Government, due to an act of the President in taking them over, under the Smith-Connally Act or otherwise?

Mr. BALL. In answer to the Senator, I say that I cannot see how this section could possibly apply in such a situation, because those employees would not be paid out of this appropriation. I do not see how the provision referred to would affect such a situation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that completely answers the question. The limitations in each of these bills are confined to payments to be made under the terms of these appropriation acts, and there is no way by the wildest flight of fancy or the most vivid imagination that this provision would apply to employees other than employees of the United States who, within Government departments, are members of unions of other Government employees or of unions composed of Government employees that assert the right to strike against the Government. Certainly none of the members of outside unions who might be brought in under any seizure under the Smith-Connally Act or under the exercise of any other power the President might have are paid under these appropriation bills, and therefore this provision would not affect their right in any way.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Suppose a man working in a Navy yard were involved?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator means, as he said a moment ago, that a man might be a member of a machinists' union, and yet be working for the Government of the United States. I do not think he would be bound at all. Unless it was a union of Government employees, he would not be covered. None of those unions are unions of Government employees. They are regularly affiliated CIO unions or A. F. of L. unions, and they are not unions of Government employees.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In other words, is it the purpose of the amendment to cover the so-called Government employees' union?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the language is about as clear as it is ordinarily possible to make the English language. The amendment would apply to anyone who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States. The provision would not apply to an organization which asserts the right to strike against the United States Steel Corp., or against any other private employer. It would apply only to members of a union of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States. The language is not in any way applicable unless the person affected is drawing his pay from the funds provided by these appropriations.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Suppose there were a local union in a navy yard and suppose every member of that local union—let us assume it is a machinists' union—worked in the navy yard and was a Government employee. Would that be a union of Government employees?

Mr. RUSSELL. I would not so construe it.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, let me say that I think that particular local might be a union of Government employees, but I do not know of any local of that type which asserts the right to strike against the Government. In fact, all of them have no-strike provisions in their constitutions or bylaws.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Here is another question which arose: Would this provision be interpreted as affecting a Government employee who belonged to an organization which refrained from saying in its constitution or bylaws anything against striking against the Government?

Mr. RUSSELL. For my part, I am greatly attracted to the ideas expressed by the A. F. of L. unions, by which they expressly renounce the right to strike against the Government. But in my opinion if the constitution of the organization did not mention such a matter in any way whatever, a negative position could not be considered an assertion. If the point were not expressed at all, I do not think the limitation would apply.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, allow me to ask one further question. One provision of section 109 of the bill would require the employees to make affidavits. An employee must make an affidavit that he does not belong to an organization which asserts the right to strike against the Government. Suppose that a person wanted a job and needed it immediately. Suppose further that he belonged to a machinists' local, or to some other group, or even to a group of Government employees. He would first be required to make an affidavit, and after that it would be necessary for the authorities to ascertain the nature of the organization to which he belonged. What would then be the position of the prospective employee?

Mr. RUSSELL. In my judgment, the prospective employee should have made sure that he did not belong to a group of employees which asserted the right to strike against the Government.

Mr. MAGNUSON. However, the employee may quit as an individual.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, sometimes it is difficult to know what is the background or even the constitution of an organization. I believe that the provision of the amendment which reads "or who is a member of an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force," and so forth, might catch many of us. It is perhaps true that even Members of the Senate may, on certain occasions, have put their names to something which later turned out to be a front for some organization. I hope the language to which I have referred will not be interpreted to deny to Government employees the right to receive their pay checks.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad that the Senator has referred to the language in the bill which he just read. It relates to members of organizations which seek to overthrow the Government of the United States. Similar language has been incorporated for many years in appropriations bills, and if any injustice ever grew out of it, I have never had it called to my attention, and I do not know of it having been called to the attention of any other member of the Appropriations Committee. Language prohibiting employees striking against the Government of the United States has been in appropriation bills for many years. I have never heard of any abuses having resulted.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire about the following language:

Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States * * * shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

Mr. RUSSELL. The offense there would be in making a false affidavit, would it not?

Mr. PEPPER. No. I am reading from page 44, beginning in line 14. I shall read it again:

Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment.

Mr. RUSSELL. The offense would be in accepting employment and receiving pay out of this appropriation.

Mr. PEPPER. No. The language is, "any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States." Does that not mean what it says, namely, any person who strikes against the Government?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have never been particularly impressed with the theory that that language applied to a person engaged in a strike against the Government. What I have always been concerned with is a person belonging to an organization which asserted the right to strike against the Government.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I brought up the point because I wished to invite the attention of the able Senator from Georgia to the language of the amendment. The language would impose a penalty upon the individual, not the organization. The penalty does not apply to an organization which asserts the right to strike, and of which organization the individual is a member. The language provides that it shall be a felony for any individual person to strike against the Government of the United States. It is obvious that there is considerable question with regard to what constitutes a strike. Suppose that a certain man quits work in protest against the wage scale under which he has been paid. Would that be a strike within the meaning of the language of this amendment? Suppose one man said to another man who worked next to him, "Let us quit work because we do not acquiesce in the treatment which we have received here, or in the wage scale which we are required to observe." Would that constitute a strike on the part of that individual? Of course, many individuals would have to participate before the action could constitute a strike. I am concerned about how much we can allow to the individual in his right to quit work.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not believe that the language adds to or takes from the original amendment. It was my idea, although I did not resist the additional language when it was presented to the committee, that it did not help the original proposition to any degree. If a man actually strikes he is asserting the right to strike. I wanted to be sure that there could be no organization of Government employees which could strike and render the Government impotent.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In speaking of the affidavit, I may point out that on page 44 the language reads, in part, as follows:

Provided, That, for the purposes hereof, an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not, contrary to the provisions of this section, engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States.

Let us assume that at some time before a person had been a member of an organization but does not now belong to the organization. Would he be barred from employment?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I was not the author of the language. However, I believe the Senator is splitting hairs. If a strike has ever taken place against the Federal Government up to the present time I have never heard of it. The language could not apply retroactively against employees, if there be any such, who have struck against the Government in times past.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The United Mine Workers may be cited as a case in point. After all, Mr. President, I believe this to be a very serious amendment to the bill. If the Senate agrees to it the time may come when it will have to be construed. I think we should ascertain now the legislative intent of the authors.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. BALL. The proviso reads, in part, beginning in line 6, "that the person making the affidavit has not, contrary to the provisions of this section", and so forth. Obviously, he could not do anything contrary to the provisions of this section before the section becomes law. I believe that in the future, if any Government employee should engage in a strike against the Government he would be barred from receiving Government compensation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, this amendment has already been agreed to, I believe, and if the vote by which it was agreed to is not reconsidered there will be no opportunity to delete any of the language. But I want to say that I believe that the men and women who work for the Government of the United States have, as citizens of the United States, civil rights. I do not believe that they surrendered their rights as citizens merely because they happened to become employees of the Government. I believe that a Government employee has a right to cease working for the Government if he wishes to do so. I believe that he has such right as a citizen of this country. If he wishes to talk to his neighbor or make a speech about the situation he has a right to do so as a citizen of the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the Senator believe that a group of Government employees has the right to strike against the Government?

Mr. PEPPER. I believe that a group of employees has the right to cease work, and I believe such employees have a right to talk about it among each other before quitting work. I believe that as citizens of the United States, under the Constitution of the United States, they have a right to act in concert if they wish so to act. I know of nothing in the Constitution which justifies a deprivation of that right.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is nothing in the amendment which deprives anyone of the right of free speech. The effort has been to prevent a strike against the Government of the United States. For my part, I would never approve of any legislative suggestion which gave to any Government employee the right or power to strike down and render impotent the Government of the United States by engaging in a strike against the Government.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the reason I made the inquiry which I made a few moments ago with reference to what constitutes a strike was that I wished to have, if possible, some definition which would give us a standard that could be laid alongside the Constitution of the United States and enable one to know when one was subjecting oneself to imprisonment for exercising his constitutional rights. That is the reason that I explained a moment ago what I regard as the civil rights of the citizen to cease working, and to talk with his fellows about ceasing to work, or act collectively in the presentation of a demand for wage increases, or improved working conditions. If Senators call that striking, that will have to be their privilege, but I call doing those things the exercise of the privileges of citizenship in the United States of America.

I do not see how we can pass a measure containing the general word "strike," without any definition of what we mean being inserted, without running the risk of subjecting those who happen to work for the Government to loss of their civil rights to quit work if they do not wish to work for the Government, to present their demands in concert, to talk at public meetings, and, if they desire, to quit at the same time. I do not know whether the authors of the provision consider that that would be a strike. I know there are many courts which are unfriendly to labor which would call anything like it a strike.

I realize the necessity of the functioning of the Government of the United States, but the Constitution did not say that the Government could make a person work for it if he did not desire to do so, except in the exercise of certain recognized authority in the Government provided by the Constitution. The Government can draft citizens into the Army and the Navy, it can make them defend the country in time of war, but I think there is some serious question as to the power of the Government to draft people into the Government service, or to keep them in it, in violation of their will. I think there is serious question as to whether the Government can subject a man to punishment in the penitentiary if he quits, with several other people, working for the Government, in spite of the fact that someone might happen to call that a strike.

Yet, Mr. President, we are passing a bill which contains a provision that any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States—and that means quitting work, I assume—subjects himself to conviction for commission of a felony, and subjects himself to punishment by a fine of not more than a thousand dollars or imprisonment for not more than 1 year.

I am not saying anything about any part of the amendment except that which relates to what I have been discussing; I am not referring to anyone who proposes to overthrow the Government of the United States by force. Of course, it is levying war against the Government when one proposes to overthrow it by force. It is almost treason when one proposes to destroy the Government of the United States by force, and when one commits an overt act in furtherance of such a purpose, that seems to me very much like treason against the Government of the United States. But I cannot put that in the same category with the act of one who by himself, or in concert with others, quits working for the Government.

It is all the more important that we should be clear in what we say, because, as the Senator from Washington has pointed out, the Government owns power plants. What about the TVA? That is owned substantially by the Government of the United States. What about all the other works the Government of the United States carries on?

As a practical matter, if employees of the Government dare to protest against the wages and working conditions in any enterprise owned by the Government, as well as the service of the Government itself, if people who are unfriendly to labor administer the law, they will hold the penitentiary over the employees' heads. That is just one more encroachment upon the civil immunities of citizens, it seems to me, upon what I thought to be the civil constitutional rights of the citizenry of this country, because I thought we had not yet gotten ready to abandon the rights of the individual in the United States of America, even against the Government of the United States.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I gladly yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I may have misunderstood my distinguished colleague from Florida, but at least on this side of the aisle I understood him to say that advocating the overthrow of the Government of the United States was almost treason. I would say it was treason.

Mr. PEPPER. Of course. It may be that there is some technical definition of the word "treason," but I meant substantially to say the same thing, that anybody who proposes to overthrow the Government of the United States by force, and commits an overt act in furtherance of that design, commits treason, it seems to me, against the Government of the United States, and of course no one desires to condone that in any possible way.

Mr. President, I merely wanted to say that the proposed action is in a direction that is dangerous to the civil rights of the American people. Due to the tendency toward reaction which is sweeping the Congress and the Nation, I have seen a disposition to yield to an encroachment upon the civil immunities and the constitutional rights of the citizenry of this country that strikes at the very heart of our Republic. I at least wanted to raise my voice in warning against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H. R. 6496) was passed.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. OVERTON, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. GREEN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. WALSH, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. BROOKS, and Mr. WHITE conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, on a voice vote just a few minutes ago the Senate agreed to the spending of $4,100,000,000 for the Navy during the coming year. I do not suppose there is a Senator on the floor who can conscientiously say that he knows within a billion dollars whether this appropriation is right or not. I have read the hearings, I have read the committee report— which does not amount to anything—I have read the bill, and, frankly, I have not the slightest idea whether $4,100,000,000—four thousand one hundred million dollars—is the correct amount the Congress should appropriate for the Navy during the coming year.

If ever there was an illustration of the dire necessity for the enactment of the so-called La Follette bill, which would bring into operation experts who could advise the Committee on Appropriations, I think this is a perfect example.

As I looked through the hearings I read what the admirals said. What else would we expect to hear from admirals except demands for all the money they think Congress will appropriate? I don't blame them—that is their business, but it certainly is our business to double check them, and we have not the facilities for doing it.

I say to Senators that they have sat here today and, by a voice vote, put through a $4,100,000,000 appropriation, and they really do not know very much about it. They do not know whether the battleships which are carried in the appropriation bill are worth anything or not, and they have not had any advice except from the admirals. That observation applies from the first page of the bill to the last.

I hope that when a similar appropriation bill is before us next year, we will know more about it. I think the taxpayers are entitled to an informed judgment when billions of dollars are involved for defense or anything else.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS, 1947

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5452, the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5452), making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will proceed to state the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Treasury Department—Office of the Secretary", on page 2, line 5, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$422,000" and insert "$442,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Tax Legislative Counsel", on page 3, line 12, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$87,500" and insert "$90,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of General Counsel", on page 3, line 18, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$175,000" and insert "$179,100."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Division of Personnel", on page 3, line 21, after the word "Columbia", to strike out "$190,000" and insert "$206,900."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Fiscal Service—Bureau of Accounts", on page 6, line 1, after the word "travel", to strike out "$7,100,000, of which not to exceed $1,000,000 shall be available immediately" and insert "$6,275,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of the Public Debt", on page 9, line 7, after the word "charged", to strike out "$64,700,000" and insert "$65,600,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of the Mint", on page 25, after line 7, to strike out:

For a period of 2 years following the enactment of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to sell or lease for manufacturing uses, including manufacturing uses incident to reconversion and the building up of employment in industry, upon such terms as the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem advisable, to any person, partnership, association, or corporation, or any department of the Government, any silver held or owned by the United States at not less than 71.11 cents per fine troy ounce: Provided, That at all times the ownership and the possession or control within the United States of an amount of silver of a monetary value equal to the face amount of all outstanding silver certificates heretofore or hereafter issued by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be maintained by the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 21, to insert:

(a) Subsection (b) of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to extend the time within which the powers relating to the stabilization fund and alteration of the weight of the dollar may be exercised," approved July 6, 1939, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) (1) Until June 30, 1948, the Director of such mint with the consent of the owner shall deduct and retain of such silver so received 30 percent as seigniorage for services performed by the Government of the United States relative to the coinage and delivery of silver dollars. The balance of such silver so received, that is, 70 percent, shall be coined into standard silver dollars and the same or any equal number of other standard silver dollars shall be delivered to the owner or depositor of such silver. The 30 percent of such silver so deducted shall be retained as bullion by the Treasury or coined into standard silver dollars and held or disposed of in the same manner as other bullion or silver dollars held in or belonging to the Treasury.

"(2) On and after July 1, 1948, there shall be delivered therefor in standard silver dollars or any other coin or coinage of the United States, the full monetary value of the silver so delivered, less such deductions for brassage, coinage, and other mint charges as the Secretary of the Treasury with the approval of the President shall have determined, not to exceed the actual cost thereof: Provided, That such mint is satisfied the silver so delivered has been mined subsequently to June 30, 1948, from natural deposits in the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof."

(b) The following statutes and portions of statutes are hereby repealed:

(1) Section 1805 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended;

(2) Sections 6, 7, and 8, and the second proviso in section 3, of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, approved June 19, 1934 (U. S. C., title 31, secs. 316a, 316b, and 734a).

(c) Until June 30, 1948, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to sell for domestic manufacturing uses, to any person, partnership, association, or corporation, or any department of the Government, any nonmonetized silver held or owned by the United States, at a price of not less than 90.3 cents per fine troy ounce, and thereafter at a price of not less than the legal monetary value (of silver) per fine troy ounce: Provided, That until June 30, 1948, no such sale shall be made unless the purchaser has certified in writing, and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied, that such silver is to be used in domestic industry or the arts and within a period of 6 months after any such sale: Provided, further, That at all times the ownership and the possession or control within the United States of an amount of silver of a monetary value equal to the face amount of all outstanding silver certificates heretofore or hereafter issued by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be maintained by the Treasury: And provided further, That on the consummation of such sale of silver by the Treasury to any purchaser, the purchaser shall immediately take possession of the silver so sold and by him purchased and remove the same from the Treasury, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

(d) Hereafter, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, maximum prices shall not be established or maintained upon—

(1) standard commercial bars or other forms of silver bullion, whether foreign, domestic, or Treasury;

(2) semifabricated silver articles;

(3) silver scrap; or

(4) the processing of silver or silver scrap.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the adoption of the amendments on page 28 of the bill the following may be printed in the RECORD: A letter dated November 27, 1945, from the Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency; a letter dated December 13, 1945, from me to the Secretary of the Treasury in reply to the previous letter; another letter from the Secretary of the Treasury dated December 19, 1945, addressed to me; a letter from me to the Secretary of the Treasury dated February 11, 1946; and the statement made by me on May 9, 1946, before the subcommittee considering this bill.

There being no objection, the matters referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., November 27, 1945.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Further reference is made to your letter of October 26, 1945, requesting a report on S. 1508, a bill "to authorize the use by industry of silver held or owned by the United States."

Enactment of the bill will enable the Treasury to continue selling silver to American industry for manufacturing uses. It is unlikely that domestic production of silver and imports of silver will be sufficient to satisfy the demands of industry for a considerable period of time. A shortage of silver for industrial use would interfere with reconversion and the maintenance of high levels of production and, accordingly, authority for the Treasury to sell silver to industry would greatly assist in the adjustment from a wartime to a peacetime economy.

With respect to leases, the bill would permit the extension, if necessary, of two leases which are now outstanding and which will terminate six months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President. The War Department holds nearly 475,000,000 ounces under lease and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation holds slightly more than 400,000,000 ounces. The silver is used in bus bars located in aluminum and magnesium plants throughout the country and in the War Department's atomic bomb plant in Tennessee.

For the reasons stated above, the Treasury Department recommends that S. 1508 be enacted.

The Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this report to your committee.

Sincerely yours,

FRED M. VINSON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

DECEMBER 13, 1945.

Hon. FRED M. VINSON,
Secretary of the Treasury,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have before me yours of November 27, written to Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate. Your letter indicates that you are favorable to the passage of S. 1508, introduced by Senator GREEN, of Rhode Island. This proposed legislation, in brief, provides for sale of Treasury silver to industry at not less than 71.1 cents per ounce. I am surprised at your attitude on this bill as expressed in your letter, and I feel that I should advise you as to my reasons.

Under existing law our metallic monetary reserves are to be carried by the Treasury in gold and silver at the ratio of three-fourths gold and one-fourth silver. Your Treasury statement of December 6, 1945, indicates that there is a great deficit in our silver reserves as compared to our gold reserves. I realize that such a deficit is the result of numerous contributing factors and I make no complaint whatever about them, but merely point out that a great quantity of silver could be added to our silver reserves and still not meet the requirements of the law above mentioned.

Under our so-called silver statutes, the Secretary of the Treasury was and is required to monetize not less than the cost value of silver purchased; but under the law, the Secretary of the Treasury could have monetized all silver in the Treasury at its monetary value of $1.29 per ounce.

I don't think that I exaggerate when I say that Secretary Morgenthau, your distinguished predecessor, was very pronounced in his opposition to the silver statutes which were placed on the statute books of the Nation during the Roosevelt administration. As a result of his opposition, to these laws, up until just previous to his leaving the Treasury, he adamantly refused to monetize silver, except only the minimum required under the law. As I recall conferences with him and the Special Silver Committee of the Senate, he took the position that to monetize silver was inflationary and unsound, and because of this, he maintained his attitude on silver right up to the time of his leaving the Treasury, except that just previous to this time, and during the consideration by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee of the Bretton Woods Agreement—after a conference with me—he did agree to monetize 300,000,000 ounces of what he said was free silver in the Treasury.

I haven't talked with you about monetary matters since you took over the duties and responsibilities of Secretary of the Treasury, but having in mind your attitude on this subject, so ably and clearly expressed by you while we were both Members of the House of Representatives, I have the hope that your attitude is not, and will not be, the same as your predecessor. Whether the silver laws now on the statute books were correct or incorrect, wise or foolish, they are nevertheless the laws of the land on this subject. They have not been repealed, therefore they are valid, and entitled to the same solemn respect from the executive department of Government as any other laws in the books.

The only money mentioned in the Constitution is gold and silver. Even the worst enemies of silver as money cannot, in my opinion, take the position that the issuance of a silver certificate is the least bit more inflationary than the creation of bookkeeping dollars which are created, and have been created for years, by the delivery by the United States Treasury of Government securities to the commercial banks of the country, and the establishment of demand deposits to the credit of the Government without the requirement of any reserve whatsoever. There is one very important distinction between the issuance of a silver certificate against silver in the Treasury and the exchange of Government bonds bearing interest for demand deposits in our banks. This item of distinction is the item of interest, so important to the banker.

When our Government is running our printing presses overtime in the printing of bonds bearing interest which are to be exchanged for demand deposits in the banks, it is inconceivable to me that the best interests of the taxpayer can be conserved by selling silver money from the Treasury, which belongs to the taxpayer, at 71.1 cents an ounce when its monetary value is $1.29 per ounce.

According to the Treasury statement of December 6, 1945, there are in the Treasury 449,360,347.02 ounces of silver against which silver certificates have not been issued. This silver money of the people and the taxpayers remains dormant while the people and the taxpayers pay interest on billions of dollars in bonds which have been traded for demand deposit dollars. The quantity of silver above mentioned doesn't loom large against billions of dollars owed on bonds, but if monetized for its full monetary value, at least it could be substituted for an identical amount of interest-bearing bonds, and by such substitution would save the taxpayer and the people millions of dollars in interest annually.

As a Secretary of the Treasury who, I am sure, is most interested in saving the taxpayer every dollar possible, I can't understand why every unused ounce of silver should not be monetized immediately.

During the war, silver was needed by industry for war purposes and of course it was only natural to use silver in every way possible for the winning of the war, so the law which was passed by Congress, on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, that the Treasury be allowed to sell some of its silver to industry at 71.1 cents per ounce could be justified on that basis. But now that the war is over, under what philosophy should the silver fabricating industry of this country, or any other segment of our population, or group, be allowed to profit by a sale by the Government of silver money below its monetary value? Of course, the fabricator of silver who is asking for a special privilege may answer by saying, "The Treasury didn't pay any more for the silver than we are asking it to sell silver for." But the fact that the Treasury makes a profit out of the miners of silver is certainly not a legitimate reason why this profit should be passed on by the Government to another segment of the population. The profit provided for in the law was for the benefit of all the people, and certainly not intended for some small special group.

There are those in this country, including many big bankers, who would prefer the Government to dispose of all its silver at whatever it could get for it, because silver certificates are the only form of money now in use in the United States that do not carry the tribute of interest. But the great masses of the people, if they understood the situation, I am sure would vociferously demand that the silver money in the Treasury be fully utilized, thereby saving millions of dollars in interest by substituting it for an equal amount of interest-bearing Government securities, regardless of the attitude of the silver fabricators and those who don't like silver as money.

The wisdom of the silver laws is not in question at this time; they constitute a part of our statutory law. For the present this question is behind us.

I respectfully request in conclusion, Mr. Secretary, that the Treasury's silver be used and utilized under the law for the whole population and not to satisfy a very small segment of our population who are asking that they be granted a special privilege.

Respectfully and cordially yours,

ABE MURDOCK.

DECEMBER 19, 1945.

Hon. ABE MURDOCK,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR ABE: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 13, 1945, concerning S. 1508, a bill to extend the Green Act for 2 years.

As I told you when I appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency, I have not yet had an opportunity to prepare a reply but I shall do so shortly.

Very truly yours,

FRED M. VINSON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

FEBRUARY 11, 1946.

Hon. FRED M. VINSON,
Secretary of the Treasury,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Ever since you appeared before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee in December, the silver jewelers and other fabricators of silver have continued to high-pressure Members of Congress for the passage of the Green silver bill. To allow any group or segment of the population to purchase our metallic money from the Treasury at less than its monetary value would establish an incongruous, unjustifiable, unreasonable, and unbusinesslike policy.

There was some little excuse for the temporary allowance of the purchase of silver from the Treasury during the war, but it would seem that the silver jewelers and fabricators, having been granted this convenience as a temporary war measure, are very reluctant to give it up now that the war is over. In other words, the camel got his nose under the tent, and probably won't be satisfied until his whole carcass is permanently enthroned in the Treasury.

Would you, as Secretary of the Treasury, consider at all the sale of any part of our gold reserve at less than its monetary value? We are sure your answer would be emphatically and definitely "no." It is, therefore, impossible for us to reconcile selling our silver reserve at anything less than its monetary value. There is a school of thought in this country that considers metal reserves as antiquated or anachronistic, but so far as the Congress is concerned, our statutes definitely provide for gold and silver metallic reserves.

We call your attention to the fact that on February 6, according to the Treasury statement, there was in the Treasury 330,009,914.4 ounces of idle silver against which silver certificates could be issued on the basis of the monetary value of silver of $1.29 per ounce. This totals $425,712,789.57. The annual interest on this amount, at 2 percent per annum, is $8,514,255.79. This interest item, compared to our vast national debt, is insignificant, but, nevertheless, in the mind of our average taxpayer it is a very sizable amount.

This amount of interest could be saved to the taxpayers of the Nation annually if our idle silver was monetized and used. The unjustifiable policy of Secretary Morgenthau, during the numerous years he was Secretary of the Treasury, in refusing to monetize idle silver, while at the same time he was borrowing by the billion, cost the taxpayers of this country hundreds of millions of dollars in unnecessary interest payments. It is our hope that the same charge cannot be brought against the present Secretary of the Treasury.

All the pressure now being exerted on Members of Congress—and we assume the same pressure is being exerted on the Treasury—for passage of the Green silver bill could be terminated immediately if this idle silver was monetized. What reason is there for not doing this? What excuse can be made for holding idle money in the Treasury instead of using it to retire interest-bearing Government securities?

The Senate will soon be considering the proposed British loan, which, without doubt, will be funded through exchange of interest-bearing securities for demand deposits in the Federal Reserve banks. A lot of Senators will, at that time, be asking the question why our idle silver has not been put to use. We respectfully urge you, Mr. Secretary, to forthwith monetize every ounce of idle silver in the Treasury. Relieve yourself of criticism that can't help but come from the policy of holding idle money in the Treasury instead of using it to retire interest-bearing securities, and relieve yourself and Members of Congress from the unjustifiable pressure now being exerted by a small group of jewelers and fabricators in their efforts to continue an unconscionable policy of selling the people's money at less than its statutory monetary value.

Sincerely and respectfully yours.

ABE MURDOCK.

STATEMENT OF HON. ABE MURDOCK, A UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF UTAH, APRIL 9, 1946

ONLY SILVER IN TREASURY IS MONEY

Senator MURDOCK. It seems to me that the witness certainly answered the question that was propounded to him, and it seems to me that we cannot lose sight of the fact that the only silver in the Treasury is money.

Under the Silver Purchase Act the minute or second that silver goes into the Treasury, it becomes a part of the monetary stocks of this country and ceases to be a commodity in the ordinary sense of the word.

Senator HAYDEN. Therefore you argue that it is improper to sell it for less than the monetary value?

Senator MURDOCK. To sell money for less than its fixed monetary value is not only improper but absurd and unconscionable. Here is my position, and I think it was well stated by the witness: When this country is being operated, Mr. Chairman, on borrowed money, as it is today and has been for several years, when the Secretary of the Treasury is advocating and spending thousands of dollars in his advertisements for the people to buy bonds, that is, loan their money to the Treasury at a fixed interest rate, how can we, as Members of Congress, lose sight of the fact that there is idle money in the Treasury listed today, or on April 4, at 267,000,000 ounces, plus, of monetary silver?

Now, the witness points out——

Senator MCCARRAN. That is money.

Senator MURDOCK. That is money and made so by statute enacted by Congress and approved by the President. Because they have treated silver monetary stocks as a commodity instead of money, as provided by law, and our Secretaries of the Treasury since the enactment of silver legislation in 1934, in my opinion, have failed to live up to and conform to the law.

QUESTION AS TO WHAT IS FAIR AND REASONABLE PRICE FOR SILVER

I want to repeat, and I am not going to talk very much; I have not done much talking in this committee; I have done a lot of listening, but I still think the crux of this problem is the price which would be a fair price which the fabricators could pay, and which the Treasury could accept without injury to the silver producers in this country.

PROVISION FIXES LOWEST PRICE AT WHICH SILVER COULD BE SOLD BY TREASURY

Senator GREEN. I think a great deal could be said in favor of that point of view, but this law does not require it to stay at 71 cents; it simply makes it permissible for the Treasury to sell, but not less than that, because that was fixed, because that was the amount it paid.

In other words, we will say the Treasury can, if it deems it desirable, in the interests of the national economy, sell some of this unused silver which it has at not less than it costs. As a matter of fact, on a great part of it, it would make a profit even at that price.

That is the point which we ought to emphasize in a discussion of this.

Senator REED. Senator, you would not advocate that the Treasury should sell silver at a price lower than the cost at this time which would have the effect of holding down the price of silver in a free market?

Senator GREEN. I think all those facts ought to be taken into consideration by the Treasury.

Senator REED. What I am trying to do is get this consideration of the committee down to a realistic basis.

If we can reach the solution on this price question, I take it there is no particular objection to that.

QUESTION AS TO RAISING PRICE OF SILVER TO $1 AN OUNCE

Senator HAYDEN. I would like to ask a question. You heard the suggestion made by American Smelting & Refining Co., through Mr. Brownell, that the price might be raised to sell at $1 an ounce. It was suggested at $1 in the letter written to Senator MCCARRAN.

How does that strike you?

Mr. SNYDER. That boils down to the matter of whether you get the values that are needed in these western ores to preserve that industry. Whether you get it in silver, gold, lead, or zinc.

The reason I suggested that the price be allowed to go to the monetary price was because the over-all cost of consumers—getting back on this inflation idea—would be less in increasing the price of silver to $1.29 than it would be in increasing the prices of lead and zinc, because the prices of lead and zinc are pyramided more in fabrication to the ultimate consumer, according to OPA. I do not know.

Senator HAYDEN. I can understand that point.

Mr. SNYDER. It looked to me like that was the easiest and best way of doing it.

Of course, I would like to see any industry protected and preserved if it is possible, because we need them all.

Now, the witness has pointed out here, and I think in a very intelligible way, that when the Government is borrowing money every day, as we are, how can the Representatives of the people, of the taxpayers, take the position, Mr. Chairman, that the money of the people should be allowed to remain idle or sold at 1 cent, or a fraction of a cent less than its monetary value?

That is the point, I think, that we, as Senators, must bear in mind. The Treasury of the United States is not a commodity market; it is the depository of the money of the people of the United States.

Now, if that money, Mr. Chairman, can go right out into the market places and purchase dollar for dollar what your borrowed money can, then what right have we as Representatives of the people to sell that money at less than its monetary value?

Senator WILLIS. In other words, that 250,000,000 we have there, we cannot sell at less.

Senator MURDOCK. That money belongs to the people of Indiana, of Kansas, of Nevada, of Rhode Island, and every other State, and I challenge any Senator here to go back to his own constituents and tell them that, "I, as your Senator, supported legislation to sell your silver money there in the United States Treasury for 71 cents an ounce that is worth $1.29 an ounce, and at the same time I am fully aware that the Secretary of the Treasury is borrowing money and paying interest on it to carry on the Government, and that you people as taxpayers are paying for it."

POINT AT ISSUE IS CAMOUFLAGED

The people would rise up, in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, and condemn such action in no uncertain terms. But the trouble is, the point that is really at issue here is camouflaged to the extent that the people out in our States are being led to believe that the only question involved is the relief of the jewelry and silver-fabricating industry without disclosing to them the unfair windfall that they would get at the expense of all the taxpayers.

My answer to Handy & Harman, my answer to the other silver fabricators and brokers of this country, is this: There is a place where you can get silver, just like the mining industry of the country produces it. That is out there in the hills and deserts of the West.

If you need silver so badly, why do we not see a few of you out there, with your burros, prospecting for the ore that is out there, and available to you if you have the fortitude and the gambling spirit that it takes to go out and produce metal. It is out there if you want to go after it instead of siting in your fine offices hatching up schemes to make you the beneficiaries of the profit the Government has made out of the metal-mining industry.

PROFIT TAKEN FROM MINERS TO BE GIVEN TO SILVER FABRICATORS

I want to make one further observation. After the metal-mining people of the country have brought silver into the Treasury, and have allowed the people of the United States to make the profit on it that is taken from the miner under the law, then I say it is unconscionable, Mr. Chairman, for a small segment of the population, to wit, the silver-fabricating industry and silver brokers to come in and claim the profit that has been taken away from the miners, the raw-material producers, that bring it in.

FAIR PRICE FOR SILVER

Senator REED. Mr. Snyder, I take it you agree with Mr. Brownell, of the American Smelting & Refining Co., that you desire to retain the fabricators as a customer.

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Senator REED. But the question in your mind is what would be, or could be, a fair price at which they can obtain silver?

Mr. SNYDER. As stated previously, I think that a fair price, and one that would not in any way injure them is the monetary price at which they can buy all the silver they want.

SILVER FABRICATORS HAVE ABSORBED INCREASED PRICE IN SILVER

Senator GREEN. May I bring another fact to Senator Reed's attention because I know he is very sincere in his attitude and I appreciate it. That is the silver industry—those who are using silver, the silver users—are now paying 37 cents more per ounce, without any mark-ups. They pay that much more for silver and do not get any mark-ups.

Senator REED. Senator, they are not allowed any profit.

Senator GREEN. No; they have taken it all, although the price of silver has increased.

Now, if they had silver at a dollar, that would mean a 200-percent increase in the metal price to all the silver users, and that is absolutely out of the question.

Senator REED. I tried to cover that point.

Senator GREEN. I know, but I thought you might like to know what the result would be.

Senator REED. What I am struggling for is a solution. I have, perhaps, as little prejudice, and can look at this thing as any man on this committee, which I am trying to do.

I have full sympathy with my friend to the west of me, and I have a great desire to see the silver industry have their raw materials to enable them to employ their people and sell their products.

Senator GREEN. One more thing in this discussion, which has ceased to be a hearing——

Senator REED. We may make more progress.

Senator GREEN. That may be true.

PURCHASE OF SILVER UNDER THE LAW BY TREASURY DEPARTMENT

Neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor the Congress itself has regarded the purchase as it will be monetized.

Senator MURDOCK. All you have to do is read the law, Senator. I think probably it should be inserted.

Senator GREEN. All you have to do is see the way the Treasury is acting and the way the Congress is acting.

Senator MURDOCK. The Secretary of the Treasury has, in my opinion, been indifferent to the law.

Senator GREEN. As far as this law is concerned, that criticism is not pointed at the law; it is pointed at the Secretary of the Treasury.

Senator MURDOCK. Yes.

Senator GREEN. It is the same.

Senator HAYDEN. Are there any further questions of the witnesses?

Senator MCCARRAN. There may be some on reconvening.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. BAILEY, Mr. WHITE, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. REED, conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say that I thank the Senate very much for its approval of this bill and to say that in the Treasury Department the increase made by the Senate was $119,000, and in the Post Office Department, which brings in practically as much money as it costs to operate it, the amount was increased by the Senate just a little over $1,390,000.

THE INHERENT RIGHT OF THE CITIZEN TO WORK

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senate passed two large appropriation bills. In the discussion relating to one of those bills the right to strike against the Government was discussed. That is a subject on which I have positive convictions. Definitely there is no such right. Franklin D. Roosevelt said the same thing in substance. Another great President, Calvin Coolidge, when he was Governor of Massachusetts, said the same thing.

What causes me to rise at this time is a telegram which has just been handed to me, and which I wish to read into the RECORD. It shows a situation which we have neglected very seriously.

The telegram comes from W. F. McKee, secretary and treasurer of Wilson Bros., Sheboygan, Wis. I ask Senators to pay attention to this, because in my humble opinion it presents the beginning of a new and serious situation relating to strikes.

Last week I was in conference with British delegates. One of the leaders of that delegation with whom I was speaking said, "We do not approve the attitude of a certain group of your labor leaders. In England we know that there is only one way to get out of the dilemma we are in, and that is to work and produce."

The telegram reads as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., June 20, 1946.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
Washington, D. C.:

As a citizen and resident of the State of Wisconsin, and as secretary and treasurer of Wilson Bros., national manufacturers of men's wear, I am appealing for your advice and any assistance to prevent the closing down of our 10 factories in 6 States and loss of work to our 1,800 employees through a technicality in the Wagner Labor Act, which is being imposed upon us by the CIO, Mr. Sidney Hillman's Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union. We have never had strikes or labor problems and have been unionized in our main plant at South Bend, Ind., for many years and at Troy and Cohoes, N. Y. Several of our small branch plants do not belong to the union. LaGrange, Ind., plant employing mostly Amish and Menonites who state it is against their religion to belong to any association of any kind, have refused to join the union. Likewise, a newer plant at Sheboygan, Wis., 6 months in operation, have refused to attend any labor meetings, although we have done everything possible under the Wagner Act to indicate our cooperation with the union. The union head in Chicago, Mr. Joe Kaminsky, last week states that we would either force the employees of our nonunion shops to join their union or else. Starting this week, our subcontractors and suppliers have been told by the union in the East and the Middle West to stop shipping us and stop manufacturing for us. Two Chicago contractors were told yesterday and today to cease work for us. Our plant manager was also told today that all contractors would be forced to stop shipments to us. We are continuing under contracts to the United States Government heavy- and light-weight underwear for the armed forces, and, undoubtedly, these contracts may also be affected if this policy spreads further to our other plants. The union subordinates of Mr. Sidney Hillman, mainly Mr. Joe Kaminsky, of Chicago, are adamant and threatening in their demands to force us to break the Wagner Act, which we cannot allow ourselves to do. I am sure Mr. Sidney Hillman would not approve of such action if he were aware of the circumstances. As a citizen, I am appealing to you to intervene to prevent the first labor disturbance in our 82 years in business.

W. F. MCKEE,
Secretary and Treasurer, Wilson Bros., Sheboygan, Wis.

Mr. President, the situation portrayed in the telegram presents a challenge to Government. We have just heard a lukewarm argument on the point that it is not right to strike against the Government. But here are American citizens who do not want to join unions. Here is a concern with 12 factories, which is threatened unless, contrary to the Wagner Act, it compels certain Amish and Mennonite people, and a group of people in my own State, to join a union. If they do not join the union, all 12 factories will be shut down. Here we have an instance of union officials telling contractors that they cannot work for this concern. They would compel people to join unions.

If the President of the United States had not vetoed the Case bill we would have the answer; but the Case bill was vetoed, and so we have the beginning of another reign of terror, because there seems to be within the Government a supergovernment sufficiently strong to take from the individual the inherent right, not to strike, but to work. I ask the consideration of this body for the situation which I have described.

Immediately upon receipt of the telegram which I have read, my secretary, at my instance, sought to get in contact with certain labor officials of the Government. The result was that the following telegram was sent to Mr. McKee:

Telegram received. Howard C. Colvin, Assistant Dirctor of Conciliation, promised have their commissioner of conciliation in Chicago get in touch with you also with the union to see what can be done to help.

That is using the language of Mr. Colvin.

Chapman, of National Labor Relations Board, suggests you contact their regional director, George Bott, Midland Building, 176 West Adams Street, Chicago. Telephone Central 9660. Advise if can be of further assistance.

ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senator.

A little while ago we discussed for 3 weeks or more the rights of the public. The Government needs the material involved in this case. The armed forces may be compelled to do without it. Why? Because labor racketeers dominate the situation. Are we going to sit quietly by? Some of us will not. The situation is so serious that 1,800 men may be thrown out of work. The public will lose the benefit of the income resulting from this industry, and the armed forces will not get the material for which they have contracted, all because a labor racketeer, Kaminsky, in Chicago, has the power to take away from men the right to work. If there is any inherent right, it is the right of every man to earn his own bread.

In one plant in Indiana certain Amish people did not want to join the union because it was contrary to their religion to do so. But Kaminsky, in Chicago, said, "You join. Live under my dictates. Take my orders, or you do not work"—to say nothing of the effect upon the investment of the stockholders, including widows and eleemosynary institutions which own the bonds of these organizations.

Mr. President, the situation calls for action. I trust that before Congress takes a recess it will do what I have suggested on other occasions. I hope it will have "guts" enough to write into a bill the spirit and the letter of American fair play, which will protect the rights of management and labor, but, above all, will protect the rights of the public and see that they are not submerged and neglected.

AUDIT REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, before the Committee on the Judiciary this morning there came to my attention, in connection with the reorganization bills, a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a letter dated June 17, 1946, from the Corporation's Audit Division of the General Accounting Office to the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, covering an audit made of the affairs of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its subsidiaries and affliates for the year ended June 30, 1945, under section 5 of the act of February 24, 1945. The letter and accompanying papers have been filed with the Senate and have been referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry; but prior to doing so, I wish to state that upon consideration of the intelligence disclosed in the communication to which I have referred, it was decided that it was of such seriousness and moment that it should be transmitted to the Senate as an interim report, as well as taken up administratively with the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The audit is proceeding with the utmost diligence and dispatch; but the conditions stated in the communication to which I have just referred make it impossible for us to say when the audit will be completed and when our ultimate report will be rendered. The letter is signed by the Comptroller General, Mr. Lindsay C. Warren.

The following statements appear in the communication which has been transmitted to the Senate:

Indeed, it has been found that a satisfactory audit cannot be made and that no certification may be given of the financial statements of the companies at the close of June 1945. It is even doubtful that a satisfactory audit and certification of the statements of June 30, 1946, will be possible.

The reason for that is stated to be as follows:

Specific examples of the failure of the accounting function in RFC are presented in the paragraphs immediately following. These paragraphs point out that:

1. The company does not control its $7,000,000,000 investment in properties;
2. The company does not control its $800,000,000 investment in inventories of Defense Supplies Corporation, Metals Reserve Company, and United States Commercial Company;
3. The company does not control its cash receipts;
4. The company does not control rentals earned on its properties;
5. The company does not control certain important liabilities;
6. The company does not control recoveries due it on plant extensions built for utility companies;
7. The company has not controlled its surplus-property-disposal activities; and
8. The company has had no control over the activities of its affiliate, United States Commercial Company.

Mr. President, I shall not go into the details of the report, but I desire to propound the following parliamentary inquiry: Will this report be printed as a matter of course, or will it be necessary that a motion be made to have the report printed as a public document?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Parliamentarian that the report was laid down yesterday, but that no order to have the report printed was entered.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I now move that the report be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERGUSON subsequently said: Earlier today I moved that a certain document be printed as a Senate document. Since then it has been called to my attention that the House of Representatives has ordered the same document printed as House Document No. 674. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the previous order be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order previously entered will be rescinded.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire about this item. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill the purpose of the appropriation.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, a number of air bases in foreign countries have been turned over to the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and up to the present time those air bases have been maintained and operated by the Army or the Navy, as the case may be. By reason of the separation of personnel from the military forces, it was necessary to turn over those bases, some of them in Europe, and some of them in other parts of the world, to some authority. Therefore, it was and has now been felt best to turn them over to the Civil Aeronautics Administration.

The matter came before the Appropriations Committee, in the first instance, by way of a special message from the White House requesting a deficiency appropriation. We refused to go along with that request. The matter then came up in this regular appropriation bill, and the amount has been much reduced from the amount which was requested in connection with the proposed deficiency appropriation. The item is not a permanent appropriation or a permanent activity; but we must maintain those bases in order to secure safety in travel by air to our own people and to other passengers, until such time as the nations in which these particular bases are located arrange to take them over. These bases now are 23 in number. The Army still maintains some bases, but the 23 have been or will be turned over to the Civil Aeronautics Administration.

It will be found that a somewhat similar item appears for the Weather Bureau, because the Weather Bureau must furnish information to those who operate these bases.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, my attention has been called to a matter, but I am not sure what provision of the bill covers it. Is there an appropriation in the bill for the maintenance of a repair shop for the repairing of airplanes?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; that provision is on page 60 of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think it would be well to have it read when we reach it. Will the Senator defer until we have reached it on page 60?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 58, after line 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 7, after the word "specifications", to strike out "$750,000" and insert "$1,000,000, together with the unexpended balance of this appropriation for the fiscal year 1946."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 16, after the word "automobiles", to strike out "$6,200,000" and insert "$7,075,000, of which not to exceed $39,000 may be transferred to the appropriation 'General administration, Office of Administrator of Civil Aeronautics,' and not to exceed $3,000 may be transferred to the appropriation 'Printing and binding, Department of Commerce'."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 9, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$1,200,000" and insert "$1,593,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on the same page, in line 18, after the word "Provided", to strike out "That no funds in this paragraph shall be expended for the pay of any employees of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for the maintenance of more than one parts warehouse, nor for the repair or overhaul of aircraft costing more than $100 per airplane" and insert "That no funds in this paragraph shall be expended for the pay of any employee of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for the maintenance of more than one major parts warehouse, or for the repair or overhaul of aircraft when such repair or overhaul cannot be performed by the Civil Aeronautics Administration through exchange or substitution of parts or materials maintained by the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and the cost of parts and materials not maintained in stock would be in excess of $100: Provided further, That all repair and overhaul of aircraft of the Civil Aeronautics Administration which cannot be performed within the foregoing limitation shall be done on contract after submission of bids."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is the item to which the Senator from Georgia referred a few moments ago. It provides for the maintenance and operation of aircraft by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The item to which the Senator's attention has been called is inserted by reason of the fact that the Civil Aeronautics Authority proposes to acquire parts of airplanes which have been declared to be surplus. It is proposed to have one repair station in the United States, to be located at Oklahoma City. At that point the planes would be repaired by the use of these parts. I may say that the proposal has attracted considerable attention and some opposition on the part of mechanics and repair-shop owners throughout the country, who claim that it is proposed to put the Government in competition with private industry.

The language which the committee inserted in the bill was to militate against such complaints. It reads as follows:

That no funds in this paragraph shall be expended for the pay of any employee of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for the maintenance of more than one major-parts warehouse, or for the repair or overhaul of aircraft when such repair or overhaul cannot be performed by the Civil Aeronautics Administration through exchange or substitution of parts or materials maintained by the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and the cost of parts and materials not maintained in stock would be in excess of $100: Provided further, That all repair and overhaul of aircraft of the Civil Aeronautics Administration which cannot be performed within the foregoing limitation shall be done on contract after submission of bids.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I have already yielded to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. Later I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator be kind enough to state the estimated cost of this service?

Mr. McCARRAN. The entire estimate for the parts and service is, as I understand, $1,593,000. The Senator will note that we have increased the amount recommended by the other House, namely, $1,200,000, on page 60, in line 9, to $1,593,000.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know whether my information is correct, but I have been advised that this entire work has heretofore been performed, even during the past year, at a cost not exceeding $90,000, and that a considerable increase over that figure is provided for by authorizing the CAA to carry on that operation.

Mr. McCARRAN. What the Senator has said has been a contention which has been made to the committee. The committee, in view of the explanation which had been given to it, thought that it was imperative that the CAA be permitted to acquire these parts. It seemed to the committee that the CAA should have the privilege of acquiring and using parts which will be declared surplus, and that it should have the right to repair its own craft by the use of such parts.

There came from the other House a contemplation of two separate places where repairs could be made. Those two places have now been reduced to one, which will be Oklahoma City, where all the work will be centralized, and economies will be effected.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, since the amendment was agreed to the other day in the committee, I received the following telegram:

MEMPHIS, TENN., June 19, 1946.

Senator KENNETH D. MCKELLAR,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

If Senate appropriations bill is passed granting CAA sum asked to operate repair stations not only fixed base operators but all small businesses and therefore Nation's backbone ultimately doomed, as explained in letters and editorial pages 647 and 648 Senate appropriations hearings. We earnestly and respectfully ask your help in this crisis by insisting language Randolph amendment be restored.

SOUTHERN AIR SERVICES,
WILLIAM R. KENT.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like to read from the report an excerpt which may enlighten the Senator. It appears under the subheading "Maintenance and Operation of Aircraft," and is as follows:

The committee has received numerous letters protesting against the Civil Aeronautics Administration establishing and operating facilities for the repair of aircraft in competition with private concerns. The committee went into the matter very thoroughly. Mr. Wright in his testimony stated the position of the Civil Aeronautics Administration as follows:

"Mr. WRIGHT. That letter is very relevant to what I was about to say."

I had presented to Mr. Wright a letter which protested in considerably the same way as did the telegram which was read by the Senator from Tennessee.

I continue reading from the report:

The point of view taken by this gentleman, and by many others, has been at variance with what we feel.

We agree entirely that Government should not compete with private industry, and it is not our intention to do that, or to get a wedge in the door, as expressed in the press, that would permit the Government to get into that business.

We call your attention to the fact that our maintenance and operation of aircraft is based on the use of spare parts made available, at no cost, from surplus.

Therefore, it is an entirely different situation from that which would maintain in a normal time when we would be using aircraft currently available from manufacturers.

We are using principally surplus military aircraft that are out of production now.

Therefore, we ask the Congress for language that would permit us to service them by means of spares over a period of 5 years.

What we want is a storage depot for those spare parts, plus the authority to take a liberal attitude in throwing away a wing or other damaged part, and putting on a brand new spare part we are getting for nothing, whereas, in normal times we would have that wing repaired through a contract with a commercial company.

Therefore, we maintain we are saving the taxpayers a substantial amount of money in this manner, and we are not putting a toe in the door to compete with industry.

I now read further from Mr. Wright's testimony, as set forth on page 654 of the printed hearings:

Mr. WRIGHT. That was what I meant when I said at the various regional headquarters we would have to do the 100-hour inspections and install such spare parts as would be necessary because of the fact that the airplane was so crippled it could not fly to Oklahoma City.

Now, I do not know whether this should be on the record or not, but we have discussed this with Mr. Randolph, and we have proposed to him language that I think would take care of the objection raised here, and we would like to put it on the record as to what we would do.

That is the language which is now found in the bill at the bottom of page 60, reading, "no funds in this paragraph shall be expended," and so forth. I read the language a moment ago.

I wish to say to the Senator from Tennessee, and also to the Senator from Georgia, that there still remains some misapprehension with reference to the language. I am not at all wedded to it. I wish only to allow the Civil Aeronautics Authority to use the spare parts, because I believe that for them to do so would be economical. I wish also to give to the Civil Aeronautics Authority the right to have space where they may centralize and store the spare parts. I have no desire that they engage in competition with industry, and if I believed that the language of the amendment permitted such, I would not support it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to advise whether the proviso stricken out in line 18, page 60, of the bill, is the so-called Randolph amendment?

Mr. McCARRAN. The provision from lines 18 to 22, inclusive, is the so-called Randolph amendment. It came over from the House, and was put in, as I understand, on the floor of the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. The only information I have with regard to this is the telegram which I have read. The matter will go to conference, and we will discuss it there.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is my idea, and if there is anything wrong about it, it can be corrected.

I wanted the Senator to know what my frame of mind was, that I would not permit the Civil Aeronautics Authority to go into competition with private industry, while at the same time I want them to have a chance to use these spare parts.

Mr. GEORGE. I think some consideration also should be given to the relative costs. If the information which has come to me is correct, the actual cost to be incurred, will be considerably in excess of what it would be if the repairs were made in private shops and facilities throughout the country. I think that is a matter which also should be considered.

Mr. McCARRAN. I agree with the Senator, and I certainly shall give it consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCLELLAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and myself I wish to offer an amendment on page 37, line 11, to strike out "$1,700,000" and insert "$1,900,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 37, line 11, after the name "District of Columbia", it is proposed to strike out "$1,700,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,900,000."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to make only a brief statement concerning the amendment.

The effect of the amendment would be to increase the appropriation for the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice to the amount of the Budget estimate. The House cut the item $200,000 under the Budget estimate.

As everyone knows, the war has had the effect of further concentrating economic power in the United States. I feel very definitely that it is of vital importance that the Antitrust Division should have at least the funds recommended by the Budget Bureau. In my opinion, an error was committed by the Budget Bureau in not recommending more funds for this Division in the original Presidential estimates.

The effect of the cut by the House would be to reduce anywhere from 25 to 35 the number of persons available to the Antitrust Division to carry on the responsibilities imposed upon it by the statutes in its field of operations. Moreover, it would mean a further curtailment in personnel, because, of course, this Division must accept the curtailment which flows from the 14-percent increase in pay granted in the act recently signed by the President.

The House committee in its report justified this reduction on the ground that the Antitrust Division was conducting investigations which were in the nature of a harassment of small business. I should like to point out that the Antitrust Division now has pending or in process very vitally important cases, of which I shall enumerate only a few.

If this cut remained in the bill it would adversely effect cases and investigations, some of which involve plumbing supplies, small-loans cases, the flat-glass cases, the anti-friction-bearing case—which affects the General Motors Corp. and five other companies.

There are also two cases dealing with plastics, and the fluorescent- and incandescent-lamp case, affecting the General Electric and Westinghouse companies. There are also cases affecting the Association of American Railroads, the Imperial Chemical Industries, which is a du Pont organization, stainless steel, the Safeway and Kroger stores, television, and medical and dental supplies.

These are some of the cases which are involved, and I submit, Mr. President, that nothing can be found in this very important list of cases which falls in the category of harassment of small enterprise.

I should like to call attention also to the monograph of the TNEC No. 29, on page 348, which gives a list of the 200 largest nonfinancial corporations as of December 31, 1937. Of the 200, there are 53 which are now defendants in antitrust cases being carried on by the Antitrust Division.

My plea for this increase, Mr. President, is predicated upon my firm belief that in order to provide employment in the United States we must indeed and in every true sense of the word have free enterprise. We cannot have free enterprise by merely giving lip service to it while we permit monopoly and monopolistic practices to continue unrestrained. In this period of reconversion from war to peace it is vitally important that the tremendous advances in research and new techniques which have been brought about as a result of the expenditure of the taxpayers' money in wartime research, should be utilized and made available to all the smaller enterprises in the independent segment of our economy in order that we may have the widest possible diffusion of industrial activity and keep open the door of economic opportunity in the United States.

Mr. President, as a part of my remarks, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD an article entitled "A Program To Smash Monopoly," written by me and published in the Progressive of March 4, 1946.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PROGRAM TO SMASH MONOPOLY

(By Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, JR.)

Public attention is focused more intensely than ever on reconversion problems. And rightly so. Our first job is to release the brakes and get our economic machine rolling.

But the time has come also to look at the road ahead. Some of the obstacles and hazards we face almost immediately are the familiar monopolistic restraints on free competition.

The vigorous antitrust program of the Department of Justice was partially choked off during the war. Proposed patent law reforms fizzled in the Congress for lack of direct bearing on the war. Now, 4 years later, we face some of the same problems, intensified by intervening events.

Many antitrust cases pending early in the war were postponed by the Army and Navy on the flimsy excuse that key personnel could not be spared from war duties to participate in the trials. In addition, wartime activities necessitated special economic controls such as priorities, allocations, rationing, and price-fixing. These controls superseded normal competitive markets for a large segment of our economy. Instead of antitrust cases, renegotiation and war-fraud cases became the vehicles by which the Government, as the principal buyer, sought to protect itself.

As soon as the final phases of the labor-management controversy over wages are ironed out, we should be on the high road to peacetime production. We have emerged from the war with an inflated price structure. We have emerged from the war with vastly improved industrial techniques and technological progress.

Much of the progress was sponsored and developed under direct or indirect subsidy from the Government. We have opened many new avenues for industrial development. Under a free and competitive system these benefits will be passed on to the general public in the form of more, better, and cheaper products, on the one hand; and higher wages and dividends on the other.

Hence, it is vital that the Department of Justice discharge its obligation in the months ahead to free our economy of monopoly and monopolistic practices so that industry and trade can operate freely and these benefits can accrue to the public.

Readers of the Progressive are familiar with many of the sensational revelations of antitrust proceedings and congressional investigations of patent monopolies in recent years. Columns of the Progressive have related how reputable American industries made international agreements to divide world markets, set unreasonable prices, restrict production, crush competition, suppress patents, adulterate their products when it served their purposes.

Often, in the process, they served the ends of foreign governments by giving but not receiving information or in withholding from American markets or our armed services superior products or techniques. In effect, they often set themselves up as super-governments with greater allegiance to their industry than to their Government.

The full story of the war and cartels remains yet to be told. Many of the sordid details are told in the fascinating book Cartels, which was written by the present chief "trust buster" of the Government, Mr. Wendell Berge, an Assistant Attorney General of the United States.

This much is certain: For all our vaunted technological genius and bountiful supply of raw materials, we were nearly impotent early in the war because of shortages directly attributable to monopolies and international cartels. Aluminum, magnesium, rubber, optical goods, drugs, and medicines were especially critical. Others were: Explosives, paints, nylon, plastics, matches, diamonds, storage batteries, tanning extracts, miscellaneous chemicals, photographic supplies, and petroleum products. It is probable that further cartel-controlled products will be discovered in the examination of confiscated industrial records in Germany and Japan.

The antitrust cases postponed during the war involved primarily consumers goods, such as fluorescent lighting and other electrical goods, plastics, various chemicals, eyeglasses, and aircraft accessories. It is generally conceded that the Antitrust Division has only scratched the surface in dealing with the extensive monopolistic practices involving consumers goods.

The consumer is not the only one who is interested in curbing such restraints. Too often new industrial enterprises and small businesses are up against insuperable odds in bucking these vested interests. Too often the farmer and small producer are blamed for high prices which are really due to the monopolistic middleman who garners an unreasonable profit between the producer and consumer.

There is only one answer: Alert and aggressive enforcement of the antitrust laws. Such enforcement is the best possible deterrent to future violations. Moreover, if prompt action is taken the situation quickly remedies itself and no one is permanently injured. Without prompt action there may be ultimate fines and reprimands and promises, but also bankrupt competitors.

As stated previously, many antitrust cases involving prices must be postponed until genuine shortages are eliminated and Government price control is removed. However, even before that condition is reached, there is another antitrust aspect that requires close scrutiny: whether or not alleged shortages are genuine, or merely resulting from a conspiracy to withhold commodities from the market in the hope of breaking price ceilings or obtaining larger profits later. There is some evidence which indicates that conspiracies are involved, for example, in the merchandising of men's clothing. The Justice Department announced last week it was conducting investigations.

Similarly, in the field of international trade we are faced with the prospect of Government-controlled monopolies dealing in shortages. For example, importers of tin are complaining in the financial press that they expect to encounter monopoly and price discriminations in buying tin in the Far East. Nothing could do more damage to the cause of world peace and international cooperation than the revival of international monopolies in raw materials.

The pattern of monopoly is usually very simple. The conditions of production, supply, or sale are controlled. The control may be achieved by various agreements, gentlemen's or otherwise. Industries with large aggregations of capital, or those built on a complex patent structure, such as chemical and electrical industries, are particularly susceptible. Industries which control a strategic item or very limited sources of supply are also frequent offenders.

It took almost 10 years of litigation in the courts, and a war, to break the aluminum monopoly in this country. Only a few weeks ago, in the disposition of surplus aluminum war-plants, the Government was able to force certain agreements that probably will insure real competition in aluminum production in the future. The prospect of such free competition and reasonable prices has already stimulated other industries to investigate new uses for aluminum. The opposite condition was true only a few years ago when the automobile industry almost abandoned aluminum entirely because of the pricing and autocracy of the aluminum monopoly.

The Antitrust Division has a very important prerogative and duty in reviewing the proposed disposition of all Government war plants selling for more than $1,000,000. The judicious use of this power can help appreciably in combating present or prospective monopolies.

The Sherman antitrust law has been on the books since 1890. We paid lip-service to it, but did little about it until less than 10 years ago, when the Antitrust Division was revitalized and the famous TNEC Committee began to unearth amazing information on the prevalence of monopoly and conspiracy in American industry. The economic data supplied by that committee provided basic source-material for an accurate insight into modern industrial organization and activity. To insure ourselves of a continuous flow of such vital information, Congress should give consideration to an early revival of a congressional-departmental committee such as TNEC.

Patent law reform is also imperative. Many of the dire consequences of monopoly could be avoided by the simple requirement that, under heavy penalty, all patent agreements must be recorded. This would expose many secret, improper, and illegal agreements. Provision for outright patent cancellations under extreme circumstances would put teeth in such a law.

Similarly, whole-hearted support should be given to the activities of the Antitrust Division. The President's budget for the Division was a great disappointment. He recommended only $1,900,000 for this purpose in the next fiscal year. Although slightly higher than last year, this amount is $425,000 short of the amount Congress provided in the last prewar budget.

Experience has shown that vigorous law-enforcement in this field pays big public dividends. Actually, for each dollar in appropriations, the Treasury gets back a great deal more than that in fines. But, more important, the public gets huge dividends in reduced prices, improved products, and the privilege of doing business in a free economy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Nevada will feel free to accept the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I merely wish to express the same hope, that the distinguished Senator from Nevada will accept the amendment and take it to conference and let it be worked out there. I think there is a very great deal in what has been said in this respect, and that we ought not to take any chances in this matter.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin on behalf of himself and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 68, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "(not to exceed $4,200,000)" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "(not to exceed $5,757,000, $1,557,000 of which is to be exclusively for the Office of Small Business at the seat of government)."

Mr. MURRAY. This amount is to maintain the Office of Small Business in the Department of Commerce. The Senate will recall that a short time ago the operations of the Smaller War Plants Corporation were turned over partly to the Department of Commerce and partly to the RFC.

Mr. McCARRAN. I will accept the amendment and take it to conference.

Mr. MURRAY. Very well. I should like to point out that of course small business has been very severely affected during the progress of the war. A day or so ago I submitted a report from the Small Business Committee which showed the tremendous concentration of business that is going on and the need for maintaining the Office of Small Business to be maintained in the Department of Commerce. I stated at that time the facts in connection with the report briefly. I think it is very important that this restoration should be made to the Commerce Department, because, without it, it would be absolutely impossible for it to continue its efforts in support of small business.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The fund the Senator is proposing to increase will also enable the Office of Small Business to retain some of the field offices, will it not?

Mr. MURRAY. No, Mr. President; that is a separate amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that the amendment the distinguished Senator from Nevada has just accepted provides only for the personnel of the Washington office. Since the Senator from Nevada is willing to accept that amendment, I am sure he will also accept an amendment providing for the field offices, which are much more important, I take it, and that he will take that amendment to conference.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator state his proposed amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. On page 69, line 14, I propose to change the figure from two and a half million dollars to $6,500,000 so as to provide for the field offices. I do not think there is any question that the field offices are much more important than the personnel in the Washington office.

Mr. McCARRAN. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I will take his amendment to conference also.

Mr. MURRAY. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a resolution adopted by the Small Business Advisory Committee of the Department of Commerce. This committee is made up of 21 representatives of small businessmen from the 12 Federal Reserve Districts, each committee member serving without compensation and paying all his own expenses. The committee has been in session for the past 2 days working with the Department of Commerce on improving and intensifying the Department's services to the small businessman.

I ask that the resolution adopted by the Small Business Advisory Committee on June 19, 1946, may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Small Business Advisory Committee of the Department of Commerce, made up of 21 representative small businessmen from the 12 Federal Reserve Districts, each committee member serving without compensation and paying all his own expenses, has been in session for the past 2 days working with the Department of Commerce on improving and intensifying the Department's services to the small businessman.

The Small Business Advisory Committee regrets that the Department of Commerce appropriations bill for funds for the aid of small business has been cut sharply below the level of the recommendations of the President and the Bureau of the Budget.

The Small Business Advisory Committee feels that the amount recommended to the Congress by the President was a minimum amount necessary to carry the essential services of the Department of Commerce to the small businessman in his local community and to help to preserve and to strengthen the competitive position of the small businessman.

The small businessman, including many returning veterans, has neither the time nor the money to come to Washington to search out and profit by the essential business services, the statistical and the technical information necessary to his business. These services and this information are all available in the Department of Commerce and should be made available to the small businessman in his local community.

The program for small business which can only be carried out if these appropriations are restored by the Senate and the House, in the opinion of the committee, would go a long way toward preventing business failures which have been such a heavy drain to our business system.

We believe that support of the restoration of the funds recommended by the President and the Bureau of the Budget is evidence of support of the position of the small businessman.

The Small Business Advisory Committee, now in its second year of unpaid advisory service, respectfully and urgently request that the Senate and the House restore the original appropriations as recommended by the President and the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I draw the attention of the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Montana to the fact that I believe they should also provide for increasing the amount on line 2, page 69, so as to make the amendment complete.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that is correct. I thank the Senator from Nevada for calling that matter to our attention. Does the Senator have the figure of the amount that is necessary?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; I do not.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the clerks may be directed to make the necessary correction in the figure on page 69, line 2, after the bill is passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator state the correction that is asked to be made?

Mr. McCARRAN. In line 2, page 69, the sum of $4,600,000 should be changed to a figure which I do not have at hand at the moment. The change should be made so as to make that figure conform to the amendments proposed.

Mr. RUSSELL. The amendment of the Senator from Montana provides for an increase of $1,557,000. It merely combines the total of the two amendments: the one offered by the Senator from Montana and the one I offered.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerks are directed to make the correction requested.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] on page 68, line 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of Mr. Laurence F. Arnold, beginning on page 794 of the hearings, may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF SMALL BUSINESS—STATEMENT OF LAURENCE F. ARNOLD, ACTING DIRECTOR, BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE, OFFICE OF SMALL BUSINESS

Senator MCCARRAN. Mr. Arnold, in keeping with our practice, will you kindly state for the record and for the enlightenment of the committee, your background, training, and qualifications which you hold, which is, as I understand it, Acting Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Office of Small Business.

BACKGROUND

Mr. ARNOLD. I was born in Newton, Ill., June 8, 1891, graduated from high school, then business college. I worked as a stenographer, went back to Newton and studied law in a law office. I was deputy county tax collector and clerk of the board of tax reviews, and then my stenographic work led me into business which I followed from 1916 to 1936. I worked for 4 years as a stenographer in a wholesale hay and grain distributing firm and then was engaged for 20 years in that business. The scope of the business was Nation-wide.

From 1923 to 1927, I served as a member of the House of the House of Representatives of the Illinois General Assembly, and then completed 3 years of study in political economy and political science in the University of Chicago.

On June 12, 1932, I became president of the People's State Bank, Newton, Ill. I again served 4 years in the Illinois House, 1933 to 1937, and then came to Congress, serving three terms, 1937 to 1943. Then for 2 years was again actively engaged as president of the People's State Bank in my home town.

In 1945, February 19, I came to Washington as a director of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. I served in that capacity until it was merged under the Executive order of January 28, since which time I have been Acting Director of the Office of Small Business.

Senator MCCARRAN. You may proceed, Mr. Arnold.

JUSTIFICATION FOR RESTORATION REQUESTED

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, there is no question but that our Office should have the restoration of the funds which were eliminated in the House reduction.

This Office of Small Business was projected before it was known that the activities of the Smaller War Plants Corporation were to be taken over. I mean, the appropriation was projected last October, and it was not known until January that SWPC activities were being taken over by the Department of Commerce. Therefore, all those activities of the Smaller War Plants Corporation we have had to perform—except loans, which went to RFC—in the Office of Small Business of the Department of Commerce, and we are functioning with the personnel that is provided and must continue to do so.

1946 APPROPRIATION FOR SMALLER WAR PLANTS CORPORATION

The Smaller War Plants Corporation in the fiscal year 1946 had an appropriation of $8,000,000. That was a reduction from the high point 2 years before of $10,000,000, with which to conduct for small manufacturing plants alone, the services that Congress felt, in its wisdom, small business was entitled to.

NEED FOR ADEQUATE STAFF IN FIELD OFFICES

We manufacture the programs over in my office that go to the field, and it is difficult for me to talk about the Office of Small Business without urging the necessity of an adequate field staff and a sufficient number of field offices.

My experience convinces me there should be a field office of the Department of Commerce in every State of the Union, and of course in some States where the business activities are large, more than one is necessary.

PROGRAM BASED ON RECOMMENDATIONS OF SMALL BUSINESS ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Our program is based on the recommendations of what is known as the Small Business Advisory Committee of the Department of Commerce. That committee consists at present of 21 prominent small businessmen from over the Nation. We were to have a meeting next week, which had to be called off because of the railroad strike, wherein it would have reviewed our present program and made any suggestions as to changes, additions or eliminations.

FUNCTIONS OF DIVISIONS

At the present time we have seven divisions in our office, and one is for business information. We give information to veterans and others who desire to go into, or are in, business, with respect to the problems ordinarily encountered in the process of establishing and operating a small business enterprise.

MANAGEMENT SERVICE DIVISION

We have a Management Service Division which provides assistance on the solution of management problems, including problems relating to purchasing, production, and selling, as well as those relating to advertising, financing, storage, delivery, research, personnel, and public relations.

TECHNICAL SERVICE DIVISION

Technical Advisory Service provides assistance with respect to the solution of technical problems of small manufacturers, distributors, or service industry operators, including the most economical use of materials, machines, and equipment by means of improved methods and techniques.

DEFINITION OF "SMALL BUSINESS"

Senator MCCARRAN. How do you define "small business," or a small business institution, as compared with a big business?

Mr. ARNOLD. The War Production Board defined small manufacturing plants as those that employ 500 or less. We are inclined to use the figure 250 employees. Also, we have a dollar volume with respect to service industries, wholesalers, and retailers. It is as follows:

"Wholesaling: Establishments with less than $200,000 annual net sales volume;

"Retailing: Stores with annual net sales or receipts of less than $50,000;

"Service establishments: Annual net sales or receipts of less than $50,000."

We also consider the relative position of a given business in its field. Obviously any definition must be flexible.

TAX, FINANCE, AND LOAN DIVISION

We have a Tax and Finance and Loan Division, providing assistance with respect to the solution of financial problems, concerning the method of financing a small business enterprise, and sources from which funds can be obtained.

COMPETITIVE STANDARDS DIVISION

Competitive Standards or Trade Barriers Division provides assistance to small businessmen with respect to their competitive practice problems in the fields of legislation and regulation, including advice and assistance upon presenting such problems to proper Government agencies.

AREA DEVELOPMENT DIVISION

The Area Development Division which renders assistance to States, municipalities, and other civic and business organizations, in making surveys of the industrial and other resources of specific areas, culminating in recommendations for the establishment of new small business enterprises which would utilize such resources.

SPECIAL SERVICES DIVISION

We also have what we call a Special Services Division, which provides direct assistance to small businessmen in obtaining scarce materials, machinery and facilities, purchasing surplus property, securing work on Government contracts and subcontracts, and reconverting to peacetime production, distribution, and operations.

EXAMPLES OF ASSISTANCE RENDERED BY DIVISIONS

I have examples of assistance we have rendered in each of these divisions, if you would be interested.

Senator MCCARRAN. Yes; I would.

CASE OF W. F. SMITH, RETURNING VETERAN

Mr. ARNOLD. Here is a case in Atlanta, Ga. A year ago, a man by the name of Will F. Smith came to our office. He was a returning veteran. He was interested in going into some type of business. It was suggested that the venetian-blind business might be one worth his consideration. After making a complete survey of the situation, Mr. Smith formed a company and began the manufacture of venetian blinds. About 3 weeks ago he called at our office again in the interests of developing sources of supply of Ponderosa pine. He was given a copy of our trade listing showing producers of Ponderosa pine in Mexico, and as a result he has contacted several Mexican firms and has made arrangements to be supplied with this lumber from Mexico, thereby relieving a critical situation in the production of his product.

Mr. Smith and the other members of his corporation state that without the assistance given him by this office they would have been seriously handicapped in establishing and operating what is now a profitable business.

The foregoing is an example of business counseling or business advice. It happened to be a veteran who was aided.

CASES RELATING TO MANAGEMENT ADVISORY SERVICE

I will now take up Management Advisory Service. A Texan asked us for assistance in establishing an educational service, supply, and equipment business in Texas, for public and private schools from nursery through college levels. We were able to recommend to him the use of a film guide, and best of all we were able to put him in touch with a fellow Texan who was an outstanding authority on audo-vision aids.

Another example, in the State of Washington, an instrument maker and repairman requested assistance in establishing an instrument sales agency. The Office of Small Bussiness was able to put him in touch with sales managers of seven manufacturers of various types of gages, instruments, and controls, all located in the Northwest distribution area.

CASES INVOLVING TECHNICAL ADVISORY SERVICE

In the Technical Advisory Service, we have had 29,000 problems presented in the 3½ years it has been in existence. That Service is a carry-over from the Smaller War Plants Corporation. We have many, many examples of technical advice given which permitted manufacturers to find the flaw in their process or develop a new process.

A St. Louis garment maker stated, "Your report certainly gave me considerable help, especially on electrical sewing-machine problems, and the sealing of edges of cloth." The party referred to the problem of overheating of sewing-machine needles and to the methods of sealing the edges of cloth without stitching.

Another St. Louis firm, manufacturing dry-cleaning equipment, stated they had contacted the firms recommended by our Department concerning a coating material to stop corrosion on a machine they were manufacturing and some very valuable information had been obtained.

A manufacturer of pickles was having difficulty in properly lining curing tanks. Information on a procedure developed through the Technical Service Division has enabled this manufacturer to correct the difficulties.

A manufacturer of bedsprings complained he could not satisfactorily paint the product without expensive hand labor. Modern electrostatic equipment was brought to his attention which enabled him to compete with manufacturers larger than himself by eliminating considerable hand labor.

CASES RELATING TO TAX, FINANCE, AND LOAN SERVICE

An example of tax and finance is presented, in a case I am assisting on now. A Chicago manufacturer had three different loans with Smaller War Plants Corporation. He owed $43,000 on his last loan, made application to RFC for $113,000. He had bought a plant for $75,000 and paid for it, which depleted his working capital. He owed $45,000, bills payable. His total investment is valued by the RFC at approximately $185,000. The case had come to Washington under RFC rules, and our Commerce man in Chicago telephoned me to try to get him proper contacts with RFC to present his case here. As a result, the case was reviewed, returned to Chicago, reworked, and is now back here. The amount is for $150,000, and he has secured some stand-by agreements from creditors until he has paid off the RFC loan. In contacting RFC yesterday, it was indicated that apparently the loan would be approved. He has a contract to produce an end product, which he has heretofore manufactured, for a large merchandising firm in Chicago. It is a noncancelable $250,000 contract. Without financial aid this manufacturer is "sunk," he must go out of business. We think we have him on the right road.

LOAN MADE BY RFC

Senator McCARRAN. You do not furnish the financial aid, do you?

Mr. ARNOLD. We have no lending facilities.

Senator McCARRAN. He must get that from the RFC?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is true. We facilitate his processing of the loan.

Senator McCARRAN. Will he eventually pull out?

Mr. ARNOLD. He paid the Smaller War Plants two loans off and paid the third loan down to $43,000. The trouble was he got caught in the last half of 1945, in the reconversion period after the war, and lost $40,000. He had made $20,000 in the first half. He is now in a position to go ahead and make money if he can be financed and, as I say, it appears certain that RFC will finance him.

Another case of aid in my home town, a veteran who before the war had a Ford agency had returned. The agency had been retained for him, but he had no building wherein to conduct his business.

Knowing me, he wrote me of his plight. He needed money to construct a building. I found that for him construction was impossible. As a result, I advised him to go to a bank and try to get them to make him a loan with three-fourths RFC guaranty, which he did. He secured $6,000, bought himself a Quonset hut, 40 by 100 feet long, which the Ford Motor Co. has approved for his business building. That permits this veteran to go ahead and do business.

SOURCE OF QUONSET HUT

Senator McCARRAN. Where did he get the Quonset hut?

Mr. ARNOLD. He bought it in Charleston, Ill. I understand it had never been put up.

Senator McCARRAN. It was Army surplus property?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes, sir; Army surplus property. When he can, he tells me he will build a brick-and-glass front and use this for his workshop, but until that time, it has satisfied the Ford Motor Co. as their place of doing business.

SITUATION OF QUONSET HUTS IN NEVADA

Senator McCARRAN. The reason I asked that question was, I know of a great quantity of those Quonset huts laying out in the elements in my State, and I know of a number of people who would like to acquire them and I have been trying to jar them loose for a long time so they could use them.

Mr. ARNOLD. You should be in touch with our office. We do that work for you.

CASE IN AREA-DEVELOPMENT DIVISION

Area development is another division.

LETTER FROM ARKANSAS RESOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT COMMISSION REQUESTING REVIEW OF AREA-DEVELOPMENT PROBLEMS

We have a letter from the Arkansas Resources and Development Commission, located in the State capital, Little Rock, stating that they have gone as far into the matter of developing that State as they feel they can without some information from us. They asked us to do four things:

"(a) Review the purposes, functions, and organization of the program at both State and local levels, to make such suggestions as you can for clarification and development of purposes and responsibilities. Although the program is, as I have said, operating well, I feel that we should take advantage of such suggestions for improvement as a well-trained specialist can make.

"(b) Review our selection of extractive industries which we think can be established or further developed on the basis of our natural production resources.

"(c) Review our selection of manufacturing industries from the standpoint of factors generally considered to be necessary for the establishment of these industries as compared with conditions which exist in Arkansas. In this respect we particularly need assistance in the evaluation of markets, in the evaluation of opportunities for correlated industries, and in the evaluation of the possibilities for development of a balanced economy in the several physical provinces of Arkansas.

"(d) Suggest other aspects of a State development program to provide technical and other types of assistance to local people in the establishment and operation of new plants. In many cases we have found that local industries are not established because of the lack of local know-how. Department of Commerce plans for providing technical and managament assistance will, of course, have a bearing on our requirements in Arkansas."

COOPERATION WITH COAL-MINING AREAS

We have been working very closely in our Area Development Division with the coal-mining area which centers around Herrin, Ill., and the anthracite area centering around Scranton, Pa. Both are mined-out areas having a surplus of labor, no shortage of homes. They need some new small industries to come in and take the place of the employment that was provided by mines in the past.

EXTENT OF MERCHANDISE ASSISTANCE RENDERED

Senator McCARRAN. Are you doing anything toward getting merchandise for these small business concerns?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not understand what you mean by merchandise.

Senator McCARRAN. Merchandise, of course, will come along as time goes on and as the product increases, but at the present time are you doing anything toward assisting small business in various sections of the country to get merchandise?

Mr. ARNOLD. We are helping in OPA matters very materially.

That comes under our special services. I have left that information for the last.

SPOT ASSISTANCE

Small business continues to need assistance in breaking bottlenecks of reconversion. Shortage of materials besets small business. Often price adjustments are needed. The type of problem requires immediate attention. We call this spot assistance.

CASES FOR RELIEF FROM OPA RESTRICTIONS

During April 263 small businessmen requested relief from OPA price restrictions—we processed 237 of these and, through cooperation of OPA, were able to bring relief in a majority of the cases.

CASES FOR PRIORITY ASSISTANCE

During April the Office of Small Business processed 2,200 applications for priority assistance. In a substantial number of cases, approximately 75 percent, we were instrumental in assisting these small firms in obtaining scarce materials.

Senator McCARRAN. Is it possible that the condition has come in this country where we are financing the Office of Price Administration to set up barriers, and then we are financing your concern to break down those barriers?

AIDS SMALL BUSINESS IN OBTAINING ALLOTMENT OF CRITICAL MATERIALS

Mr. ARNOLD. We do not break down the barriers, Mr. Chairman, but we see to it that small business gets part of the allotment. We see that it gets its part of the allotment. We have a working arrangement with the Civilian Production Administration whereby any small manufacturing plant may have enough of these critical materials to operate at an economic rate of production. In other words, when we certify to that fact, they accept that certification.

Senator McCARRAN. That is very interesting, because my limited experience has brought me into contact with circumstances where certain individuals or concerns seem to be able to get the merchandise, and others are not able to get it. Right in that same locality two such cases do occur. I have heard all kinds of expressions about it. I do not care to repeat them, as they would in some cases not be proper in the record anyway.

ST. LOUIS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE MEETING REGARDING SPOT ASSISTANCE

Mr. ARNOLD. We conducted at the request of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce a meeting before their small businessmen; 650 people attended that luncheon, all representing, I was told, just one specific business. In other words, not three or four from any certain business. After the introductory speech by the Under Secretary and by me we then went into a workshop session on spot assistance. That is what they wanted us to come out and talk about. At least 350 of those remained for the workshop session, and at the last, at 5:30, when we quit, 200 businessmen remained. The meeting was entitled "Business Listens and Then Talks," and we were somewhat alarmed at what they would say, but each of our chiefs of spot assistance services covered in their speeches so completely what we can do that not nearly the number of questions arose that we expected.

One man by the name of Kauffman, who manufactures electrical refrigerators, arose and said, "I have not been able to get one single motor." He continued, "I am stymied. I have been trying for 3 months to buy some motors without success."

Our Chief of the Special Service Division whom he was querying asked him if he had applied for a Civilian Production Administration priority, to which he was entitled. That was the only thing he had not done.

Whereupon, our Chief stated, "Well, last week a Los Angeles manufacturer applied for 10,000 motors and we were able to get him 1,000." This St. Louis man said, "If I could get that proportion of the motors I need, I would be the happiest man in the world. What can I do to get them?" "Go to your Department of Commerce office in St. Louis, fill out your priority request, send it to our office in Washington, and we will get the motors, because it is necessary for you to have those motors to operate at an economic rate of production."

It was just those types of questions that came up; and, as I say, at 5:30, when we quit, after 5½ hours, at least 200 businessmen still remained at that meeting.

Senator McCARRAN. I imagine that would be true, because it is a very interesting subject and one that is very live right now throughout the country.

VALUE OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS OBTAINED FOR SMALL BUSINESS IN MARCH QUARTER, 1946

Mr. ARNOLD. During the first quarter of this year we helped small business to obtain Government contracts with a dollar value of approximately $330,000,000. You would not believe that there is still being purchased by the Government those items which small manufacturers can produce to the amount of an annual value of $1,200,000,000. We hope through our office to secure at least $1,000,000,000 worth of that business for small business. That leaves plenty of procurement for large business.

Senator McCARRAN. Will you break that down a little bit—what lines does that go into?

BREAK-DOWN OF GOVERNMENT PROCUREMENTS

Mr. ARNOLD. Of course, the Army and Navy are still large purchasers, ships are still being built. The Treasury Department is buying very heavily for UNRRA. It consists of machinery of all kinds, both agricultural and for factories.

Senator McCARRAN. These are small items?

Mr. ARNOLD. Small electrical manufacturers are receiving procurements for items they can process and much of that type of product is in demand. In fact, some of it covers food for our Army and Navy. Most people thought that procurement was over. I do not know what the total is, but our men have figured out that there is $1,200,000,000 this year that small business can process.

Furthermore, we try to have the procurement agencies, the Army, Navy, Treasury, and others, award contracts to the large concerns who will be agreeable to subcontract to small business.

You will remember, as I do, at the beginning of this war, the procurement agencies did not buy anything to speak of from small manufacturers. The purchasing agencies thought, "If I place this with a large concern, my responsibility is ended," and that is what our bottleneck was. Small business at the beginning of the war was producing, I am told, less than 10 percent of what was required. At the end of the war small manufacturers were producing more than 30 percent of all that went into the war effort.

As I said, in checking the value of the Technical Service Division since the beginning of 1942, 29,000 requests for help in solving problems have come in. At the present time, each month several hundred more are received.

TESTIMONIAL LETTER TO SECRETARY FROM SUNSHINE GRILLS, INC.

I do not have a great deal more to present to you, Mr. Chairman. I do want to read you a letter, a testimonial letter that came into Secretary Wallace dated May 13, from Sunshine Grills, Inc., Miami, Fla. It says:

"Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE.

"DEAR SECRETARY: I think that you are going to like this letter. It is, of course, common knowledge that all we plain citizens from time to time indulge in gibes and criticisms of many of our Government agencies. I do not remove myself from this category, for I must confess that I have been more vociferous in this respect than many of my fellow-citizens. However, today I have been given very just cause to alter my opinion.

"Unfortunately, my vocabulary is too limited to pay proper respects to what your Mr. William Seltzer, of your Miami office, did for us.

"We are little businessmen who had saddled ourselves with debts and obligations which we hoped to fulfill through the erection of three small restaurants.

"Our first attempt was thwarted by the CPA rejecting our application.

"We were practically disheartened and discouraged, and having tried many ways, as a final resort appealed to your Mr. Seltzer, chiefly because we thought we would try to find out for ourselves just what this Department of Commerce would do for the small businessman.

"Let it be here stated that Mr. Seltzer not only extended to us every courtesy, not only listened to our facts very carefully, but immediately went into action and got us permission to appeal our case.

"He was not only very helpful in instructing as to the proper procedure but he also went to the mat for us on three different occasions at CPA meetings.

"The result was that today we received the O. K. to go ahead from CPA.

"We feel that we owe all this to your Department, and especially as it was so ably represented by your Mr. Seltzer."

PERSONNEL STRENGTH IN FISCAL YEAR 1946

Senator McCARRAN. How many employees did you have in 1946. That is under the 1946 appropriation?

Mr. ARNOLD. Do you mean the Smaller War Plants Corporation and the Office of Small Business combined?

Senator McCARRAN. Any way you like it.

Mr. ARNOLD. I am not sure about that.

Senator McCARRAN. What I have before me shows 256; is that correct?

Mr. ARNOLD. I am informed that is correct.

Senator McCARRAN. It now seems that for this fiscal year, it is 131.

Mr. GLADIEUX. Mr. Chairman, may I make a statement there that might properly come from the Secretary's office, I believe.

Senator McCARRAN. You may.

Mr. GLADIEUX. As Mr. Arnold mentioned before, this budget was prepared last October. At that time we did not have in contemplation the probable transfer of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. The 131 figure and the $460,799 was our own Department of Commerce small business program. In January when the major part of the Smaller War Plants Corporation was transferred to the Department, we did not ask for any supplemental appropriation or any increase. We have kept that figure at 131 and, I may say, I think we have penalized and handicapped ourselves by so doing.

Senator McCARRAN. Is the 131 for small business?

Mr. GLADIEUX. Yes. That provides for the departmental service of the Small Business Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and that part of the Smaller War Plants Corporation which was transferred. Frankly, had we known Smaller War Plants Corporation was to be transferred, or had it been transferred at the time we prepared this budget, we would have increased this 131 considerably because, as Mr. Arnold has said, the Smaller War Plants Corporation itself had a budget of about $8,000,000 last year. This request of 131 is just a small fraction of that amount. I think we can safely say that we do not know for sure whether we can do the job Mr. Arnold has outlined with only 131 people.

Senator McCARRAN. What amount are you asking?

POSITIONS AND AMOUNT REQUESTED FOR 1947

Mr. GLADIEUX. We are just asking for 131 people, at $460,799. We are going to try to do it with that amount, but we do not know whether we can.

Senator McCARRAN. You just know the general reduction, not what the House cut you on that particular item?

EFFECT OF HOUSE REDUCTION

Mr. GLADIEUX. We made a corresponding reduction here because the House did not say specifically where it cut.

Mr. ARNOLD. The House did not cut our appropriation specifically, but we will have to share in a portion of that cut. It is estimated that perhaps we will have to give up 33 employees, which will bring our total down to 98. If that occurs, we have decided that perhaps this spot assistance, which is a temporary service to small business but is very essential right now, might have to be given up or curtailed to a very minimum.

Senator McCARRAN. Was all this explained to the House? Of course, the House did not address its cut to this.

Mr. GLADIEUX. That is just the point.

Senator McCARRAN. Have you concluded, Mr. Arnold?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; I believe that is all.

Senator McCARRAN. I do not want to hurry you.

AMOUNT OF HOUSE REDUCTION FOR FIELD SERVICE

Mr. ARNOLD. I do want to say in conclusion that it is difficult to divorce what we do here in Washington from what we do in the field. The field cut was from $6,500,000 down to $2,500,000 by the House Appropriations Committee.

Senator McCARRAN. By "the field" we understand you to mean your offices like that Miami office?

Mr. GLADIEUX. That is right.

Mr. ARNOLD. That is true.

Senator McCARRAN. It seems to me that the field is where the real contact is made and where the real honest-to-God business is done.

Mr. ARNOLD. We want to render this service near to where these businessmen live. Just as in the Atlanta case I cited you, our man advised the veteran that there seemed to be a field for the manufacture of venetian blinds, and today he is a successful manufacturer of that product.

NEED FOR FIELD OFFICE IN EVERY STATE

We should have numerous field offices. The cut by the House Appropriations Committee reduced this to such a small amount that we cannot perform as the Department of Commerce should perform throughout the Nation. My experience in the Smaller War Plants Corporation leads me to know we should have one office at least in every State in the Union where small businessmen could go and get this information that is developed here in Washington by the various offices of the Government, and which otherwise will not be available to them.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia has not been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that he understands it has not yet been offered.

Mr. RUSSELL. I again move, on page 69, line 14, to strike out the figure "$2,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "$6,500,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber at the time, and I should like to ask the able chairman of the subcommittee what action was taken on the floor on an amendment that may have been offered with reference to the appropriation for the State Department's Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs?

Mr. McCARRAN. The amendments offered by the committee were adopted.

Mr. MEAD. Do they give to them the appropriation they require for the continuation of the international short-wave broadcasting?

Mr. McCARRAN. Up to the amount allowed by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. MEAD. Up to the amount allowed by the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the able chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. President, I wish to make a statement in that connection.

In addition to my own opinion strongly urging the continuation of the State Department's international short-wave broadcasting to furnish the peoples of the world with a full and fair picture of America, I should like to extend my remarks to include a representative cross-section of current American newspaper editorial, feature, and press association support for the State Department's international information and cultural-affairs program.

Leading radio executives, such as Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff, chairman of the board, Radio Corp. of America; Walter Evans, vice president of the Westinghouse Electric Corp., Baltimore; Philip D. Reed, chairman of the board of the General Electric Co., New York; Frank Stanton, president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, New York; J. D. Shouse, vice president of the Crosley Corp., Cincinnati; and other prominent radio executives have gone on record in support of the State Department's program of international short-wave broadcasting.

Following is the text of a United Press dispatch, dated Washington, May 18, and published in the May 19, 1946, edition of the New York Herald Tribune:

UNITED STATES BROADCAST OF NEWS BACKED BY RADIO HEADS—FIVE INDUSTRY LEADERS SAY PRIVATE COMPANIES CAN'T EQUAL PRESENT PROGRAMS

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Five radio executives and two Government officials have given support to William Benton, Assistant Secretary of State, in his battle to maintain the State Department's program of international short-wave broadcasting.

The support was contained in statements requested by Mr. Benton and furnished the Senate Appropriations Committee, which is considering a House sponsored reduction in broadcast funds from $19,284,778 to $10,000,000. Mr. Benton has said the cut would force the Department to abandon its short-wave program. He says the program is needed to get the truth about Americans to foreign countries.

Radio executives supporting Mr. Benton are J. D. Shouse, vice president of the Crosley Corp., Cincinnati; Frank Stanton, president of Columbia Broadcasting System, New York; Philip D. Reed, chairman of the board, General Electric Co., New York; Walter Evans, vice president of Westinghouse Electric Corp., Baltimore; and Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff, chairman of the board, Radio Corporation of America, of New York.

The Government officials are Charles R. Denny, acting chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, and Paul Porter, former FCC chairman and now Price Administrator.

Mr. Shouse wrote Mr. Benton that private industry could not take over the short-wave program "without a great and perhaps tragic diminution of the effectiveness of portraying to the rest of the world United States policy and thinking on matters of international import."

He said the geographic position of the United States obliged it to rely on short-wave broadcasting to get its message overseas. He assured Mr. Benton he had no fear that the international program would be used as a means of Government encroachment in the domestic field.

Messrs. Stanton, Reed, and Evans all wrote Mr. Benton that they felt the present scale of operations should not be abandoned before a permanent peacetime program is developed.

Mr. Sarnoff sent Mr. Benton a memorandum written in January 1943 which said it still represented his views. In it, he said international broadcasting did not seem to him to constitute a field for private competition. Even if it did, he added, it was doubtful it could furnish sufficient revenue for private firms to "render a public service of genuine world magnitude."

Messrs. Denny and Porter noted that the State Department would soon submit to Congress specific proposals governing international radio.

Mr. President, in registering their protest against the curtailment of the necessary funds for the continuation of the State Department's information and cultural programs, Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review of Literature; Jonathan Daniels; George Fielding Eliot, military analyst for the New York Herald Tribune; Mark Ethridge, of the Louisville Courier-Journal; Thomas K. Finletter; Ralph McGill, of the Atlanta Constitution; Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, of the Riverside Church, New York; and former Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court Owen J. Roberts telegraphed the following appeal to me and to other Members of this honorable body. The text of their statement, which also, I note with approval, appeared on the editorial pages of the New York Times of May 22, 1946, the New York Post of May 20, 1946, and in the New York Herald Tribune of May 20, 1946, is as follows:

INFORMATION AND CULTURAL PROGRAM CURTAILMENT SEEN AS DEPLORABLE

Another unfortunate manifestation of American withdrawal from her world responsibilities since the end of the war is the action of the House Appropriations Committee in cutting almost by half the budget for the State Department's overseas information and cultural program.

It seems inconceivable that we have so soon forgotten the tragic cost to us of our failure to promote an adequate understanding before the war of American policies, of American objectives, and, indeed, of the American people themselves. The popular conception abroad of America and Americans was as warped as it was harmful. Little wonder that Germany had such fertile ground in which to plant its idea seeds against the American people. Little wonder that so many millions had to be spent by us during the war in counteracting the effect of enemy propaganda against us.

The people of Europe today are hungry for information about America. They are receptive and responsive to a constructive program that can give them a better understanding of the American people and their foreign policy.

Such being the case, we find the House Appropriations Committee recommendation that the State Department budget be cut from $19,000,000 to $10,000,000 a deplorable and potentially harmful action. At a time when we should be recognizing our opportunities and our obligations, we are apparently defaulting on both. It is to be hoped that the cut will be restored in full by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

MAY 17, 1946.

Mr. President, I should like also to include in the RECORD the eloquent statement sent to me and other Members of the United States Senate on May 8, 1946, by 21 Americans experienced in world affairs and prominent as war correspondents, authors, editors, and radio commentators.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement, in the form of a telegram, may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We have seen the terrible impact of war at home and abroad. The shooting war is over, but the battle for peace must continue. Only through the international exchange of human understanding can the rebirth of nazism and fascism be averted. America is obligated, realistically and morally, to maintain an adequate program of international information under its State Department.

We, therefore, respectfully request the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States to restore the budget of the State Department's Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs which the House Appropriations Committee is recommending be cut from $19,000,000 down to $10,000,000.

This drastic action would cripple America's voice abroad and reduce it to a whisper at a time when the hunger in the minds of foreign peoples for an accurate picture of America's way of life is greatest.

According to Washington press reports, our Government is spending over $1,000,000 daily to manufacture and improve atomic bombs. Surely the State Department's request for less than $20,000,000 a year for an overseas information program is not unreasonable if we consider that wars first take place in the human mind. If the world is kept properly informed concerning the peaceful and democratic aims of the United States, world security would then be immeasurably strengthened.

We offer our unqualified support of the statements made by Secretary of State James F. Byrnes to sessions of the House appropriations subcommittee when he requested their endorsement of the State Department's International Information program. Secretary of State Byrnes said: "There never was a time, even in the midst of war, when it was so necessary to replace prejudice with truth, distortion with balance, and suspicion with understanding. * * * The Department's proposals constitute a modest program compared to wartime standards. * * * I am convinced an information program can contribute to our security just as can an army, a navy, and an air force * * * and at infinitely less expense."

If America slumps back into a policy of narrow isolationism, it feeds the substance of the enemies of democracy all over the world. If America turns its back to the world, it cannot expect the clock of human affairs to stand still.

For these and other cogent reasons which you can find by consulting your own good consciences, Members of the Congress of the United States, we urge you with all the sincerity at our command, to reinstate and approve the full appropriation requested by the State Department for its International Information Service. We believe that to reduce this appropriation, particularly at this time when the people of this country and indeed of the whole world ardently desire peace, would be a regrettable case of false, if not dangerous, economy.

Owen J. Roberts, former Associate Justice, United States Supreme Court; Frederick Lewis Allen, editor, Harpers Magazine, author; W. W. Chaplin, war correspondent, radio commentator; Marquis W. Childs, columnist, war correspondent, news analyst; George Hamilton Combs, commentator, former Member of Congress; Norman Cousins, editor, Saturday Review of Literature, author; Jonathan Daniels, author, former Assistant to the President of the United States; Mark Van Doren, professor, Columbia University; George Fielding Eliot, military analyst, writer; Mark Ethridge, editor and publisher Louisville Courier-Journal; Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor, Riverside Church, New York; Thomas K. Finletter, former Special Assistant to the Secretary of State; Frank Gervasi, war correspondent and author; George Hicks, war correspondent and news analyst; Ralph McGill, editor, Atlanta Constitution; Quentin Reynolds, author, war correspondent, radio commentator; Stanley Ross, war correspondent; William L. Shirer, war correspondent, news analyst, and author; Robert St. John, radio commentator, war correspondent; Rex Stout, author; Leland Stowe, war correspondent, author, and commentator.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, editorial opinion as well as the opinion of respected Americans in many fields of endeavor has also eloquently and sanely presented the case for the continuation of the State Department's International Information and Cultural Affairs program on the basis that only through mutual understanding among the nations of the world can we secure and maintain the peace which the American people so ardently desire.

I ask unanimous consent that a representative selection of editorials straight from the conscience of American newspaperdom may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOW NOT TO RUN A SERVICE

The State Department in Washington has just made a drastic cut in its provision for the upkeep and maintenance of its representatives in Europe, as Mr. O'Reilly's report in this paper disclosed yesterday. At this moment in the history of the United States and of the world, the State Department's action is like a War Department demanding a reduction in its expenditures the day a war was declared.

The chief criticism of the State Department has always been that it has not done enough and that what it has done was not done well enough. It has never been criticized, at least in recent years, for doing too much. Many of its mistakes in the past may be said to be due directly to lack of adequate information, lack of adequate preparation, lack of competent trained personnel, all in turn partly due to a fundamental failure to grasp the tremendous job that faces American diplomacy in the world today. What Congress appropriates for a single battleship and a squadron of B-29s would be enough to revitalize the whole State Department.

Penny-pinching by the State Department, which is already operating one of the most skimpily paid diplomatic staffs in the world, is inexcusable today when the representatives of the United States in the capitals of the world are carrying so huge a burden in the organization of the peace. The frequently promised reorganization of the State Department remains just another unfilled press conference boast. The diplomatic service is not attracting enough really competent people, nor is it likely to, unless a real change is made in its mode of operation. During the war many men and women, at considerable financial sacrifice, loyally accepted jobs in the State Department. To drive them and career employees out now by the absurd rulings of a minor bureaucrat in Washington on what it costs to live in liberated Europe underlines another fact: that the State Department needs not only adequate financial compensation for its employees, but also brains to direct them.

[From the Atlanta Constitution of May 6, 1946]

A CASE IN POINT

Recently the Associated Press and United Press refused to sell their news to the State Department for factual, straight-news broadcast to Europe. Their contention was that American news would do the job through its agencies and that short-wave broadcasts of American news and opinion was unnecessary.

Also recently Mark Ethridge, Louisville Courier-Journal publisher, went to Bulgaria and Rumania as a representative of this country to investigate conditions there. He reported back that freedom of the press was not permitted. He subsequently expressed an opinion that the State Department broadcasts were vitally necessary, being the only source of news and opinion from this Nation.

An article stating these opinions was published and broadcast by the American radio. The newspapers in Rumania, opposing the Government, attempted to print it but were refused permission.

Rarely does an investigator's deductions receive such immediate vindication.

We hope Congress will give to the State Department, as urged by Secretary Byrnes, an appropriation large enough to permit them to carry on the very vital work which the news agencies cannot do.

[From the Chicago Sun of May 7, 1946]

MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING AS A BASIS OF PEACE

Substantial progress was made last week on the Bloom bill, setting up a permanent cultural relations and information program in the State Department.

A high price was paid by the administration before the House could be persuaded to move. Representative Cox (Democrat, Georgia) was able to announce that "hundreds of undesirable people" had been ousted by the State Department—meaning, unquestionably, that among the victims of the purge were patriotic, progressive citizens unjustly hounded by the Dies and Wood-Rankin committees. The House Foreign Relations Committee, furthermore, voted to prohibit State Department use of news from the Associated Press, United Press, and other news agencies.

The proposed Government news broadcasts, however, occupied but a minor place both in the present temporary program and the permanent one planned by Assistant Secretary of State William Benton. A dispute over 10 minutes of news daily should not determine the larger question of how this country shall systematize and enlarge informational activities which it has been carrying on in some form for years.

Most of the program consists of such activities as the exchange of students, promotion of cultural interchange, maintenance of information libraries overseas, and supplying background material to editors and the general public abroad.

One typical and especially praiseworthy project developed during the war is the brilliantly illustrated Russian-language magazine "Amerika," distributed exclusively in the Soviet Union. Moscow has just granted permission for the circulation of 50,000 instead of 25,000 copies of the magazine. It is so popular that copies are eagerly snatched up and have been known to fetch a sizable price in the black market.

Can anybody give a good reason why this project should not be continued? The fact that Russians are eager to learn about this country, to read of its industrial and agricultural achievements, to study its political structure and traditions, even to follow the course of women's fashions, is an augury of better understanding and better relations. We would be senseless not to take advantage of it.

So it goes with other projects afoot and planned. The goal, in the words of the Bloom bill, is to promote that mutual understanding between peoples which is one of the essential foundations for durable peace. Clear around the world, people have a thirst for information about the United States. The thirst cannot be satisfied by private agencies operating for profit. Yet the State Department program contemplates no real interference with any activities of such agencies.

It would be sound if the Senate should reverse the House decision regarding the use of news service reports. The AP and UP fear of propaganda in proposed news broadcasts has not been substantiated. But even if the House vote on that issue stands, the broad aims of the Bloom bill should be approved and sufficient funds granted to make the aims effective.

UNDERSTANDING AMONG PEOPLES

Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, in his address in Birmingham last week under the sponsorship of the Men's Club of Temple Emanu-El, stressed the urgent need for the promotion of understanding among the peoples of the world as a major means of achieving a lasting peace. Mr. McGill, who visited Russia as a member of a committee on world press freedom of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, was asked his opinion as to the prospect of achieving mutual confidence and genuine cooperation in relations with Russia. That hope, he replied, depends largely on increasing understanding among the two peoples. So few Russians, relatively, have been outside their own country. When he was in Russia, crowds of people demonstrated intense interest in his personal appearance and characteristics.

Of course, it is also true that relatively few Americans have ever been in Russia. When three Russian journalists were the guests of the American Society of Newspaper Editors at its recent Washington convention, the greatest interest was shown by its members in these visitors. It was evident that a sense of strangeness prevailed on both sides, that there was the keenest mutual desire to become better acquainted.

The unknown always arouses a measure of uncertainty, and often of misgiving.

The feeling among the American people that they do not really know the Russians and the feeling among the Russians that they do not know us constitute one of the major obstacles to the advancement of mutual confidence and cooperation.

But it is not only among these peoples that greater understanding is urgently needed. Strangeness and a measure of distrust enter into the relations of the citizens of many nations.

On the other hand there are peoples—the British and Americans, for example—among whom a high degree of trust and friendship exists. That has grown out of obvious factors making for understanding.

It is significant that Mr. McGill, Mark Ethridge, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, and Wilbur Forrest, of the New York Herald Tribune, who recently testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee in behalf of the State Department's projected program for the advancement of understanding among the peoples of the world, all have traveled widely in foreign countries within the last year. They have experienced at first hand the need for greater information about us in other lands. They know, too, of the need for more knowledge in this country of the lives and conditions of other peoples.

The State Department's program contemplates short-wave radio broadcasts, the distribution of American reports and publications, the interchange of students, and other measures for the betterment of cultural relations generally.

Such a program, soundly conceived and executed, has so many potentialities for good that we hope that it will go forward even though the State Department is not able to obtain the news services of the Associated Press and the United Press.

[From the Toledo Blade of May 4, 1946]

INTERNATIONAL INFORMATION

In approving a $10,000,000 appropriation to maintain the State Department's International Information Service by an almost strictly party vote, the House refused to take a pound-wise, penny-foolish stand on international affairs.

How much good it will do to have our Government send information about our country to those parts of the world which do not get our normal news reports, we do not know. How many people will listen to short-wave newscasts beamed abroad is even harder to estimate than the number of persons who listen to regular newscasts at home. No one will ever know how much tangible benefit the United States will receive in the form of good will and better understanding from this State Department effort to tell the American story to other peoples.

But the men who led the propaganda war for us on the ideological front are convinced that there is still much work to be done in putting that story across to peoples who have had little opportunity to understand it. They believe that it will increase our influence with the peace-loving people of small nations and large. They believe it will increase our chances of maintaining a durable peace.

Whether they are right or wrong, the $10,000,000 to be spent on an International Information Service is relatively a drop in the bucket to be spent on a worthy cause. It wouldn't meet our war costs for a single day. It wouldn't even pay for a smaller first-class warship. It wouldn't, for all we know, buy an atomic bomb. And simply on the chance that it may help prevent another war, we think it is worth the money for our State Department to tell all peoples who will listen that Americans want a peaceful, prosperous world which will benefit others as much as it will themselves.

[From the St. Paul Pioneer Press of May 16, 1946]

EPISTLE TO THE RUSSIANS

Because there is no true measure of either piety or sincerity the average American will have to take with the proverbial dusting of salt the recent declaration of Ilya Ehrenburg, Russian journalist now touring this country, that he would like to help make the emotional space between Moscow and Washington as little as the physical space—reduced by modern modes of transportation—by bringing the hearts and minds of the two peoples closer together. Certainly the treatment of American reporters in Russia and the diplomatic maneuvers of the Soviet's representatives to the United Nations have been anything but contributions to closer understanding.

But some things can be said of Russia that give vitality to the common hope that some day the various political commissars will relent and one of these is the recent relaxation of limitations on the number of copies of "Amerika," a magazine published by the State Department, permitted to circulate in Russia. The number has been increased from 20,000 to 50,000 copies in a domain of more than 180,000,000 people.

"Amerika" is tailored to the Russian taste, carrying special articles on the American ideal of government, the theater, movies, industry in general, plastic developments, United States railroads in the war and whatnot. The magazine is not devoted to propaganda in the usual sense but to giving correct information about the United States. There isn't anything very red-blooded in its appeal for understanding of this Nation's general ideology in such matters as democracy, liberty, the priceless freedoms of the spirit and the inherent rights of the human being, but any inroad through the rigorous censorship exercised in Russia has its own compensations.

No matter how fervently Ilya Ehrenburg may wish to bring the hearts and minds of America and Russia together it must be conceded that there isn't much he can do about it until his own country is disposed to offer Americans—especially newspaper correspondents and editors—the same freedom of action over there that Ehrenburg and his companion journalists are enjoying over here.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, nationally and internationally known news analysts of unimpeachable reputation for impartiality and objectivity in their presentation of news facts have stated in signed stories that Americans overseas, and, indeed, all the peoples of the universe, eagerly use and urgently need the documentary, scientific, cultural, and educational information made available to them only through the good offices of the American people and the American Government.

I ask unanimous consent that a number of articles may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEWS UNIT HAILED ABROAD—HAS LITTLE HONOR AT HOME

(By Neal Stanford)

WASHINGTON, May 18.—America's international information program lacks honor in its own country. The House of Representatives has cut in half the State Department's down-to-the-bone blueprint of what it needs. The Senate, the Department is hoping, will restore the cut.

James F. Byrnes, Secretary of State, asked for $19,284,778. The House was willing to advance $10,000,000.

If viewed suspiciously at home, however, the Government's information program is welcomed, used, and waited for abroad with unbelievable enthusiasm and fervor. Not only do the people of other nations use the information services offered—libraries, radio programs, information offices—but the heads of American missions abroad are genuinely appreciative of their contribution to better understanding.

Following are some of the reports from the field on how the program is received and used:

Ambassador Jefferson Caffery, in Paris (on hearing the House had cut the Department's information and cultural activities in France): "Such a cut would destroy effectiveness of the program and place the United States in a disadvantageous position in relation to the needs of this area and the efforts of other nations."

Ambassador Alexander Kirk, in Belgium: "Such a cut would be prejudicial to the effective and efficient operation of this mission and detrimental to American interests in this area."

Prague, Czechoslovakia: "Reception of the service in Prague has been nothing short of fantastic. In our relatively small reading room, an average of 700 to 1,000 people a day use our journals and newspapers. At times we have had to close the door and put a sign on the outside saying 'closed for 1 hour' until people would move out, leaving room for the others. We could easily have had 2,000 people if we had sufficient space. We have had numberless requests from towns outside Prague asking that we establish branches of this service."

Sofia, Bulgaria: "When the American Library at Tear Osvoboditel opened last November, crowds of Bulgarians who had long been starved for American reading matter were at the library. During the first 14 days (of which 3 were holidays) more than 2,000 readers were counted. The great crowds between 5 and 7 p. m. hardly left any standing room."

Peiping, China (Sept. 22, 1945): "Audiences at the picture exhibit are averaging 20,000 a day. The queue is sometimes 600 to 700 yards long. Our reading room is so crowded that many people have to stand or squat on the curbs in the two courtyards. We are constantly asked if more books and magazines are en route."

Kuibyshev, Russia (from a letter, July 1, 1945, by an American soldier to his grandparent in the United States): "Some months before I arrived here the OWI started getting out an American magazine printed in Russian. It is by far the best thing that ever happened for explaining the American Nation to the Russian people. Up to the time of the war all Russians knew was our bad aspects." (The House killed this magazine in trimming appropriations. However, since Moscow has now permitted printing 50,000 issues a month instead of 10,000, it should become self-supporting—and Congress may decide to continue it.)

Belem, Brazil (Jan. 8, 1946): "The Belem press has published a large amount of news items and background material furnished by us. This has been an important contribution to an informed understanding of our position in the world."

Copenhagen (Jan. 5, 1946): "We find that texts of important speeches are warmly welcomed by Danish newspapers and libraries. Authentic background material is exceedingly desirable for use in libraries, societies, and schools, and by authors and editors."

The Hague (Jan. 6, 1946): "Many editors and commentators say that they find the background material distributed to them, such as texts of official United States documents, of particular value in clarifying their views on American objectives and policies. In December 1945 a circular letter distributed to 80 Dutch newspapers offering various types of feature articles brought requests for 117 articles on American topics with illustrative photos."

Managua, Nicaragua (Jan. 2, 1946): "Articles concerning all phases of American life have formed a large proportion of the news in the local papers, sometimes amounting to almost half the news content."

Budapest (Jan. 5, 1946): "Especially useful in this crucial period of Hungarian reconstruction is all information on American Government and democratic way of life. Continuous servicing of press, Government, and public with background information, photos, and periodicals is essential."

Lisbon, Portugal (January 5, 1946): "The press office here receives more than 1,000 letters a month requesting information about life in the United States, education, science, medicine, engineering, industrial, natural, scientific, and commercial activities."

London (August 1945): "The demand for manufacturing and commercial reference books has been heavy. Business houses are constantly consulting these books for addresses, names of products, and standing of American concerns. Two regular visitors to the library, one connected with a large manufacturing firm, the other a member of the Economist staff, come in every 2 or 3 days for business and economic material."

Montevideo, Uruguay (January 10, 1945): "The general average of publication of all types of material over the last 2 years was more than 85 percent of the releases sent out. This high percentage of coverage is due to confidence in the information section and to the fact that releases were factual, honest. Newspapers continually seek biographical data concerning American personages and translation of speeches of political importance."

Wellington, New Zealand (January 12, 1946): "Articles and features were widely used by newspapers and technical and other periodicals. Numerous letters of appreciation have been received from cabinet ministers and heads of government departments and agencies."

UNITED STATES INFORMATION SERVICE CALLED VITAL TO DIPLOMACY IN EUROPE—PEOPLE OF SOME COUNTRIES, ESPECIALLY RUSSIA, TRUST ONLY NEWS FROM GOVERNMENT SOURCES; SUCCESS OF BRITISH BROADCASTS CITED

(By Andre Visson)

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Diplomatic reports received in Washington during the last fortnight from various European capitals all sounded the same warning: Should the State Department, as a result of the unwillingness of Congress to grant the requested $19,000,000 appropriation, find itself compelled to cancel or even cut down its information and cultural activities, American diplomacy in Europe would be considerably handicapped and American interests in various European countries would be prejudiced.

This warning comes from American representatives in Communist Moscow, in Franco's Madrid, and in democratic Brussels. In all these capitals the United States is urged to continue its information services or to establish them where they still do not function.

Perhaps the most significant of all reports comes from Moscow. It describes the growing interest of Russians in British broadcasts in the Russian language and deplores the absence of similar American broadcasts, which, it is assumed, would have even greater success because the Russians generally have a much greater confidence in the United States than in Britain.

The report goes on to state further—and this will shock all Americans who naturally dislike and resent anything which smacks of Government propaganda—that the Russian people have much more confidence in news from American governmental sources than from American privately owned press or radio.

This is said to be the result of Soviet propaganda. The Russians have been continually told by their Government-owned and directed press and radio that the American capitalists were the enemies of the Soviet Union. On the other hand, the American Government, headed by President Roosevelt, reestablished diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia and helped Soviet Russia during the war. So the Russians now have a tendency to consider information from American governmental sources as more objective than from the American privately owned press or radio.

Those Americans opposing any kind of governmental information are not likely to be convinced that in order to keep the Russians informed about the American way of life the United States should use un-American methods—which they consider governmental information services to be. But the fact remains that only American Government publications are admitted into Soviet Russia. As to the short-wave broadcasts which can and do pierce the "iron curtain" drawn around Soviet Russia and her orbit, it is most unlikely that American broadcasting corporations will be interested in establishing and maintaining completely noncommercial programs. Indeed, no American exporter would be willing to advertise products for which there was no market in the countries to which the short-wave broadcasts would be beamed.

Thus, unless American radio corporations were prepared to run their short-wave broadcasts to all of eastern Europe at a constant loss, merely in defense of the principle of free enterprise, such broadcasts could function only if the men representing the American taxpayers would grant the State Department the $19,000,000 appropriation, of which $8,800,000 are required for the short-wave broadcasts.

Diplomatic reports from Madrid, insisting on the necessity of having American information services in Spain describe the information and cultural activities of the British and the French who maintain in the Spanish capital staffs of 180 and 100 persons respectively. The British information library has 15,000 volumes, and the 2 French libraries have 40,000 volumes.

As to British broadcasts to Spain, it has been officially admitted in London that the Foreign Office is using them as a vehicle of British foreign policy. Those BBC broadcasts, piercing the wall of Spanish censorship, explain to the Spaniards the reasons why the British people and their governments are opposed to the Franco regime, and express the hope that the Spaniards will themselves find—without intervention from abroad—a democratic solution for their country.

Even in genuinely democratic Belgium, where the newspapers are restricted only by the lack of newsprint, American diplomats urge the maintenance of governmental information services, pointing out the extremely important activities of the British, Soviet, and French Governments in that field.

Nobody really acquainted with conditions in Europe, can deny the need for information on America. In all Europe—in the west as well as in the east—people are most anxious to learn the truth about the intentions and the mood of the American people, whose attitude in the years to come will perhaps determine the very fate of our civilization. The great controversy is whether the American Government or the American press and radio should give Europeans the true picture of the United States?

It has been generally recognized that food and money—America's weapons for peace—can be given to European countries in adequate amounts only by the American Government. But it is still felt by many that information on America—her long-range weapon for peace—can be best handled by the private press and radio.

An objective study of European conditions indicates, however, that the American press and radio unfortunately cannot penetrate the countries behind the "iron curtain." Furthermore, 49 countries, including genuine democracies like England, are now using government short-wave broadcasts to carry the voice of their nations abroad.

Thus, if Americans believe that America's voice should be heard all over the globe, they must accept, as much as they may dislike it, the Government loud-speakers for all those countries which are beyond the reach of the private loud-speakers.

ECONOMY MAY SILENCE UNITED STATES STORY TO THE BALKANS

(By Marquis W. Childs)

WASHINGTON.—Back in the thirties, two ambitious young men had an advertising firm called Benton & Bowles. They made a great financial success and, with that security, they started out to explore other fields of activity.

These two men, Chester Bowles and William Benton, are today both in the Government. Bowles, of course, is the embattled Director of Economic Stabilization. From behind that fancy title, he fights a rear-guard action for the economic principles in which he believes. Just now it's price control.

Less well known to the public, Benton is Assistant Secretary of State for public and cultural relations. He, too, just now is fighting a battle, and fighting it with the same fervor that Benton & Bowles put in their advertising business.

With the help of an able staff, Benton put together a program which would make the world better informed about the United States. He proposed to use short-wave broadcasting which would reach regions that now get no objective news about America. He proposed to send able young men as information assistants to our embassies and legations.

GOOD INTENTIONS

As carefully worked out, this program for the coming governmental year was to cost $19,284,778. Those who put the information budget together say it contained very little water. What the House did was to whack this figure down to $10,000,000.

Intention were good. The House Appropriations Committee was in favor of the philosophy of the program. But as so often in the past, they were not willing to give it a real chance.

This means that, unless the Senate restores the cut, the short-wave broadcasting will have to be eliminated. It means that the voice of America will not be heard at all in the Balkans and eastern Europe.

It means that the Russian short-wave radio, with competition from the British, will dominate whole areas of the globe. Several surveys, both by the Government and by private agencies, show that the volume of Russian propaganda has increased markedly since the end of the war.

This is particularly true in China. After the Japanese capitulation, Soviet propaganda was resumed there on a large scale. The official Soviet propaganda organization in China is the Tass News Agency. Tass is building up an extensive staff in many cities, far beyond the needs of news reporting, which is Tass' job elsewhere. Much of this propaganda is directed against the United States and its armed forces in China.

In the Balkans, under Communist-dominated governments, the official radio is usually critical of the United States and silent on any of this country's positive achievements. In any controversy that we have with the Soviet Union or with the local government, the American case is simply not presented. The left-wing press supporting the Balkan governments refers frequently to American imperialism.

BROADCASTS NEEDED

Propaganda is a word that we as Americans shy away from—and rightly. The world connotes distortion and untruth in the service of a political ideology. This poor old world has been battered by opposing propaganda for so long that truth sometimes seems to be the most harried of all the refugees who flee from disaster to despair.

Benton has repeatedly disavowed any intention of propaganda in the State Department information program. Despite this, the threat of propaganda is intimated in another controversy in which Benton is involved.

Under a wartime arrangement, the State Department obtained news free of charge from the United Press and the Associated Press for use in short-wave news broadcasts. They were objective broadcasts, using the raw material furnished by the great newsgathering agencies.

This arrangement was terminated after the end of the war. Benton then asked for the right to buy AP and UP news which would go into the same kind of objective broadcasts. That request was refused. Those who run the press associations seemed to feel that any relationship with the Government in peacetime would endanger their objectivity.

That seems to me a singularly short-sighted point of view. Surely the independence of our press is so strong that it cannot be jeopardized merely if the Government becomes a client of the great and powerful press services. Interestingly enough, Hearst's International News Service is providing news to the State Department as a client.

Objective news is essential in a world still half blacked-out. If no one else does the short-wave broadcasting job, the Government must.

UNITED STATES FAILS TO SELL ITSELF IN SIAM

(By Dixie Tighe)

BANGKOK, May 22.—In this noncolonial country in Southeast Asia, the British lion waves its tail with a telling wallop, trying to brush off American influence as if it were a pestiferous fly.

In propaganda we are outweighed not only in pure body force but by the weight of indoctrination machinery. The only sign of nonaggression exists in the Joint Rice Commission, which moves with united purpose against famine conditions.

The avowed British reason for their presence in Siam is their current priorities—(1) more rice, (2) to return the Japs to Japan, (3) to repatriate internees and prisoners of war. They are accomplishing these things with admirable intent and swiftness. But in respect to propaganda, it is another story.

Unfortunately there is but a small force of Americans here to protect the story of our part in the war we helped to win and the peace we intend to keep.

Siam is being sold the British way of life as the one most likely to succeed.

TORRENT OF PROPAGANDA

In furthering her trade aspirations, I think England has let her propaganda giant hit below the belt. If some of its strength lies in our weakness, it is being taken advantage of. Newspapers frequently publish stories, credited to a British news agency, heralding the quality of English goods as far superior to American. The words "better than U. S. A." are resorted to, and there is a marked "always belittling campaign."

To counteract this we maintain a small group in Siam, without whom this country would have no conception of the American viewpoint. No American news agency operates into Siam, but Britain's Reuters pours in its story of empire.

However, the American group is in danger of having its already meager strength reduced. It should be extended to the fullest, to help make Siam aware of Americans. Siam has a distinct craving for American news. By conservative estimate, I've been stopped 50 times in streets, hotel lobbies, restaurants, and stores by inquiries concerning the United States of today.

CASTE SYSTEM PREVAILS

I've not, however, received any inquiries from Siamese officials. For I've overlooked the fact that besides rice, teak, and tin, the other major commodity of the country is snobbism. To approach Siamese officials without elegant sponsorship is like trying to become a life member of the Union League if you were born on the wrong side of the railway tracks.

I've been blackballed publicly by the Ministry of Propaganda, and have received no answer to my request for interviews with the Prime Minister and the Ministers of Commerce and Foreign Affairs. Apparently they've tested my blood and found the requisite pure blue contaminated by red and white.

This is a country with a caste system that includes the use of different pronouns for different social levels, a country where the servant uses the same gesture of obedience toward his master as towards his Buddhas.

It's also a country in which to alleviate famine, and a country in which Americans are failing to give a generous briefing on the high calorific value of democracy.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

(By Drew Pearson)

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Russians beam 11 broadcasts daily to the United States, but we will have no voice to compete with the Kremlin, London, Paris, or Madrid—if the action of the House in cutting the International Information Service is upheld by the Senate. The budget voted by the House is too small, and the one effective means of getting the story of America across censorship barriers to the rest of the world may have to be ditched.

FUND SLASH MAY FORCE UNITED STATES TO END FOREIGN RADIOCASTS

(By Ned Brooks)

WASHINGTON, May 10.—Overseas broadcasts will be discontinued this summer if the Senate refuses to restore the $9,248,000 chopped by the House from the State Department's information and culture program.

Assistant Secretary William Benton has decided to silence the Voice of America broadcasts and retain other activities, such as foreign movies and libraries. If his program is held to the House-approved appropriation of $10,000,000.

Mr. Benton has urged a Senate appropriations subcommittee to restore the full $19,248,000 item recommended by the Budget Bureau.

Should the Department be forced to abandon its broadcasts, Mr. Benton may seek to have them taken over by a private foundation. He is said to be studying a plan under which a Government representative would assist in a privately sponsored undertaking.

WOULD DROP BROADCASTS

Officials have estimated that the short-wave broadcasts would cost from $6,000,000 to $7,500,000 a year, which would leave little for other activities. Mr. Benton favors abandoning the broadcasts and retaining the others as originally planned.

The whole program of the Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs escaped discard when Secretary James F. Byrnes assured the House critics that he was weeding out undesirable employees. The branch has been under attack because of alleged leftist sympathies of certain officials.

The House Appropriations Committee endorsed overseas broadcasts as an excellent approach to international understanding but said the Department was overdoing the entertainment features.

WHAT WOULD GO ON

Abandonment of the broadcasts would permit the Department to continue these activities within the $10,000,000 limit.

Showing of movies depicting American life and history, daily radio reports to American missions abroad on official happenings, operation of libraries and publication of the Russian magazine "Amerika."

THREE EDITORS BACK UNITED STATES PLAN TO "TELL WORLD ABOUT AMERICA"

WASHINGTON, May 15 (AP).—Three newspaper editors are on record today as endorsing the State Department's proposed cultural-relations program and urging, particularly, an effort by the Government to "tell the world about America."

Those who testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee yesterday were Wilbur Forrest, assistant editor of the New York Herald Tribune; Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta, Ga., Constitution; and Mark Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville, Ky., Courier-Journal and Times.

The legislation asked by the State Department would provide for radiocasts and sending reports and publications to other nations throughout the world. It also would authorize interchange of students and of other projects carried on through the embassies for the promotion of better cultural relations between the nations.

The witnesses said that in recent trips abroad they found a great desire for news about America. They testified that particular need exists for short-wave radiocasts by this Government. Only in this manner, they said, can the "iron curtain" of censorship around many countries be overcome.

The three urged Congress to establish the State Department's program on a permanent basis. The House has voted $10,000,000 of the $19,000,000 the Department asked for the next fiscal year for the program, but has not acted on permanent legislation. The Senate has not acted yet on either the funds or the authorization.

Mr. McGill and Mr. Ethridge said the Department's program was threatened by the action of the Associated Press and United Press in withdrawing their news services from the Department.

"The whole thing is being misunderstood and colored by a commercial fight going on between the two press services," Mr. McGill asserted.

Mr. Forrest recommended that in all State Department radiocasts of spot news the items be attributed to the agency reporting them. William Benton, Assistant Secretary of State, commented he would be willing to do this, but that the AP and UP did not like the idea, "fearing that it would identify them too closely with the Government."

EDITORS ENDORSE UNITED STATES NEWS SERVICE—MCGILL, ETHRIDGE, AND FORREST HOLD AP AND UP OBSTRUCT VITAL GOVERNMENT FUNCTION—BENTON EXPLAINS STAND—HE PLEADS FOR RESTORATION OF FUNDS TO CONTINUE BROADCASTS TO EUROPE

(By Harold B. Hinton)

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Charges of obstructing a vital function of Government were made against two major wire news services of the United States today by Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, and Mark Ethridge, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times.

They testified with Wilbur Forrest, assistant editor of the New York Herald Tribune, before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs in favor of the State Department's program of cultural relations.

Mr. McGill told the committee that the Constitution and the Congress are adequate to guard freedom of the press in the United States.

He said that he was very fond of Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press, and Hugh Baillie, general manager of the United Press, but added that "I doubt if God has appointed them to protect the freedom of the press."

RETURNED FROM WORLD TOUR

The witness regarded it as unfortunate that the refusal of the wire services to furnish their news to the State Department for use in the broadcasts in 24 languages which the State Department now beams toward Europe had come into the consideration of the cultural-relations bill.

He said that the attitude of the wire services sprang from their competitive efforts to sell their reports, and that there is not an ounce of altruism to a ton of it.

Mr. McGill told the committee how he and Mr. Forrest, along with Carl A. Ackerman, dean of the Columbia School of Journalism, had traveled to Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Greece, Egypt, Turkey, Iran, the Soviet Union, India, China, and Australia in 1944 seeking to encourage freer exchange of news between all countries. Following that journey, he took another to France and the Middle East, from which he returned only a few weeks ago.

From that experience, he said, he considered the expansion of the United States Government's efforts to get its story befor the world of vital importance to the future of the country. Mr. Ethridge, who recently returned from a reportorial mission to the Balkans for Secretary of State Byrnes, agreed with Mr. McGill.

Mr. Ethridge declared that the Associated Press and the United Press are "exceedingly smug in their assumption they are the sole possessors of purity."

He also reproached all the wire services with lack of realism in imagining they can penetrate into countries "where they can't go," and found this particularly unfortunate at a time "when we are trying to win this peace—now, while we are in ideological war."

He recounted how a peasant in Transylvania had asked him to get the State Department to change the times of its voice broadcasts, because the morning one came before he got up and the evening one after he went to bed.

Mr. Forrest, who is president of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, told of the compromise he had suggested to the wire services, under which the State Department would make use of their news textually, giving credit for each item broadcast.

BENTON EXPLAINS PROPOSAL

William Benton, Assistant Secretary of State, who has been pushing the program and dealing with the wire services, explained that Mr. Forrest's suggestion is not now acceptable. He conceded that he had come to see the situation as being more complicated the more he became familiar with it, and outlined the position of the wire services to the committee.

His original proposal, he said, had been that the wire services accept the responsibility for preparing texts to be included in the State Department short-wave broadcasts, so as to assure themselves of the objectivity and accuracy of the reports. This was declined because the principal wire services believed such participation would brand them irrevocably as agencies of the Government.

When he understood this position, Mr. Benton said that he proposed that the State Department have access to the news reports of the United Press, the Associated Press, and the International News Service in order for its writers to have quick access to accurate news, but that the script would contain no credit for any of the news, the Government assuming full responsibility for everything broadcast. None of these three plans was found acceptable, he reported.

He told the committee, however, that its session of this morning would be only of historic interest unless the Senate appropriations subcommittee restored the cut in funds it has made in the State Department bill.

The Foreign Affairs Committee has reported the bill favorably, and it is now pending before the Rules Committee for consideration for access to the floor.

FORREST BACKS PLAN TO SPREAD NEWS ABOUT UNITED STATES—TELLS COMMITTEE OF HOUSE THAT STATE DEPARTMENT MUST AVOID PROPAGANDA

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Wilbur Forrest, assistant editor of the New York Herald Tribune and president of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, endorsed today a bill authorizing the Secretary of State to establish "programs for the interchange of persons, knowledge, and skills" with foreign countries. He warned, however, that in disseminating news of the United States through short-wave broadcasts, the State Department should clearly identify the source of its items and avoid the risk of having its output labeled abroad as propaganda.

Mr. Forrest, who is chairman of the ASNE's standing committee for world freedom of information, told the House Foreign Affairs Committee that the State Department should not write "spot news" for foreign consumption, but instead should distribute items from news services and newspapers and credit the source in each case. He defined "spot news" as news which is "alive today and dead tomorrow."

Mr. Forrest said it would be totally impossible for the United States Government to establish a reputation for fairness in putting out news if the news were written by Government employees. Sooner or later, he cautioned, such news would become suspect abroad.

FEARS PROPAGANDA

No matter how honestly a Government employee tried to write the news for short-wave broadcasts, he could not succeed, Mr. Forrest said. "I can see the papers abroad saying, 'The American Government propaganda service says today'," he added. This, he said would nullify the effect of the news.

"The breath of government shouldn't be on live news," Mr. Forrest told the committee. "If it's independent news, people will believe it, in my opinion."

William Benton, Assistant Secretary of State, said he had no objection to Mr. Forrest's suggestion, but that the Associated Press and the United Press had refused to permit continued use of their names in broadcasts to foreign listeners. He said they felt that they ran the risk of having their names tainted as Government-propaganda organs.

Mr. Benton recalled that he had proposed to the AP and UP that they prepare news scripts for short-wave use, which the State Department would transmit verbatim, or that they permit attribution of news items to them. Because they objected to both suggestions, he said, he proposed that they return their news tickers to the State Department for reference use by the department in preparing foreign broadcasts.

The bill on which Mr. Forrest testified has been approved by the committee.

URGES ADEQUATE FUNDS

Mr. Forrest said the ASNE committee's world tour last year convinced him there is a "great thirst" everywhere for knowledge of the United States. He said that the $10,000,000 voted by the House for the cultural-relations program was inadequate. The House had cut the State Department's request down from $19,000,000. The appropriation is now before the Senate.

Ralph E. McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, testified that Congress could be depended upon to see that the State Department kept its news output factual. I could appoint a committee to "ride herd" on the Department, he said.

Mark Ethridge, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times, testified it was not essential that outgoing Government news be attributed to the AP, UP, International News Service, or a particular newspaper. "The point is that it's an American Government broadcast," he said.

MANY NATIONS USE BROADCASTS OF UNITED NATIONS—STATE DEPARTMENT AND BRITISH LINK FACILITIES TO GIVE BREADTH OF COVERAGE

The people of countries that cover two-thirds of the world are following United Nations proceedings with intense interest, reports based on foreign reaction to programs broadcast by the International Broadcasting Division of the Department of State and the European service of the British Broadcasting Co. revealed yesterday.

Since March 25, when the United Nations Security Council started meeting in New York, the IBD has broadcast the Council's sessions, news and commentaries, to 32 nations with excellent results. The broadcasts, which in many cases are relayed by the BBC, have gone to Europe, the Middle East, Scandinavia, Africa, and Latin America.

Reports on the general success of the programs have come from Dik Lehmkuhl, United Nations radio officer in London, and from foreign outposts of the Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs, under which the IBD functions.

GREATEST IN EUROPE

Interest in United Nations events, the reports show, has been greatest in Europe, but the BBC home service has devoted hardly any attention to the Security Council meetings. Such former Axis partners as Hungary, Rumania, and Italy are carrying as much United Nations news as possible.

At present, United Nations plans to operate an independent radio station have not been formulated, but the United States liaison section of the Department of Public Information's Radio Division intends to provide recordings of proceedings and interviews to 200 American stations, V. Duckworth Barker, chief of the Division, said yesterday.

Mr. Barker said that letters had been sent to stations all over the country, pointing out the need for the American public to understand the United Nations and its work. The letters suggested that the stations broadcast transcriptions of Security Council sessions and interviews with prominent members of the Secretariat and the delegations to the United Nations. Letters were also sent to 29 stations operated by colleges and universities.

RESPONSE ENTHUSIASTIC

In both cases, Mr. Barker said the response has been enthusiastic. "I hope to make a tour of the States soon with Christopher Cross, the United States liaison officer, to implement the program," he said.

Each time the Security Council convenes now, four BD short-wave stations are detached from their regular networks to carry the session abroad. Daily "Voice of America" programs carry United Nations news roundups in 13 languages to countries such as Australia, Argentina, Bulgaria, Chile, Germany, Guatemala, Greece, Peru, Poland, Spain, and Yugoslavia.

BBC helps relay the programs principally to countries in Europe and North Africa. Though IBD does not broadcast to Russia, the BBC recently undertook to beam in Russian general news broadcasts, including United Nations news, to different sections of the Soviet Union, several times a day. It has been impossible to measure, however, how many of the approximately 65,000 short-wave receiving sets in Russia pick up the broadcasts.

COVERAGE IN FRANCE

In France, the French broadcasting system devotes 15 minutes each weekday to United Nations coverage. However, it has specified to the IBD, that if "important United Nations decisions are taken Sunday, please cable us early," and radio time will be allotted.

The OIC reports note that Spain has not shown any desire to rebroadcast United Nations proceedings, but that Voice of America programs in Spanish are directed there for 45 minutes daily, by six short-wave stations in the United States and one relay station in north Africa.

The lowland countries, Belgium and the Netherlands, and two of the Scandinavian nations, Sweden and Denmark, are on the whole "recording as many IBD broadcasts, as conditions permit, for inclusion in programs," and scheduling portions of the Security Council sessions.

Sections of the Middle East, Turkey, Syria, and Egypt similarly have reacted favorably to the broadcasts. The Levant radio carries as many as three programs daily. The Union of South Africa Broadcasting Corp. is serving the southern half of that continent, and BBC relays programs to north Africa.

Eighteen programs, at varying times on weekdays and Sundays, are directed to Central and South America. Response to these broadcasts, the OIC reports, has been "very good."

"UNITED STATES 'INFO' SERVICE TOO IMPORTANT" AS UNITED STATES CUTS ITS PROPAGANDA BUDGET

ROME, May 14.

Editor, VARIETY:

Am rather depressed but perhaps not too surprised at the great opposition growing back home against the information and cultural set-up abroad. I admit that some of the criticism is justified but on the whole I feel that our Congressmen show a complete lack of comprehension on the necessity of having these offices abroad. Ignorance has been one of the greatest ills of this world and the cause for so many of our ills. Carried on an international plane it has been the primary cause for wars. The one way to eliminate wars is to have education for the masses and free access to all news. Here was one concrete step toward having others see Americans as they really are.

We have been represented as a materialistic and grasping people out for world domination. All these years Italians have associated Americans with boogie-woogie, divorces, Hollywood, big fortunes, bathtubs, and many superficial aspects of civilization. In a few months in Italy, USIS has opened the eyes of many Italians by showing what Americans have contributed in the world of art, engineering, medicine, agriculture, music, and democracy. They have been very much surprised. They had associated us with the lighter things in life but now they see the United States as a matured Nation which has contributed much to this civilization of the twentieth century.

Anything that our friends in the newspaper and radio world can do to help this program will certainly be doing something to making this a better and friendlier world. OWI contributed much during the war. USIS can do much to prevent the setting up of a new OWI in 10, 20, or 30 years.

Does this sound like preaching? Perhaps it is, but I feel very strongly about it and I know that USIS is something that should be fought for. I'd feel the same way if I were to leave the outfit tomorrow.

J. D. RAVOTTE.

WASHINGTON, May 14.—Although Congress is preparing to slash to the bone funds for the new State Department Foreign Information Service, which includes use of films, British are expanding their information service, including the motion picture end.

Set-up was explained here recently by Neville Gardiner, film head of the British Information Services in this country. Gardiner disclosed that the films division of the new English "Central Office of Information" (successor to the British Ministry of Information) will be bigger than it was during the war.

Just back from 8 weeks in England, Gardiner explained that his country has set up a three-point postwar information program and has committed itself to: Provide information for its own people, continue in peacetime the wartime policy of a single information unit, and provide information for exchange with other countries.

Films play an important part in each point. The 1946 program calls for the production of 200 films, mostly shorts. Ninety percent of these will be made at the request of various ministries, and 10 percent will be originated by COI. Already in production at the request of Prime Minister Clement Attlee are films on the subject of food, problems of international trade, military government, and so forth. One, on displaced persons, has already been completed.

DECRIES OUR SLASH IN RADIO TO WORLD—STATE DEPARTMENT AIDE GIVES FIGURES FOR BIG THREE ON WAR AND PRESENT BROADCASTING

(By Jack Gould)

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4.—The State Department made public here today figures to show that the United States was the only Big Three power to curtail drastically its radio facilities for explaining to world listeners the country's position on international affairs.

In a direct appeal to the public for support against congressional reduction of the Department's appropriation for international broadcasting, William L. Stone, director of the Office of International Information and Cultural Relations of the Department, issued the following statistical summary of the short-wave-radio activities of Great Britain, Russia, and the United States:

Great Britain: At the peak of its wartime operations in 1944 it broadcast a total of 109 hours 35 minutes daily in 39 languages. Today it broadcasts 97 hours 46 minutes in 40 languages.

STATISTICS FOR RUSSIA

Russia: In 1944 it was broadcasting 65 hours and 12 minutes daily in 29 languages. Today it is broadcasting 56 hours and 36 minutes daily in 32 languages. (These figures were understood not to include extensive broadcasting by Moscow to Balkan countries.)

United States: In 1944 it was broadcasting 153 hours and 20 minutes daily in 34 languages. Today it broadcasts 68 hours and 57 minutes daily in 24 languages.

"The British Broadcasting Corporation and Russia have reduced hours of broadcasts but slightly and actually increased language coverage," Mr. Stone declared. "In marked contrast, the United States has reduced hours of broadcasts by over 50 percent and we have dropped 10 languages."

Mr. Stone was the principal speaker today at the Institute for Education by Radio, sponsored by Ohio State University. In the background of his discussion was a move in the House in Washington to cut the annual budget of the Office of International Information and Cultural Relations from $19,000,000 to $10,000,000.

Mr. Stone asserted that international radio was often the only means by which the American Government could get its views before people in many troubled areas of the world.

An important speech by Secretary of State Byrnes before the opening of the United Nations Security Council in New York, he noted, was not carried by the press either in Russia or in the Balkan countries.

"Many areas of the world present political problems which have repercussions all over the world and with which the United States must reckon," he declared. "Some of these areas are now shielded by the curtain of censorship, through which only radio can pass. In many areas the short-wave program represents the only source of news which cannot be censored or controlled locally at the receiving location.

"As a means of expressing America, its culture and its ideals, short-wave radio will pay incalculable dividends to the American taxpayers. The United States cannot afford to do a second-rate job on a first-class medium of information which other nations use so extensively and intelligently to present their views to the world."

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in conclusion, as men of good will, should we not heed the profound admonition contained in the first line of the new charter of the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization? The charter declares:

Since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defenses of peace must be constructed.

In this atomic era now dawning upon us a strong United States Office of International Information is one of our most indispensable and economic safeguards against the inception of a war of annihilation too terrible to contemplate.

Thus the presentation of a fair and true picture of America to the peoples of the world is the first and most vital step we must take to truly sow the seeds of universal brotherhood and peace.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6056) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McCARRAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. MEAD, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. WHITE, Mr. BALL, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF THE ANTIRACKETEERING ACT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of moving that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill 32, which is the so-called antiracketeering or so-called Hobbs bill. The bill was passed by the Senate several days ago as an amendment to the so-called Case bill. It is not my purpose now, Mr. President, to discuss the bill. I do not think any discussion of it is necessary. The Senate has already acted on it, and my only purpose now is to have it considered by the Senate and to have it voted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 32) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against interference by violence, threats, coercion, or intimidation," approved June 18, 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, before this bill is taken up, should we not have a quorum? I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gurney	Murray

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 32) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against interference by violence, threats, coercion, or intimidation," approved June 18, 1934.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, at this time I wish to give notice that immediately following disposition of the bill now before the Senate I intend to call up House bill 4437, a bill to provide for the return of public employment offices to State operation, to amend the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, what bill did the Senator say he wished to call up?

Mr. MURRAY. It is the so-called USES bill, a bill providing for the return to the States of public employment offices.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of House bill 32.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BALL subsequently said: Mr. President, I move that the vote by which House bill 32 was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move that that motion be laid on the table.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDRESS BY HON. BERNARD M. BARUCH AT OPENING SESSION OF UNITED NATIONS ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD the address delivered by Hon. Bernard M. Baruch at the opening session of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. This is perhaps one of the most important documents that will appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during this session of the Congress.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My fellow members of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, and my fellow citizens of the world, we are here to make a choice between the quick and the dead.

That is our business.

Behind the black portent of the new atomic age lies a hope which seized upon with faith, can work our salvation. If we fail, then we have damned every man to be the slave of fear. Let us not deceive ourselves: We must elect world peace or world destruction.

Science has torn from nature a secret so vast in its potentialities that our minds cower from the terror it creates. Yet terror is not enough to inhibit the use of the atomic bomb. The terror created by weapons has never stopped man from employing them. For each new weapon a defense has been produced, in time. But now we face a condition in which adequate defense does not exist.

WILL OF MANKIND INVOKED

Science, which gave us this dread power, shows that it can be made a giant help to humanity, but science does not show us how to prevent its baleful use. So we have been appointed to obviate that peril by finding a meeting of the minds and the hearts of our peoples. Only in the will of mankind lies the answer.

It is to express this will and make it effective that we have been assembled. We must provide the mechanism to assure that atomic energy is used for peaceful purposes and preclude its use in war. To that end, we must provide immediate, swift, and sure punishment of those who violate the agreements that are reached by the nations. Penalization is essential if peace is to be more than a feverish interlude between wars. And, too, the United Nations can prescribe individual responsibility and punishment on the principles applied at Nuremberg by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, France, and the United States—a formula certain to benefit the world's future.

In this crisis we represent not only our governments but, in a larger way, we represent the peoples of the world. We must remember that the peoples do not belong to the governments, but that the governments belong to the peoples. We must answer their demands; we must answer the world's longing for peace and security.

In that desire the United States shares ardently and hopefully. The search of science for the absolute weapon has reached fruition in this country. But she stands ready to proscribe and destroy this instrument—to lift its use from death to life—if the world will join in a pact to that end.

In our success lies the promise of a new life, freed from the heart-stopping fears that now beset the world. The beginning of victory for the great ideals for which millions have bled and died lies in building a workable plan. Now we approach fulffillment of the aspirations of mankind. At the end of the road lies the fairer, better, surer life we crave and mean to have.

PEACE KEY TO DEMOCRACY

Only by a lasting peace are liberties and democracies strengthened and deepened. War is their enemy. And it will not do to believe that any of us can escape war's devastation. Victor, vanquished, and neutrals alike are affected physically, economically, and morally.

Against the degradation of war we can erect a safeguard. That is the guerdon for which we reach. Within the scope of the formula we outline here, there will be found, to those who seek it, the essential elements of our purpose. Others will see only emptiness. Each of us carries his own mirror in which is reflected hope—or determined desperation—courage or cowardice.

There is famine throughout the world today. It starves men's bodies. But there is a greater famine—the hunger of men's spirit. That starvation can be cured by the conquest of fear, and the substitution of hope, from which springs faith—faith in each other; faith that we want to work together toward salvation; and determination that those who threaten the peace and safety shall be punished.

The peoples of these democracies gathered here have a particular concern with our answer, for their peoples hate war. They will have a heavy exaction to make of those who fail to provide an escape. They are not afraid of an internationalism that protects; they are unwilling to be fobbed off by mouthings about narrow sovereignty, which is today's phrase for yesterday's isolation.

The basis of a sound foreign policy, in this new age for all the nations here gathered, is that: Anything that happens, no matter where or how, which menaces the peace of the world, or the economic stability, concerns each and all of us.

That, roughly, may be said to be the central theme of the United Nations. It is with that thought we begin consideration of the most important subject that can engage mankind—life itself.

Let there be no quibbling about the duty and the responsibility of this group and of the governments we represent. I was moved, in the afternoon of my life, to add my effort to gain the world's quest, by the broad mandate under which we were created. The resolution of the General Assembly, passed January 24, 1946, in London, reads:

"SECTION V. TERMS OF REFERENCE OF THE COMMISSION

"The Commission shall proceed with the utmost dispatch and inquire into all phases of the problem, and make such recommendations from time to time with respect to them as it finds possible. In particular, the Commission shall make specific proposals:

"A. For extending between all nations the exchange of basic scientific information for peaceful ends;

"B. For control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to insure its use only for peaceful purposes;

"C. For the elimination from national armaments of atomic weapons and of all other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction;

"D. For effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying states against the hazards of violations and evasions.

"The work of the Commission should proceed by separate stages, the successful completion of each of which will develop the necessary confidence of the world before the next stage is undertaken."

Our mandate rests, in text and in spirit, upon the outcome of the conference in Moscow of Messrs. Molotov of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Bevin of the United Kingdom, and Byrnes of the United States of America. The three Foreign Ministers, on December 27, 1945, proposed the establishment of this body.

Their action was animated by a preceding conference in Washington, on November 15, 1945, when the President of the United States, associated with Mr. Attlee, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, and Mr. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada, stated that international control of the whole field of atomic energy was immediately essential. They proposed the formation of this body. In examining that source, the agreed declaration, it will be found that the fathers of the concept recognized the final means of world salvation—the abolition of war. Solemnly they wrote:

"We are aware that the only complete protection for the civilized world from the destructive use of scientific knowledge lies in the prevention of war. No system of safeguards that can be devised will of itself provide an effective guaranty against production of atomic weapons by a nation bent on aggression. Nor can we ignore the possibility of the development of other weapons, or of new methods of warfare, which may constitute as great a threat to civilization as the military use of atomic energy."

Through the historical approach I have outlined, we find ourselves here to test if man can produce, through his will and faith, the miracle of peace, just as he has, through science and skill, the miracle of the atom.

SCOPE OF PROPOSED POWER

The United States proposes the creation of an International Atomic Development Authority, to which should be entrusted all phases of the development and use of atomic energy, starting with the raw material and including:

(1) Managerial control or ownership of all atomic energy activities potentially dangerous to world security.

(2) Power to control, inspect, and license all other atomic activities.

(3) The duty of fostering the beneficial uses of atomic energy.

(4) Research and development responsibilities of an affirmative character intended to put the Authority in the forefront of atomic knowledge and thus to enable it to comprehend, and therefore to detect, misuse of atomic energy. To be effective, the Authority must itself be the world's leader in the field of atomic knowledge and development and thus supplement its legal authority with the great power inherent in possession of leadership in knowledge.

I offer this as a basis for beginning our discussion.

But, I think, the peoples we serve would not believe—and without faith nothing counts—that a treaty merely outlawing possession or use of the atomic bomb constitutes effective fulfillment of the instructions to this commission. Previous failures have been recorded in trying the method of simple renunciation, unsupported by effective guaranties of security and armament limitation. No one would have faith in that approach alone.

Now, if ever, is the time to act for the common good. Public opinion supports a world movement toward security. If I read the signs aright, the peoples want a program, not composed merely of pious thoughts but of enforceable sanctions—an international law with teeth in it.

We of this Nation, desirous of helping to bring peace to the world and realizing the heavy obligations upon us, arising from our possession of the means for producing the bomb and from the fact that it is part of our armament, are prepared to make our full contribution toward effective control of atomic energy.

PROPOSALS FOR REGULATION

When an adequate system for control of atomic energy, including the renunciation of the bomb as a weapon, has been agreed upon and put into effective operation and condign punishments set up for violations of the rules of control, which are to be stigmatized as international crimes, we propose that—

(1) Manufacture of atomic bombs shall stop;

(2) Existing bombs shall be disposed of pursuant to the terms of the treaty; and

(3) The Authority shall be in possession of full information as to the know-how for the production of atomic energy.

Let me repeat, so as to avoid misunderstanding: My country is ready to make its full contribution toward the end we seek, subject, of course, to our constitutional processes, and to an adequate system of control becoming fully effective, as we finally work it out.

Now, as to violations: In the agreement penalties of as serious a nature as the nations may wish and as immediate and certain in their execution as possible should be fixed for—

1. Illegal possession or use of an atomic bomb.

2. Illegal possession or separation of atomic material suitable for use in an atomic bomb.

3. Seizure of any plant or other property belonging to or licensed by the authority.

4. Willful interference with the activities of the authority.

5. Creation or operation of dangerous projects in a manner contrary to, or in the absence of, a license granted by the international control body.

It would be a deception, to which I am unwilling to lend myself, were I not to say to you, and to our peoples, that the matter of punishment lies at the very heart of our present security system. It might as well be admitted, here and now, that the subject goes straight to the veto power contained in the Charter of the United Nations so far as it relates to the field of atomic energy. The Charter permits penalization only by concurrence of each of the five great powers—Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, China, France, and the United States.

SPECIFIC VETO SUGGESTED

I want to make very plain that I am concerned here with the veto power only as it affects this particular problem. There must be no veto to protect those who violate their solemn agreements not to develop or use atomic energy for destructive purposes.

The bomb does not wait upon debate. To delay may be to die. The time between violation and preventive action or punishment would be all too short for extended discussion as to the course to be followed.

As matters now stand, several years may be necessary for another country to produce a bomb de novo. However, once the basic information is generally known, and the authority has established producing plants for peaceful purposes in the several countries, an illegal seizure of such a plant might permit a malevolent nation to produce a bomb in 12 months, and, if preceded by secret preparation and necessary facilities, perhaps even in a much shorter time.

The time required—the advance warning given of the possible use of a bomb—can only be generally estimated, but obviously will depend upon many factors, including the success with which the authority has been able to introduce elements of safety in the design of its plants and the degree to which illegal and secret preparation for the military use of atomic energy will have been eliminated. Presumably no nation would think of starting a war with only one bomb.

This shows how imperative speed is in detecting and penalizing violations.

The process of prevention and penalization—a problem of profound statecraft—is, as I read it, implicit in the Moscow statement, signed by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United States, and the United Kingdom a few months ago.

GUARANTEE IS ESSENTIAL

But before a country is ready to relinquish any winning weapons, it must have more than words to reassure it. It must have a guaranty of safety, not only against the offenders in the atomic area, but against the illegal users of other weapons—bacteriological, biological, gas—perhaps—why not?—against war itself.

In the elimination of war lies our solution, for only then will nations cease to compete with one another in the production and use of dread "secret" weapons which are evaluated solely by their capacity to kill. This devilish program takes us back not merely to the Dark Ages, but from cosmos to chaos. If we succeed in finding a suitable way to control atomic weapons, it is reasonable to hope that we may also preclude the use of other weapons adaptable to mass destruction. When a man learns to say "A" he can, if he chooses, learn the rest of the alphabet, too.

Let this be anchored in our minds:

Peace is never long preserved by weight of metal or by an armament race. Peace can be made tranquil and secure only by understanding and agreement fortified by sanctions. We must embrace international cooperation or international disintegration.

Science has taught us how to put the atom to work. But to make it work for good instead of for evil lies in the domain dealing with the principles of human duty. We are now facing a problem more of ethics than of physics.

The solution will require apparent sacrifice in pride and in position, but better pain as the price of peace than death as the price of war.

FUNDAMENTAL PLAN OUTLINED

I now submit the following measures as representing the fundamental features of a plan which would give effect to the basis of the conclusions which I have epitomized.

(1) General: The Authority should set up a thorough plan for control of the field of atomic energy, through various forms of ownership, dominion, licenses, operation, inspection, research, and management by competent personnel. After this is provided for, there should be as little interference as may be with the economic plans and the present private, corporate, and state relationships in the several countries involved.

(2) Raw materials: The Authority should have as one of its earliest purposes to obtain and maintain complete and accurate information on world supplies of uranium and thorium and to bring them under its dominion. The precise pattern of control for various types of deposits of such materials will have to depend upon the geological, mining, refining, and economic facts involved in different situations.

The Authority should conduct continuous surveys so that it will have the most complete knowledge of the world geology of uraninum and thorium. Only after all current information on world sources of uranium and thorium is known to us all can equitable plans be made for their production, refining, and distribution.

(3) Primary production plants: The Authority should exercise complete managerial control of the production of fissionable materials. This means that it should control and operate all plants producing fissionable materials in dangerous quantities and must own and control the product of these plants.

RESEARCH MONOPOLY URGED

(4) Atomic explosives: The Authority should be given sole and exclusive right to conduct research in the field of atomic explosives. Research activities in the field of atomic explosives are essential in order that the Authority may keep in the forefront of knowledge in the field of atomic energy and fulfill the objective of preventing illicit manufacture of bombs. Only by maintaining its position as the best informed agency will the Authority be able to determine the line between intrinsically dangerous and nondangerous activities.

(5) Strategic distribution of activities and materials: The activities entrusted exclusively to the Authority, because they are intrinsically dangerous to security, should be distributed throughout the world. Similarly, stock piles of raw materials and fissionable materials should not be centralized.

(6) Nondangerous activities: A function of the Authority should be promotion of the peacetime benefits of atomic energy.

Atomic research (except in explosives), the use of research reactors, the production of radioactive tracers by means of nondangerous reactors, the use of such tracers and, to some extent, the production of power should be open to nations and their citizens under reasonable licensing arrangements from the Authority. Denatured materials, whose use we know also requires suitable safeguards, should be furnished for such purposes by the Authority under lease or other arrangement. Denaturing seems to have been overestimated by the public as a safety measure.

(7) Definition of dangerous and nondangerous activities: Although a reasonable dividing line can be drawn between dangerous and nondangerous activities, it is not hard and fast. Provision should, therefore, be made to assure constant reexamination of the questions, and to permit revision of the dividing line as changing conditions and new discoveries may require.

(8) Operations of dangerous activities: Any plant dealing with uranium or thorium after it once reaches the potential of dangerous use must be not only subject to the most rigorous and competent inspection by the Authority, but its actual operation shall be under the management, supervision, and control of the Authority.

(9) Inspection: By assigning intrinsically dangerous activities exclusively to the Authority, the difficulties of inspection are reduced. If the Authority is the only agency which may lawfully conduct dangerous activities, then visible operation by others than the Authority will constitute an unambiguous danger signal. Inspection will also occur in connection with the licensing functions of the Authority.

(10) Freedom of access: Adequate ingress and egress for all qualified representatives of the Authority must be assured. Many of the inspection activities of the Authority should grow out of, and be incidental to, its other functions. Important measures of inspection will be associated with the tight control of raw materials, for this is a keystone of the plan. The continuing activities of prospecting, survey, and research in relation to raw materials will be designed not only to serve the affirmative development functions of the Authority, but also to assure that no surreptitious operations are conducted in the raw materials field by nations or their citizens.

(11) Personnel: The personnel of the Authority should be recruited on a basis of proven competence, but also so far as possible on an international basis.

(12) Progress by stages: A primary step in the creation of the system of control is the setting forth in comprehensive terms of the functions, responsibilities, powers, and limitations of the Authority. Once a charter for the Authority has been adopted, the Authority and the system of control for which it will be responsible will require time to become fully organized and effective. The plan of control will, therefore, have to come into effect in successive stages. These should be specifically fixed in the charter or means should be otherwise set forth in the charter for transitions from one stage to another, as contemplated in the resolution of the United Nations Assembly which created this Commission.

(13) Disclosures: In the deliberations of the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy, the United States is prepared to make available the information essential to a reasonable understanding of the proposals which it advocates. Further disclosures must be dependent, in the interests of all, upon the effective ratification of the treaty. When the Authority is actually created, the United States will join the other nations in making available the further information essential to that organization for the performance of its function. As the successive stages of international control are reached, the United States will be prepared to yield, to the extent required by each stage, national control of activities in this field to the Authority.

(14) International control: There will be questions about the extent of control to be allowed to national bodies, when the Authority is established. Purely national authorities for control and development of atomic energy should to the extent necessary for the effective operation of the Authority be subordinate to it. This is neither an endorsement nor a disapproval of the creation of national authorities. The Commission should evolve a clear demarcation of the scope of duties and responsibilities of such national authorities.

BROAD CRITICISM INVITED

And now I end. I have submitted an outline for present discussion. Our consideration will be broadened by the criticism of the United States proposals and by the plans of the other nations, which, it is to be hoped, will be submitted at their early convenience. I and my associates of the United States delegation will make available to each member of this body books and pamphlets, including the Acheson-Lilienthal report, recently made by the United States Department of State, and the McMahon committee monograph No. 1 entitled "Essential Information on Atomic Energy" relating to the McMahon bill recently passed by the United States Senate, which may prove of value in assessing the situation.

All of us are consecrated to making an end of gloom and hopelessness. It will not be an easy job. The way is long and thorny, but supremely worth traveling. All of us want to stand erect, with our faces to the sun, instead of being forced to burrow into the earth, like rats.

The pattern of salvation must be worked out by all for all.

The light at the end of the tunnel is dim, but our path seems to grow brighter as we actually begin our journey. We cannot yet light the way to the end. However, we hope the suggestions of my Government will be illuminating.

LINCOLN'S WORDS PARAPHRASED

Let us keep in mind the exhortation of Abraham Lincoln, whose words, uttered at a moment of shattering national peril, form a complete text for our deliberation. I quote, paraphrasing slightly:

"We cannot escape history. We of this meeting will be remembered in spite of ourselves. No personal significance or insignificance can spare one or another of us. The fiery trial through which we are passing will light us down in honor or dishonor to the latest generation.

"We say we are for peace. The world will not forget that we say this. We know how to save peace. The world knows that we do. We, even we here, hold the power and have the responsibility.

"We shall nobly save, or meanly lose, the last, best hope of earth. The way is plain, peaceful, generous, just—a way which, if followed, the world will forever applaud."

My thanks for your attention.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Atomic Bourbons," published in the Washington Post of June 20, 1946.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ATOMIC BOURBONS

The atomic-energy legislation unanimously enacted after exhaustive deliberation by the Senate has now been irresponsibly torpedoed by the House Military Affairs Committee. The effect, and apparently the intent, of this action, as the committee chairman, Representative ANDREW J. MAY, acknowledged, is to "restore the principles of the May-Johnson bill." It appears that the committee has learned nothing and forgotten nothing since it first introduced that thoroughly discredited measure. Indeed, its present proposal is a degree more offensive than what it broached originally. It would assure the military at least one, and perhaps two, places on the Atomic Control Commission, making mandatory what the May-Johnson bill merely made permissive. And it would, in fact, virtually empower the Army to ignore commission policies and directives respecting the manufacture of atomic weapons.

The issue here is not one which can be ignored or compromised for the sake of settling a problem which is plainly urgent. It is an issue which goes to the heart of the American philosophy of government. The subordination of military to civilian rule has been a cornerstone of this society—one of those vital principles the undermining of which threatens the whole societal structure. There are a good many compelling pragmatic reasons for preferring unqualifiedly civilian control of atomic development—the inflexibility of Army rule, its emphasis upon utilization of the atom as a weapon, its stultification of scientific freedom, its absurd identification of security with secrecy. But all of these are transcended in significance by the essential principle which is at stake. The Army is an instrument of policy. If Army officers, as such, are allowed to determine the policies they are employed to defend, we shall have embraced the essential characteristic of militarism.

The Senate, recognizing this fundamental fact, first made due provision in the legislation it enacted for the Nation's defense needs and for representation of the Army's point of view, then insisted wisely that the Atomic Control Commission itself be made up exclusively of civilians. This was an arrangement which had the full approval of Secretary Patterson and Secretary Forrestal, civilians who, in accordance with hitherto inviolable tradition, are the heads of our armed forces. It was entirely satisfactory to General Eisenhower. But apparently there are members of the Military Affairs Committee more militarist than the military. They have now put us right back to where we started—back to where it is necessary to argue all over again democratic fundamentals which ought never be brought into question.

We hope that the House, most democratic of all our instruments of government, will follow the lead of the Senate and set aside the recommendation of its Military Affairs Committee. There is no time left for a second protracted debate on this legislation. Even now the United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy is considering an American proposal to establish a world atomic development authority. Establishment of atomic control at home is an absolute prerequisite. We can no longer afford to leave this most potent of the earth's forces unharnessed and undirected.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO HON. FRED M. VINSON AS CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to read a letter from the secretary to the President of the United States:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 21, 1946.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
President pro tempore of the Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The President has much pleasure in inviting you and, through you, the Members of the United States Senate to attend the exercises at the White House on Monday, June 24, next, at 11 a. m., when the oath of office will be administered to the Honorable Fred M. Vinson as Chief Justice of the United States.

Please ask the Members to enter the White House by the east entrance.

Sincerely,

MATTHEW J. CONNELLY,
Secretary to the President.

EXTENSION OF SECOND WAR POWERS ACT OF 1942

Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. MURRAY, and Mr. BALL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What is the present parliamentary status?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration——

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that before the present occupant of the Chair assumed the Chair, the former occupant had recognized the Senator from Montana.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I wish to bring up House bill 4437, a bill to provide for the return to the States of public employment offices. While another bill was before the Senate I gave notice that immediately upon the conclusion of consideration of that bill I wished to make this bill the order of business.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will indulge me, let me say that I have had an understanding with the leadership that as soon as the appropriation bills are out of the way we would proceed to the consideration of the bill to extend the Second War Powers Act. The act expires at the end of the month. I feel that it probably would not require much time.

Mr. MURRAY. Very well.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1441, House bill 5716.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5716) to amend the Second War Powers Act of 1942, as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHITE. What is the present parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The parliamentary situation at the present time is that House bill 5716, a bill to amend the Second War Powers Act of 1942, as amended, is before the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Let me inquire what change is proposed in the Second War Powers Act.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I shall be very happy to make that explanation the moment I am permitted to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Second War Powers Act, as it was originally passed, consisted of 14 effective titles. The House and Senate Committees on the Judiciary have progressively cut down the act and have eliminated from its provisions about 50 percent of the titles which were originally included in it.

The bill as passed by the House extends for a period of 9 months titles I, II, IV, V, VII, and XIV, and it repeals title XI as of June 30, 1946, and extends title III, the priority title, until the 30th of June 1947. As I have said, of the 14 substantive titles contained in the act, two have already expired, namely, title VIII and title XII. Title IX has been replaced by permanent legislation; Titles X and XIII were also enacted as permanent legislation by a previous Congress, and they required no extension. Title VI expires as of the 30th of June, 1946, and this measure contains no provision to extend it.

So it transpires that of the original 14 titles in the act, only 7 remain; and of those, title III is the most important. It enables the Civilian Production Administration to continue the allocation of materials.

It was deemed essential by the committee that that power be extended, because there still are several commodities which are in excessively short supply—for example, sugar. The power to ration sugar is contained in title III of the act. I think every Member of Congress knows that before the war the United States received annually from the Philippines approximately 1,200,000 tons of sugar. There was a general hope that by the end of hostilities with Japan the production of sugar in the Philippines might be reestablished and that the United States would shortly obtain supplies from that source. It now appears, however, that such hopes have been completely disappointed. The Philippines will not send to the United States, either next year or the year after that, and probably not for 3 or 4 years, anything to compare with the original supplies of sugar which we were accustomed to receive from them. For example, it is estimated that not to exceed 1,400 or 1,500 tons of sugar can be received from the Philippines next year. So the rationing power must be retained.

Then let us consider the case of tin. The representations made before the committee are to the effect that there are not more than 30,000 tons of tin available in the United States. Under the allocation power the Civilian Production Administration distributes the tin. I may say to the Senator, briefly, that the Civilian Production Administration has been diligent in eliminating directives and orders under the War Powers Act. The Civilian Production Administration is the successor, as the Senator knows, of the War Production Board. At VE-day there were some 660 or 670 orders and directives in effect. There now remain in effect only 66.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the act contain the power to ration or allocate any foods other than sugar? Is the authority to ration contained in this act or in the Stabilization Act?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It contains, for example, the power under which the purchase of grain was made.

Mr. AIKEN. Yes. But does this act end the power of so-called consumer rationing? It contains provision for the extension of priorities and, I take it, the allocation of certain materials.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the purpose for which it has been used. No other rationing has been put into effect, and none is contemplated.

Mr. AIKEN. But the orders as to fats and other foods were authorized by the Price Control and Stabilization Act; were they not?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No. The rationing power was not authorized by the OPA, but by the Civilian Production Administration. But it was enforced by the OPA.

Mr. AIKEN. Then the extension of this act is absolutely necessary for the continuation of rationing; is it not?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. President, I have before me a list of various Civilian Production Administration orders which were in effect as of May 1, 1946. It appears on page 51 of the hearings. I ask unanimous consent that that list, together with the table showing the number of orders in effect monthly from December 31 last up through May 1946 may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table and list were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The orders and schedules, and the CPA orders in effect as of May 1, 1946, are as follows:

	Orders	Schedules	Total
December 31	43	18	61

L. F. FOSTER,
Director, Controls Readjustment Division, Bureau of Reconversion Priorities.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senate committe reported the bill in exactly the same form in which it was passed by the House; the committee has proposed no amendment. I understand that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] has prepared an amendment which has been printed. I have not had an opportunity to see it as yet. But if it is what the Senator described it to me to be, I shall have no objection to the amendment. The purpose of it is to make certain that the powers granted by this act shall not be used for the purpose of price stabilization. They were not intended for such use, and I see no objection to the adoption of such an amendment.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which lies on the desk, and I ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 15, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. Title XV of such act, as amended, is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new section as follows:

"SEC. 1503. Nothing contained in this act or any other act (except the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended), shall be construed to authorize the establishment by any officer or agency of the Government of maximum prices for any commodity or maximum rents for any housing accommodations."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I see no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to further amendment.

If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RETURN OF PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT OFFICES TO STATE OPERATION

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] desires to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4437, Calendar No. 1290.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4437, providing for the return to State operation of public employment offices.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4437) to provide for the return of public employment offices to State operation, to amend the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933 (48 Stat. 113), and for other purposes.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I was on the subcommittee which worked on the bill. I have been conferring about it with a number of Republican Senators who wish to confer again on Monday morning. I wonder whether it is the intention of the Senator from Montana to try to have the Senate proceed with consideration of the bill tonight, or to let the bill go over until Monday so as to enable the Senators I have mentioned to determine whether they wish to offer amendments.

Mr. MURRAY. I say to the Senator from Minnesota that I am agreeable to having the bill go over until Monday.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 21, 1946

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou in whose light we see light, we pray Thee to lift the shadows and rise with Thy morning upon our spirits. Grant that we may be newborn like the day, with new life and hope in Thy mercies. Do Thou scatter the darkness of our senses and fulfill in us the promise of a new world, unfolding our latent forces. Thus summon us to be strong, earnest, and brave, lest we forfeit our best selves. We are grateful that Thou hast made us a part of Thy plan to broaden and deepen manhood and to magnify intelligence and virtue. Thou eternal Spirit, under the shadow of the cross, the symbol of sin and sacrifice, we confess our failures and our needs, and pray for Thy mercy and forgiveness, as we pledge greater fidelity to Thee and trust the life immortal. Through Christ, the world's Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SEC. 2. The official committee reporters may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, if not otherwise officially engaged.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE WALTZ OF THE CENTURY

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, every Member of this House now knows what a fraud and fiasco the Louis-Conn fight was on Wednesday night. It was a fraud that cost our sport-loving people over $2,000,000 in admissions alone. The fight was run by that lovable character, Mike Jacobs, who has been the impresario of numerous other queer ventures in fistic circles.

Knowing that a good portion of the population of the country was outraged at the fiasco, I addressed a telegram to Mr. Edward Eagan, chairman of the Boxing Commission of the State of New York, demanding that the fight be investigated. I further asked that the purses of the boxers be held up until such time as the people's representative, thus, the State boxing commission, could ascertain all of the details of the fight. I felt that the public was entitled to know what the contract contained, what private agreements might have been made between the boxers, what private agreements might have been made with Jacobs, what supervision was made of the training and all of the other details to which the public is entitled.

I have received no response from Commissioner Eagan, but when "Wily Mike" was accosted by the press, not being able to give an answer to my charges, with all the daintiness and delicacy that he and his mob possess, he charged me with having endeavored to "knock him off for two tickets." Coming from this guttersnipe, I would not utter a denial. It is not entitled to that much respect. I have instructed my attorneys in New York to sue Jacobs for $100,000, as he has accused me of extortion.

Boxing is one of the most deservedly popular of all sports in the United States and for many years did provide an outlet for a sport-loving people. But since Jacobs and his mob have acquired monopolistic control of the boxing profession, it has sunk, not into the gutter but into the sewer. It is controlled in New York by a group of pickpockets, parolees, ex-convicts, professional gamblers, and "heist" men. These are the habitués of Mr. Jacobs' office—these are his intimates. The natural result is the Conn-Louis fight, and many other aromatic—but not sweet-smelling—ventures which mulcted the sporting public of millions of dollars.

Jacobs was not alone responsible. The New York State Boxing Commission, who are the representatives of the people, had a deep obligation to prevent any such waltz contest as took place. The commission under Mr. Eagan should have insisted that both of these fighters engage in warm-up bouts with other opponents so that the public might have an opportunity to gage whether or not either or both men were fit for a championship contest. This was not done. It was the duty of the commission to carefully study the training preparations of the fighters and to decide whether or not they were using sparring partners of a caliber that would truly prepare them for the bout. But the worst feature of the actions of the commission was to sit themselves at the ringside and to allow this fight to continue after the first two rounds. Had these been two preliminary boys who were in the ring, Mr. Eagan or one of his colleagues would have ordered the fight stopped and would have held up the purses. Unfortunately for the public, the gentlemen of the commission did not have that type of moral courage and allowed the fraud to be perpetrated. Had they stopped the fight, they would have done boxing the greatest service possible.

Eddie Eagan is a nice boy, but nice boys are just snickered at by men like Uncle Mike and his mob. It is still not too late for Commissioner Eagan and his men to investigate not only the fight itself, but the entire industry in New York and to wipe out the vile, foul elements that are ruining a great competitive sport. Mr. Eagan, there is your duty. Have you the gumption to do it?

ADMISSION OF JEWS INTO PALESTINE

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor at this time to call the attention of the Members of the House, if they have not already noted it, to a recent statement by Foreign Secretary Bevin of Great Britain with regard to the admission of a hundred thousand Jews into Palestine. I want to remind the membership that when the Anglo-American Inquiry Committee was formed and during its deliberations, its members were assured by Mr. Bevin and Prime Minister Attlee, and the Government of Great Britain, that if the report were unanimous the government would go along with it, and implement its recommendations.

The report was unanimous, and one of its recommendations was the immediate admission of 100,000 Jews into Palestine. Now Mr. Bevin has the gall to state that they will not do so. His gratuitous insult to the city of New York will not be forgotten by the Members of the House who represent that city. I call this to your attention because before long we will have up for consideration the matter of a loan to Great Britain. I wonder, and I think we should all wonder, whether we can take the word of a government that they will repay this loan when they have broken their promise in this instance, and have done so before. The only way that the labor government now in power in Great Britain can convince the people of the United States of their good intentions, is to immediately demand the resignation of Bevin.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. WOODHOUSE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include certain statistics on the Anglo-American agreement.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mrs. DOUGLAS of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and to include an article on security for railroad workers and other items.

Mr. SABATH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech delivered by the Rt. Rev. Bernard J. Sheil, D. D., auxiliary bishop of Chicago, to a veterans' organization a few days ago in Des Moines, Iowa.

Mr. KLEIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include copy of a resolution.

INSULIN

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, there are about 1,000,000 people in the United States who today are suffering from a disease called diabetes. A great majority of these people must use insulin if they are to be about their business or, indeed, be able to live.

The production of insulin, which comes from the pancreas of the animal, has been greatly curtailed because the livestock that is being slaughtered goes into the black market. The black-market operator does not save the offals of the animal. The pancreas and other organs are not saved. The large packing houses of Chicago, Omaha, and Kansas City have been killing very few cattle. These packing plants always save the pancreas, the liver, the thyroid, the pituitary, and the adrenals. These glands go to the institutions making drugs which are so essential to individuals suffering from not only diabetes, but several other diseases which demand the use of these extracts. I have checked carefully with several large hospitals and drug houses, and they tell me that their supply of insulin, liver extract, and thyroid is being depleted.

In my humble opinion, the OPA, with its rules and regulations that prevent the legitimate slaughterers and packing houses from killing the livestock is directly responsible for the shortage of the drugs needed by the individual who is ill. Unless the regulations are changed these patients suffering from diabetes may well prepare to meet their Creator because many of them cannot go on without the use of insulin. It is the most serious condition and should demand immediate attention by the Government agencies concerned.

DEMOCRACY VERSUS IMPERIALISM

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the requests of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, democracy versus imperialism; cents versus no cents. The United States with a population of 140,000,000 in an area of 3,750,000 square miles has a debt of $272,000,000,000. Compare that with the British Empire imperialists debt of $87,000,000,000, a population of 557,000,000 or more and an area of 14,000,000 square miles. Britain, and her colonies, has a monopoly on tin, nickel, asbestos, platinum, radium, uranium, diamonds, and so forth.

The question is this: Is little United States going to have to finance this great imperialistic nation? I say no. We have been Santa Claus to Great Britain long enough. You did it again, again, and again. Stop it now. Such propaganda as is going on now to get votes for this loan in my judgment is un-American. These people are working for the British and against the Americans. We are not allowed to give to a foreign country and then tax our people for the money without consent of our people. Let us be sensible, save America before we go into bankruptcy. It is high time we do it. Do it now. Save our country from going into bankruptcy and being wrecked. This may be the straw that will break the camel's back.

There was no objection.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

[Mr. CLASON addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

ADMISSION INTO THE UNITED STATES OF ALIEN FIANCÉES OR FIANCÉS OF MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for immediate consideration the bill (S. 2122) to facilitate the admission into the United States of the alien fiancées or fiancés of members of the armed forces of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. KLEIN. I believe the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] dissented. I cleared it with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], the ranking member of the committee.

Mr. MASON. I understood it was unanimous in the committee.

Mr. RANKIN. Is this a bill that has passed both the House and the Senate?

Mr. MASON. It has passed the Senate and been agreed to by the House committee.

Mr. RANKIN. What is the request? I could not understand the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asked unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table for immediate consideration.

Mr. RANKIN. I am going to reserve the right to object until I hear the amendments read. I am not exactly clear as to what they are trying to put over.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not trying to put anything over.

Mr. RANKIN. I realize that, but I would like to hear the amendments read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York to make a unanimous-consent request. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves the right to object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I will just object for the time being, until I can have an opportunity to look into it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I want the Members of this House to know that I am not a party and never will be a party to putting over anything on this House that is not open and aboveboard. I do not think it comes in proper spirit for any Member of this House to impugn another Member's motive, or to suggest an underhanded way of putting something over in the House. I resent the implication of such a suggestion.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have looked over the bill. I told the gentleman from New York I would withdraw my objection. But I want to answer the gentleman from Illinois. There has been too much of this opening up of the floodgates of immigration during this war and in these unsettled times. So far as I am concerned, from this day forward every bill that comes in here that tends to break down our immigration laws, or open the floodgates, is going to be carefully scrutinized, whether it suits the gentleman from Illinois or not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on or before July 1, 1947, the alien fiancée or fiancé of a citizen of the United States who is serving in, or who has been honorably discharged from, the armed forces of the United States during World War II may be admitted into the United States with a passport visa as a nonimmigrant temporary visitor for a period of 3 months (unless in exceptional circumstances such period is extended by the Attorney General) under the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 3 of the Immigration Act approved May 26, 1924, as amended (43 Stat. 154; 8 U. S. C. 203): Provided, That—

(a) the alien is not subject to exclusion from the United States under the immigration laws;

(b) the nonpreference portion of the quota to which the alien would be chargeable is exhausted at the time the alien applies for a visa;

(c) the administrative authorities find that the alien is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to a citizen of the United States who is serving in, or who has been honorably discharged from, the armed forces of the United States during World War II; and

(d) the administrative authorities find that the parties to the proposed marriage are able and intend to contract a valid marriage within the period for which the alien is submitted.

SEC. 3. In the event the marriage does not occur within the period for which the alien was admitted, the alien shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported at any time after entry in accordance with the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this act the period of World War II shall be considered as having started on September 1, 1939, and to have ended upon the formal conclusion thereof by a treaty of peace, or by the passage of a joint resolution of Congress, or by a proclamation by the President declaring an end to hostilities.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KLEIN:

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of State shall have authority to prescribe regulations for the administration of the provisions of this act which relate to the performance of functions by diplomatic or consular officers of the United States and he shall include in such regulations a requirement that the parties to a proposed marriage shall furnish satisfactory evidence to the American consular officer concerned, including sworn statements corroborated by other appropriate evidence showing that the parties have entered into a valid agreement to marry and are legally able and actually willing to conclude a valid marriage in the United States within a period of 3 months after the alien's arrival, or within such period as may be extended by the Attorney General.

"SEC. 4. The Attorney General shall have authority to prescribe regulations for the administration by the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the provisions of this act in connection with the arrival of the aliens concerned at ports of entry in the United States, and he shall include in such regulations a requirement that the prospective American citizen spouse of an alien covered by the provisions of this act shall furnish to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization a suitable bond, which shall be in an amount sufficient to cover the cost of the deportation of the alien concerned, and which shall be forfeited to the United States if and when the alien becomes deportable, or shall be canceled by the Commissioner upon receipt of satisfactory evidence that a valid marriage has been concluded, or that the alien has left the United States without expense to the said United States.

"SEC. 5. For the purposes of this act the period of World War II shall be considered as having started on September 1, 1939, and to have ended upon the formal conclusion thereof by a treaty of peace, or by the passage of a joint resolution of Congress, or by a proclamation by the President declaring an end to hostilities."

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain the provisions of the bill. I do not believe there is any objection to it.

This is the bill which the newspapers have called the Sweethearts bill. The bill provides that, until July 1, 1947, the fiancé or fiancée of a member of the armed forces or of one who has been honorably discharged from the armed forces, can come into this country as a nonquota immigrant visitor for a period of 3 months. That is for the purpose of getting married. If the marriage does not take place within 3 months, then the alien is to be deported.

The Senate passed the bill in that form. However, our committee has recommended two amendments containing certain safeguards. First, that the consul in the country from which the alien comes has the duty of deciding whether a bona fide engagement or betrothal actually exists, and a visa must be issued. The consul must be satisfied by affidavit that an engagement actually exists between the member of the armed forces and the person in that particular country.

The second amendment requires that a bond is to be posted either by the member of the armed services or the discharged soldier, so that if the marriage does not take place within the required 3 months and the person has to be deported, the deportation will not be at the expense of this Government. The bond that is posted is to cover all costs of deportation. If the marriage takes place within 3 months, the person can become a citizen of this country, and then the bond is refunded.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS. First of all, the Commissioner of Immigration must be satisfied the engagement existed?

Mr. KLEIN. It is the consul who must be satisfied. Naturally, the engagement cannot be by proxy. It must have been effectuated during the period when the soldier served in that particular country.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is that clear in the bill?

Mr. KLEIN. Yes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. May I ask another question? Certainly the committee would not send out a bill without some very definite idea of how many people were involved in this immigration. How many people will come into the United States under this bill?

Mr. KLEIN. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. The nearest we could come to that is that there are about 14,000. Let me say to the gentleman that this is mainly for those boys who served in Australia. You will recall that at the beginning, when the boys first went over there, there was an order that those boys could not get married. Many of them did get married. Others obeyed the orders of their commanding officers and did not get married. Those who did get married are now bringing their brides to this country at the expense of the Government. If we do not pass this bill, we will penalize those boys who obeyed their orders and who were forbidden to get married. They are mainly in Australia, and our understanding is there are about 14,000.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman from New York knows the tragedy of every postwar period in the number of divorces, the increase in divorces which take place as a result of war marriages. What will happen in a case like this, where these girls would come into this country and be married under the terms of this bill and then within a few months be divorced?

Mr. KLEIN. I could answer the gentleman this way: That that could happen under existing law. A person could come into this country on a visitor's visa by giving the legitimate excuse that he is only to stay here 3 months and will then return to his own country. What we are doing here is saying: "Stop kidding the Government. Are you coming over here to see somebody that you met on the other side and hope to get married? Come out and tell the consul the truth that that is the reason why you are coming here." Under existing law, they could come over as visitors and then get married to a boy in this country and thus be eligible for preexamination.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEIN. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Would this girl lose her Australian citizenship by marrying this American boy?

Mr. KLEIN. When she becomes an American citizen she would.

Mr. STEFAN. She then takes out naturalization papers?

Mr. KLEIN. That is correct.

Mr. STEFAN. But she does not immediately lose her citizenship?

Mr. KLEIN. Oh, no. She has to go through the same procedure of becoming a citizen, but she does not have to go back to the country from which she came in order to apply for citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. The Rules Committee by unanimous vote after the bill was explained granted a rule. I wish to congratulate the Immigration Committee and the gentleman from New York, as well as the gentleman from Illinois, upon strengthening this bill and adding provisions that were not embodied in the Senate bill. I think the House bill, as amended, will safeguard American interests. I congratulate the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEIN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Does this affect the fiancé of a Wac the same as it does the fiancée of a soldier?

Mr. KLEIN. It does.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEIN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Does this bill permit the marriage of our soldiers with aliens of countries with which we were at war?

Mr. KLEIN. Let me correct the gentleman. This bill does not permit marriage at all; it has nothing to do with marriage. All we are doing is saying that if there has been an absolute and genuine engagement the other party may come to this country. They do not have to get married, but if they do not they have to go back.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. In my State, for instance, white and Japanese cannot marry. Does this bill recognize such laws of the States?

Mr. KLEIN. This bill does not change existing law with reference to racial eligibility.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KLEIN. I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, after the date 1917, add the following: "as amended (39 Stat. 889–890; 54 Stat. 671–673; 56 Stat. 1044; 8 U. S. C. 155; 39 Stat. 890–891; 57 Stat. 511; 8 U. S. C. 156)" and on page 2 strike out line 25 and on page 3 strike out lines 1 to 5 inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 6279) and House Resolution 659 were laid on the table.

MILITARY COOPERATION OF THE AMERICAN STATES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 673, Rept. No. 2314) which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6326) to contribute to the effective maintenance of international peace and security pursuant to the objectives and principles of the United Nations, to provide for military cooperation of the American states in the light of their international undertakings, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 5876) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to extend and renew to Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co. for the term of 10 years a lease to Henry A. Scandrett, Walter J. Cummings, and George I. Haight, trustees of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co., of a tract of land in the United States Department of Agriculture Range Livestock Experiment Station, in the State of Montana, and for a right-of-way to said tract, for the removal of gravel and ballast material, executed under the authority of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1936.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is not the bill the gentleman spoke to me about the day before yesterday, is it?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. No.

Mr. SABATH. What does this propose to give to the railroad company?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It does not give them anything. It gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to renew a lease covering a gravel pit.

Mr. SABATH. I know that any request the gentleman makes for the consideration of a bill is always proper, but I was desirous of knowing a little about the purpose of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. It was introduced by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART]. It was reported from the House Committee on Agriculture with a favorable report and on recommendation by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to extend and renew to Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co. for a term of 10 years that certain lease to Henry A. Scandrett, Walter J. Cummings, and George I. Haight, trustees of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co., bearing date June 27, 1936, of a tract of land in the United States Department of Agriculture Range Livestock Experiment Station, in the State of Montana, containing an approximate area of 241.67 acres, and also a strip of land for a right-of-way to said tract, executed by the Secretary of Agriculture under the authority of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1936, upon the terms and conditions contained in said lease, or such other terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem proper; said renewal and extension to inure to the benefit of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co. (succcssor to said Henry A. Scandrett, Walter J. Cummings, and George I. Haight, trustees of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co.).

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 12, following the date "1936," strike out the balance of line 12, all of line 13, and all of line 14 through the word "proper"; and insert in lieu thereof the following: "upon the general terms and conditions now contained in said lease but with specific provision that lessee shall pay annually a royalty of 1 cent per cubic yard on all material removed from said tract and shall in addition remove from the tract and deliver in a stock pile annually, free of charge, such quantity of sand and gravel suitable for use upon the walks and roads of the experiment station as would be required by the Government officials in charge of the station, not to exceed 100 car loads per annum."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include in each a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the Resident Commissioner from the Philippines [Mr. ROMULO] is recognized for 1 hour.

FAREWELL ADDRESS OF GEN. CARLOS P. ROMULO, RESIDENT COMMISSIONER OF THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. ROMULO. Mr. Speaker, to say good-by is to die a little. For the last time I rise to address the Members of this House. I offer this valedictory in behalf of the long and honorable line of men who have served here as Resident Commissioners of the Philippines to the United States. This is our farewell spoken—our final ave. With the entry of our nation into its new status of independence, with the birth of the Republic of the Philippines, the voice of my people will no longer be heard in this historic Chamber.

For almost 2 years I have been one of you. I have learned to know many of you, not only as statesmen, but as close personal friends. It has been my privilege, on this floor, to watch the processes of democratic politics in the very bosom of American statecraft. As an insider who is nevertheless an outsider, I have seen something which it is possible that you yourselves have overlooked. It is this—in the heat of controversy, in the fervor of partisanship, in the bitterness of debate, you have inevitably demonstrated your faith in the ways of democracy. You have argued and debated, yes, and with spirit, but you have done so within the framework of democracy—within the fundamental recognition of human dignity—within the structure of human liberty.

What better example of this basic truth can I offer than your record on the problems of the Philippines? And what better moment can I choose than this my farewell?

I have reported to you from the foxholes of Bataan and from the grim, sodden battlefields of Leyte. I brought you word of the destruction that was Manila and the ordeal that was war in my homeland. I have told you, again and again, of how my people suffered—and still suffer—and of how, through their suffering, they remained faithful to America and to the principles for which Americans and Filipinos shall always stand.

Today I bring you another report, the only report that would be fitting to a valedictory. It is the report on what you yourselves have done.

You came to the Philippines by accident. After your ships of war had won their victory in the harbor of our greatest city you found that your Spanish foe had already been thrown into confusion by a Filipino revolt that had swept our land. We were a young and untried people in those early days, at the turn of the century. We were eager to strike out for ourselves, and certain that you would help us achieve our independence at once. But you did not. Instead, you stayed on in the Philippines. Your leaders uttered high-flown words to reassure us, although—let it be admitted between close friends looking back at the past—it seemed to us there was perhaps more than a little of imperialism, of colonialism, in your attitude.

And out of our bitterness, out of our disillusion, came the years of the insurrection. Your fathers and ours fought bitterly against one another. Both were engaged in a contest that should never have come to pass, and must never happen again. And the inevitable outcome of an unequal struggle was your final victory.

But with your victory came our resurrection. For, at this point, something happened which shall always be written in works of glory upon the record of American idealism. You launched a new, a dynamic, a revolutionary idea—an idea as bold and inspiring as the ideals of 1776 and 1789.

You told the world, by deed and not by word, that the imperialism of the past was dying. You marked the beginning of the twentieth century with an experiment in brotherhood that is still going on, and that has already paid rich dividends.

The idea was simple, as are all great truths. It was no more than this: That it is possible for a great and powerful nation to go into a weak and poor land, to help educate its people, to teach the ways of modern democracy, to nurture and encourage and assist, and in the end to set a date for independence. And then to keep that promise.

I put the idea into words, and it sounds, perhaps, more trite than inspiring. That is because you, being American, can afford to take it for granted. Ask the Filipino farmer why he took to the hills and harried the Japanese foe for three long years, and he will tell you of this idea, in his own simple way, and it will not sound trite. Ask the restless Indonesian what he thinks of the experiment in the Philippines and his answer will not be uninspired. Ask the man of Burma, or of Indochina, or the native of India, or visit the troubled lands of the Middle East, and you will learn more about the Philippines than most Americans will ever know.

To these people you have given hope. You have offered the knowledge that there is yet a way toward self-respect and liberty.

This hope, this promise, was largely the handiwork of the very body to whom I speak today.

It was the Congress of the United States that passed the Jones Act, which laid the foundation for our freedom. It was the Congress that provided for a voice from the Philippines on this very floor—for the line of distinguished delegates who have had the privilege of debate and of participation in all the activities of this legislative body, save only that of voting. This Chamber has echoed with the voice of the hidden aspirations of our people. Here, we have been privileged to battle for our cause, to bespeak your understanding, your cooperation, your help. Here, the fiery eloquence of our great patriot, Manuel L. Quezon, was given the right to enlist the sympathy and the support of the American people. Here, too, Ocampo and Legarda, Earnshaw and Guevara and Gabaldon, Osias and Paredes, Veyra and Yangco, Elizalde and Delgado, worked hard and labored faithfully for the best interests of the Filipino people. All honor to them and may their service to our country be enshrined in the hearts of two grateful nations—ours and your own. In serving America and the Philippines, they served and furthered the crusade of democracy.

In other parliaments, in other lands, there have been occasions when colonial spokesmen were offered the privilege of the floor. There were even times when Spain permitted representatives from the Philippines onto the floor of the Cortes. But where, in all our human history, has a colonial representative been given so equal a standing, so sure a security, so humane an understanding, as in this House?

There is another legislative body, in another land, which has become known as the Mother of Parliaments. Your Congress has earned for itself a different name, for it is the Mother of Republics.

The Republic of the Philippines was born in this room. It was conceived 11,000 miles away, in the minds of our Nation's heroes, our Rizals and Bonifacios and Mabinis. It gestated in an atmosphere of cooperation between Filipinos and Americans over the past 45 years. And it was born here, with the Philippine Independence Act, and with the provisions for the Constitution of the Philippines. When a few days from now, the Republic of the Philippines is established, the Members of this House may say to themselves, "Behold, the fruition of a great experiment! It has been successful, and it was this Congress that helped make it so."

On July 4 the association of the United States and the Philippines comes to an end—but in its end is its beginning. For this is the final chapter of book I, and on July 5 we begin the first chapter of book II. This is the moment toward which we all have worked for so long, and it is come at last. But brotherhood does not die when the younger brother reaches his maturity. It changes, it broadens, it deepens. That is what will happen between us.

There will be no more Philippine Commissioners to speak on this floor. Is there need for a Commissioner to remind you that we in the Philippines have tasted the wine of democracy and found it sweet? Is there need for an orator to spell out the meaning of our loyalty to you throughout the bitter war, from Bataan to Leyte to Manila? Is there need for words to tell you how deeply we appreciated your answer when we sounded our call for help after the war left us devasted and helpless?

Mr. Speaker, ours is the third largest English-speaking country in the world. Our children attend schools created on the American model, and their schoolbooks make them as familiar with George Washington and Abraham Lincoln and Franklin Delano Roosevelt as they are with Jose Rizal and Manuel L. Quezon. The smallest Filipino child knows from living experience what words like democracy, free speech, free press, really mean. If in the Philippines we apply them a little differently at times, that is because we have also learned from you that the rules must be elastic enough to cope with new problems and new conditions.

I have recalled the fact that we were loyal to you in the war, and that is true. But there is a greater truth behind that truth. We were loyal, in reality, to the ideas which we hold in common, to the ideas which shall make your country greater and which shall make ours great, as well. These are the ideas of liberty, of opportunity, of an ever-increasing good for an ever-greater number. These are imbedded in our national mind, in our national soul. The ceremony of independence in Manila will not erase them from our national spirit. It will only intensify them. We shall be closer to you than we have ever been.

There will be changes, of course. No longer will there be a commissioner here, but an ambassador will represent the Filipino people in Washington. In the councils of the nations, our voice will be heard as the independent voice of a people who know their own mind. You in America may ask, in these unsettled times, where we in the Philippines shall stand? And we answer, by your side! Not in slavish imitation, not because of pressure, but by profound conviction that we belong beside America. We believe in the same things that hold you inviolate—and free. We, too, have learned the truths by which free men must live.

We are the messengers of democratic opportunity, and we have transmitted the word of that freedom around the world. We—who are of the Orient—speak to the restless millions of the Orient, and we say to them:

"The age of empire is no more. Long ago—in the Philippines—we saw the start of its death pangs. Out of that death—for us—came the dream of freedom. We represent the new spirit of our age—the only spirit that can help you and can help the world. It is the spirit of democratic cooperation, of civil liberties, of education and health and opportunity for all, of progress without bloodshed, of equality before the law. We stand before the world—on July 4, 1946—as the living proof that this spirit is realistic, practical, workable.

"Take heart, oppressed ones of the Orient. Take heart, all of you of failing faith. Freedom is a thing for which you have a right to hope. It can be won. We, your brothers, have achieved it, and we have learned not bitterness but friendship toward the western world."

That is the Filipino message. It is the only message, Mr. Speaker, that can prevent a generation of misery and bloodshed throughout the world. The oppressed peoples of the earth are rising, and they must make their choice. They can listen to the siren song of another ideology, and if they do, the road ahead will be blocked by conflict. Or they can listen to the wise counsel of democratic opportunity, planted in American hearts, grown and matured in this chamber within the past half century.

Mr. Speaker, I have given you, in the familiar American phrase, a piece of my mind. But I cannot say farewell without giving you, at the same time, a piece of my heart. It is easier to put one's thoughts into words than one's feelings. I leave with you, therefore, a part of my heart—just as, in achieving independence, the 18,000,000 people of the Philippines leave a part of their great heart in the sacred trust of the people of the United States. It is the greatest gift that we can offer. Cherish it. It is the bond that makes us comrades—past—future—forever.

And now—farewell.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to the last speech made in this body by the distinguished gentleman, Mr. ROMULO, the Resident Commissioner of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, who has so ably represented his people and his Commonwealth in the House of the Congress of the United States. It is more than that. It is the last time any representative of the Philippines will speak in this body, as the Philippine Government becomes sovereign on July 4, 1946.

His speech and his leaving of this body is an historic event.

Mr. Speaker, the Philippine people by their ceaseless resistance to the Japanese during the dark hours which followed the fall of Bataan and Corregidor proved beyond words that their trust in the United States never wavered. The sovereignty of this Nation over the Philippine Islands never implied a covetousness for territory nor a desire to dominate a people against their will. The principles of justice in harmony with our traditions committed our Government by law to ultimate independence for the Philippines whenever there would be established by them a suitable government capable of maintaining independence among the nations of the world. That day and hour have arrived. On July 4, 1946, the United States withdraws its sovereignty.

We have kept faith with the Philippine people. They are now free.

The independent Philippine Republic will rejoin the family of nations with all fear of tyranny and barbarism and concomitant evil plans for slavery and exploitation in the Far East forever banished. Equality, freedom, and justice will once more be enjoyed by the people of the Philippines. Commercial intercourse with other nations will grow and flourish. Industry on the islands will raise its bruised head and with international cooperation bring to the new nation increased opportunity for the wealth, happiness, and security of all its citizens. The future is bright with the natural hopes and aspirations of a country which, having suffered immeasurably, finally reaches the realization of nationality—at peace. The United States of America will never forget the sacrifice and heroism of the people of the Philippines in the cause of democracy, and will remain a steadfast friend, ever willing and anxious to aid in the regeneration of our new sister nation.

While we are sorry for personal reasons to see our friend General ROMULO leave us, we are glad because his leaving is the result of America keeping its word by the granting of independence to the people and the Government of the Philippine Islands. His leaving is also tempered by the knowledge that he will be able, if his Government utilizes his services and his great capacities, to render service to his people and to a future decent world in a broader field.

I know that all of my colleagues join with me in expressing to General ROMULO our expressions of real friendship, our best wishes for the future of his government and his people, and to himself that God in His infinite wisdom will always guide and direct General ROMULO in his journey through life.

To have known General ROMULO and to have formed the friendship that exists between us is something I shall treasure through life.

FAREWELL TO GEN. CARLOS P. ROMULO

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed emotions that I have listened to the farewell message of the last Resident Commissioner of the Philippine Commonwealth to the United States, Brig. Gen. CARLOS P. ROMULO—my staunch personal friend during many critical years in the history of my country and an uncompromising defender of the Constitution of the United States.

It is with the greatest regret that the Members of the House of Representatives take leave of General ROMULO's wise counsel, his brilliant logic, his impassioned eloquence in behalf of the people whom he so ably served. It is with the utmost satisfaction that we know that General ROMULO goes from us after the attainment of the long-sought goal of independence for the Philippines; a goal which carries with its realization the duties, the responsibilities, the rights and the challenges of nationhood.

My own feeling of comradeship with General ROMULO stems from my experience in living among the Filipino people and in our association in projects designed to improve the social, economic, and political condition of those courageous advocates of human dignity. My interest in telegraphy, in wireless, and in radio was matched by his interest which manifested itself in his service as managing director of the Far Eastern Broadcasting Corp. and as vice president of Philippine Press Wireless. Nor did General ROMULO stop with the use of these space-spanning methods to tell the story of the Filipino people to the American people. His well-written, carefully documented books and articles on American-Filipino relationships and his public appearances as a lecturer did much to clarify the aims of the Philippine Commonwealth in this country.

There were times when the magnitude of his vital tasks must have discouraged even so determined a patriot as the last Resident Commissioner. In these times General ROMULO was strengthened by the charm and quiet confidence of his devoted wife and by the hope for the future given to him by his children. No small part of his eventual triumph is due directly to this unfailing support.

General ROMULO has written a chapter of accomplishment in the book of his people. His work in the field of education is widely known and equally widely appreciated. His services in the legislative branch and the executive branch of the Philippine government have marked him as a statesman of the highest order. His military activities have won for him unstinted approval from his own countrymen and from General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, under whom he served as aide-de-camp. His achievements as Resident Commissioner, as member of the Filipino Rehabilitation Commission, as Philippine delegate to the 1945 Far Eastern Advisory Commission, and as chairman of the Philippine delegation to the United Nations Conference on International Organization at San Francisco have been masterpieces of diplomacy.

We know General ROMULO. We are aware of what he has done. It is indeed encouraging to find our opinion backed up by that of the American people. His books and magazine articles have deservedly gained him friends, and the popular reception of his literary works has stimulated country-wide interest in the problems of the Filipino people. He won the coveted Pulitzer Prize in 1941 for "distinguished interpretative correspondence." He was the recipient of a doctor of laws degree from the great American Notre Dame University. These are not honors which are lightly given; and, once awarded, they stamp the one who has received them as a scholar and an artist of true merit.

General ROMULO's yesterdays represent the conquest of patriotic determination over adversity. His busy present is filled with plans to better serve his gallant people. We can be sure that his tomorrows will be devoted to furthering the progress of the Philippine nation.

The Members of the House of Representatives regret the loss of a great man. But, since it is necessary for him to go, we can reconcile ourselves that no man who serves the freedom of thought and action anywhere can ever be lost to this House, dedicated as it is to the preservation of our freedom under the Constitution.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks following the address of the Delegate from the Philippines, who just preceded me, because, having introduced the first resolution in this House for the independence and later the neutrality of the Philippine Islands, I would like to comment briefly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

OUR PLEDGE KEPT—AN INDEPENDENT PHILIPPINE REPUBLIC AN ACTUALITY

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the farewell address just delivered by Gen. CARLOS P. ROMULO, the Resident Commissioner of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, will go down in history as one of the most eloquent orations ever delivered on the floor of this House.

His plea for democracy, his pledge of loyalty to the United States at all times on behalf of the Filipino people, and his assurance of the maintenance in the Philippine Republic of a democratic form of government that will insure to the Filipinos freedom and liberty forever and without abridgment were stirring and satisfying. I am hopeful—nay, Mr. Speaker, I am certain—that the Filipino people will never break those pledges given by their great leader and able representative, General ROMULO, and will never swerve from the course of true democracy.

INTRODUCED RESOLUTION OF INDEPENDENCE

The attainment of full independence by the Philippine Republic on July 4 is especially gratifying to me because I introduced in the Sixty-second Congress the first resolution ever offered to grant full independence to the Philippine Islands, including a guaranty of their neutrality, and at this point I desire to insert the text of that resolution:

House Joint Resolution 78

(62d Cong., 1st sess., in the House of Representatives, April 27, 1911. Mr. SABATH introduced the following joint resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed.)

Joint resolution to secure the neutralization of the Philippine Islands

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he hereby is, instructed to take such steps as may be necessary to secure the adhesion of all maritime states interested therein in a declaration and international guaranty whereby the Philippine Islands and each of them shall be foreover neutralized and placed under the protection of the said powers. Whenever such neutralization shall have become effective the Government of the United States hereby pledges itself to cede its sovereignty in, to, and over said Philippine Islands to such body as the said maritime states shall have resolved on: Provided, That no such guaranty of neutralization shall become effective or binding on the United States until satisfactory arrangements have been made to reimburse the United States for the expenses and charges incurred or assumed by the United States since May 1898 in or on or about the Philippine Islands: And provided further, That no state guaranteeing said convention shall ever acquire, hold, grant, or exercise any exclusive or unilateral power, franchise or domination, authority or sway in or on or about said Philippine Islands. Said agreement shall provide for the policing of said Philippine Islands by an international force: Provided further, That any infraction of this resolution by any signatory power shall ipso facto rescind the adhesion hereto by the United States.

Even in those days, Mr. Speaker, I was fearful of Japanese aggression, and I thought that every effort should be made to insure the inviolable neutrality of the Philippine Islands by common agreement of the powers, guaranteed by them against force and treachery.

RANSOMED FROM GALLING SPANISH YOKE

At the time I introduced this resolution, our country was not as prosperous as it is now, nor was money as plentiful. Consequently, I deemed it to be no undue hardship on the Philippine Islands to agree to repay to the United States the ransom money we paid to Spain and other expenditures we had made directly benefiting the people of the Philippines.

However, as our Nation achieved a position of unassailable financial stability, naturally under Wilson, and its wealth increased; and as we recovered from the 1929 Hoover crash, so that we have become the richest and most prosperous and, in every way, the most liberal nation on earth, notwithstanding our tremendous public debt; I came to the inevitable conclusion that no condition of repayment of the Philippine purchase price should be involved, though I am sure, had not the Japanese ravished the islands and laid waste their wealth and resources, the Filipinos would have gladly assumed the payment of the price of ransom from 400 years under the galling Spanish yoke.

It was my privilege and my pleasure to know, to admire, and to cooperate with the late great patriot and leader, Manuel Quezon, first President of the Commonwealth of the Philippines, whose whole life and every effort was devoted to securing for his people that freedom and independence which he so highly valued.

It has been equally my pleasure and privilege to cooperate, with all my heart, with the other Delegates and Resident Commissioners who have, from time to time, sat with us here in the House of Representatives. There is none, whether now living or dead, who does not deserve tribute for the part he played; and to the living, and to all the people of the Philippine Islands, our Nation offers congratulations upon having reached the freedom and dignity of an independent, democratic Republic, for which they have valorously contended for so long, and for which they have sacrificed so terribly.

I cannot omit from this brief tribute reference to one who aided greatly in bringing home to the American people the aims, the hopes, the aspirations, of the Philippine people; who wrote many articles, and for some years even published a Filipino magazine ably expounding the cause of the Filipino people; a former Member of this House, Mr. Speaker, the late Honorable Claude Tavenner, of Illinois, who has, I regret to say, now passed away, as has the first President of the Commonwealth with whom he worked so closely.

In just 2 weeks, Mr. Speaker, the new Republic of the Philippines, the youngest edition to the family of nations, will rise in the Pacific; and our colleague, General ROMULO, will step from his office in the New House Office Building to an embassy. We salute him and the infant Republic he represents.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all other Members of the House may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I listened with special interest to the eloquent remarks of the Commissioner from the Philippine Islands, the Honorable CARLOS P. ROMULO, who has spoken the farewell of his position, for our gallant associates of the Pacific who are about to take their place as one of the free and independent nations of the world.

Special interest, Mr. Speaker, because before he became Commissioner I had heard of the brilliant Manila newspaper publisher and editor who had sounded the notes of international cooperation in the forum of Rotary. And also before he became Commissioner, when he first visited this country during the war, I heard him make a great, stirring appeal to the Army and Navy Club of this city.

He told how the people of the Philippines were fighting and looking for the coming of the American troops. I recall how he told of going up and down the lines with words of encouragement and confidence. "When would the Americans come?" He did not know "but soon—maybe tomorrow." Many tomorrows came and went before General MacArthur was able to return, but return he did, at the head of forces who wrote one of the most brilliant campaigns in all the history of warfare. And it was written, I am confident, in large part because of the cooperation the loyal Filipinos gave as our troops approached and as they fought their way back, in one surprise maneuver after another.

I have seen Manila since the Japs were driven out. I saw it last September, when it still bore the terrible scars of destruction. Manila was a beautiful city, one of the most beautiful in the world. The Filipinos could be bitter—it is to the credit of leaders like ROMULO that they have not been bitter but have accepted their sufferings as part of the price of freedom.

As I think back over the historic months of the past 2 years, I think how fortunate it is that ROMULO has been the spokesman for his people in the Congress of the United States. He has had courage and patience and courtesy in a rare combination.

One with less courage would never have asked for what he has asked at various times. One with less patience would never have persevered until he won his requests. One with less courtesy and tact would never have been successful.

General ROMULO leaves the House of Representatives where he has served so honorably and well in these epochal years with the respect, best wishes, and affection of all who here have served with him.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity in bidding farewell to one of the distinguished Members of the House of Representatives, Brig. Gen. CARLOS P. ROMULO, who has served with distinction as the Resident Commissioner of the Philippines during the latter part of the war. I am sure that I speak for all members of the Insular Affairs Committee when I say that our pleasant and helpful association and friendship with General ROMULO has been of worth-while and lasting benefit to both the Philippines and the United States. I feel sure that I speak for the Insular Affairs Committee and all the Members of this House when I extend to him my best wishes for happiness and success in his later endeavors.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to immediately follow the able and scholarly remarks by the delegate from the Philippines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to a wonderful message from the distinguished delegate from the Philippines. In the rather long service I have had in this body it has been my privilege to serve with many delegates from the Philippine Islands, but I know of none who has represented that brave people with greater fidelity and more effectively than has the distinguished delegate who just addressed us. Not only did General ROMULO render valuable service in the late war but I want to attest the very great contribution he has made the past few months in helping formulate and pass through both Houses of this Congress legislation that was necessary to the welfare of the Philippine Islands. That legislation will stand as an eternal monument to the distinguished delegate from the Philippines, General ROMULO.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to pay my respects to the distinguished delegate from the Philippine Islands, and similarly to pay my tribute and my compliments to the valiant, loyal, and great people of the Philippine Islands whose cause he so eloquently championed on so many occasions. I have known them. I have studied them and their problems for many years. I have tried in every respect to aid them. I want to say to the distinguished Delegate that his golden eloquence, wisdom, and presence in this Chamber will be missed very greatly. It will be my purpose at all times, whenever the question of the welfare of the Philippines is at stake, that be he here or in far-off Manila, my sentiments and my every energy will be brought into play in order to bring about justice. We must at all times strive to preserve and build the friendliest relations between both peoples.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have been inspired by the valediction of General ROMULO who has distinguished himself so brilliantly in the cause of freedom both on the field of battle in the late war and in his services on the floor of this House.

More than many others here, perhaps, I realize what the brave people of the Philippines had to go through during the war. I have seen wrecked Manila and I have seen Corregidor and Bataan where we provided so little in the way of strong modern defense. How MacArthur's and ROMULO's men held out so long against the Japs so superior in numbers and reinforced strength will never be so clear to me.

I think today of my old law classmate, Manuel Zamora, another hero of Bataan, who embraced me at the president's palace in Manila when we met last January. He was looking forward to July 4th and its meaning of independence for his native Commonwealth. May I say to him and his comrades through General ROMULO the Mother of Republics will stand by the new and friendly republic in the Pacific which did not fail her in its greatest trial.

I cannot help but feel that book II in the history of both our peoples will be an even greater contribution to the cause of human understanding and peace than the glorious chapters already written in book I to which General ROMULO has alluded.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I believe I reflect the sentiments of all of us here today when I say that I was deeply touched by the farewell remarks of our friend and colleague, Brig. Gen. CARLOS

P. ROMULO. Farewells are always sad occasions, but this one is brightened by the circumstances under which it occurs. It represents a historic milestone in Philippine-American relations because it marks the birth of a new republic. In saying good-by to our esteemed friend we, at the same time, extend a welcoming hand to a new member of the family of nations.

It is not necessary to put into words the admiration that we in this House feel for General ROMULO. We have shown it by the standing ovations we have repeatedly given him whenever he has used the privilege of the floor.

We demonstrated it here today during his inspiring farewell address.

We demonstrated it a few weeks ago when we overwhelmingly approved the Philippine Trade Act of 1946 and the Philippine Rehabilitation Act of 1946 after his forceful speeches advocating their passage.

We demonstrated it when we unanimously passed the Philippine naturalization bill; when we adopted without discussion the bill releasing $71,000,000 to the Philippine Commonwealth; when we approved the bill authorizing the Export-Import Bank to extend its operations to the Philippines; and when we passed the military assistance bill.

We have heard his pleas for the Filipino veterans, and I am sure action will be taken to do them justice.

These and other notable measures have been approved by the House at the behest of the Resident Commissioner.

It is only natural that General ROMULO should have our esteem and admiration. In his writings and utterances he has ably espoused the Filipino cause and has proven himself to be a worthy spokesman for the Filipino people. He has always expressed an unwavering faith in America. He has been an ambassador of good will and has done much to promote closer understanding and friendship between America and the Philippines.

General ROMULO, as much as any man alive today, represents the courage and heroism of our brave Filipino allies in the late war. He fought with us at Bataan, Corregidor, and Leyte, was wounded in action, and was several times decorated by General Wainwright and General MacArthur.

The words which describe another great general and founder of a Republic might well be used to salute this departing colleague:

First in peace, first in war, and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6335) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman who will be the chairman of the House conferees if he is going to insist on a reduction in the amount of the bill as sent to the House by the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that Members of this House can only judge the future by the past. At no time during the past several years have the House conferees accepted all or even a majority of the Senate amendments.

Mr. RICH. If the conferees are going to accept the amendments placed on the Interior bill in the other body, then I think they ought to bring the matter here for the House to vote on. Can we expect the amount of the bill to be cut?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman knows and the Members of the House conferees on the Interior bill know in the past we have never failed to do our utmost for the Nation's taxpayers. The House conferees always recognize that this is a conference where neither side can always have its way. I can assure my good friend from Pennsylvania that the House conferees will always be fair—and by that I mean not only fair to the taxpayers, but also fair to every agency of the Government.

Mr. RICH. The Members of the other body should do some worrying over cutting down these expenses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, KIRWAN, NORRELL, GORE, JONES, JENSEN, and DWORSHAK.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6837) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes. Pending that motion I would like to see if we can come to some agreement with reference to the division of time.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Suppose we let the general debate run along for a time and see what requests there are for time. I am anxious to finish the bill as soon as possible.

Mr. KERR. That is agreeable to us. I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be allowed to run for the time being, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H. R. 6837, making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Mr. THOMASON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] is recognized.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee charged with the responsibility to hear and determine the justifications for appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, has discharged its responsibility, has reported its findings and recommendations to the full Committee on Appropriations, and having received approval there is now ready to submit its findings and conclusions to the House of Representatives for further determination.

Since the reporting of this annual bill in the last session of the Congress the committee has been saddened by the loss of one of its distinguished members, the Honorable J. Buell Snyder, who served as chairman of this particular subcommittee longer than any other Member since the creation of the committee. We have missed him in our deliberations, and shall continue to miss his guidance and counsel. To the other members of the committee I am personally grateful for their willingness and spirit of cooperativeness in our efforts to properly interpret and analyze the justifications submitted, and I want to emphasize how well they have demonstrated their individual responsibilities and relieved the chairman to a very large extent in an effort to ascertain the facts relative to each item. It is a pleasure to pay tribute to the manner and efficiency of their individual efforts to secure a proper solution of each problem that arose.

There has been the fullest cooperation on the part of every member of our subcommittee and our endeavor to recommend a bill to the House which is adequate in every respect to care for and develop a peacetime defense, and which will protect our cherished traditions and demonstrate to all mankind our faith in freedom and the rights of all under our flag to personal liberty and those attainments in life which will glorify our God and best exemplify man's destiny.

In behalf of our committee I express our deep appreciation of the service rendered us by Maj. Gen. George J. Richards, Col. R. S. Moore, and Lt. Col. Donald N. Zirkle, representatives of our War Department. Their services and their advice have been the touchstone upon which we base many of our recommendations.

We are indeed fortunate in having assigned to us, as executive secretary, Robert E. Lambert, an intellectual, painstaking public official; he is accurate, patient, and thoroughly familiar with the work of our committee and the duties it undertakes to perform.

Forty-two appropriation items appear in this bill. Of that number, after full and careful consideration, 20 items remained unchanged, that is, the committee was of the opinion that the amount requested to conduct the activities under the 20 items had been justified and approved the amounts requested. Twenty-one of the remaining items were reduced, the amount of the reduction depending upon the evidence presented as analyzed by different members of the committee. In only one instance did the committee increase the amount presented in the Budget request, that being for the Atomic Service. As to the 21 items in which reductions were made, and as to the 20 items in which no reductions or changes were made, it is possible that not one of such items has the full endorsement of each member, but upon the record and the facts submitted to the committee, the action represents the cooperative and combined judgment of the entire membership of the committee.

As to the item for the Atomic Service, the program submitted to the committee represented that $200,000,000 was necessary for the continuation of the project through fiscal year 1947. General Eisenhower and General Groves testified that while such amount would cover the operating expenses for the coming fiscal year it would not provide sufficient funds to cover the negotiation of certain operating contracts which must be consummated during the last half of the fiscal year to insure next year's operations. They stated that an additional $197,000,000 would be required for this purpose and suggested contract authorizations in this additional amount as one means of meeting the situation. It is to be emphasized that while these operating contracts must be let during fiscal year 1947, actual expenditures under such contracts would not be made until fiscal year 1948. Considering the tremendous magnitude and scope of this project and its potentialities as an instrument of defense and welfare to mankind, the committee decided to rely upon the advice and counsel of the above-named witnesses and increase the item of appropriation to $375,000,000, which, it is believed, will enable continuation of all necessary contracts into fiscal year 1948. Due to accounting and administration technicalities a cash appropriation is considered preferable to contract authorizations.

I beg the Committee to indulge me for a few minutes to give you a summary of our Army achievements in World War II. It is history which can never be forgotten as long as nations revere valor, sacrifice, and unselfishness, and it is matchless in the record of all human history.

For the first time in 5 years presentation of the annual appropriation bill for the Military Establishment finds our armed forces completely victorious over every enemy of the United States. Accordingly, it appears appropriate to review at this time the great events leading to our victory over Italy, Germany, and Japan, and their satellites, and to touch briefly on the financial support which this House voted for the support of the war.

July 1, 1941, found America at peace, but it was an uneasy peace. The fall of France in six tragic weeks of the spring of 1940 had shaken our country from its lethargy; and passage of the Selective Service Act had afforded our armed services the first opportunity to initiate preparation for the storm which our leaders foresaw as inevitable. America, after her indifference of the 1920's and '30's, at last was mustering her strength for the struggle ahead. At the same time, an increase in the annual appropriation from $8,480,594,407 for fiscal year 1941 to $76,779,697,125 for fiscal year 1942 provided the matériel for the gathering armies.

The blow was not long in coming. We will never forget the shock of December 7, 1941; nor will we forget the spirit with which our people rose to meet the challenge which the Axis Nations had thrust upon us. The skill and wisdom with which the framework of a mighty Army had been built by Gen. George C. Marshall, our great wartime Chief of Staff, in the preceding 18 months became apparent as our vast military machine began to take form.

There were dark days to be endured, however, until our strength could make itself felt. The Nazi U-boats were not long in executing their carefully laid plans to ravage our shipping off the Atlantic coast. In the Pacific, the hordes of Japan, equally well prepared, were overrunning a vast empire, opposed only by the gallant but pitifully inadequate forces under Gen. Douglas MacArthur and Gen. Jonathan Wainwright.

But 1942 was not to be a year of unrelieved retreat. On April 18 of that year, B-25's flew from the decks of the gallant carrier Hornet under the command of General Doolittle, and demonstrated to the denizens of Tokyo that they would never again be immune from the arm of righteous vengeance. Our marines came to grips with the enemy on Guadalcanal, in an action which ended the threat against our long life line to Australia. General MacArthur, in the first of the masterful strokes which were to characterize his return to the Philippines, elected to challenge, with the handful of Australians and Americans under his command, the Japanese hold on New Guinea which was threatening the very existence of Australia. Finally, on November 7 of that year, a mighty armada under Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower landed in north Africa the vanguard of the forces which were to break forever Hitler's grip on two continents. At home, great camps were springing up all over America, where our citizens were being trained for the grim tasks ahead. And our industrial might had been diverted from its peacetime pursuits to the gigantic task of providing the matériel of war—not only for ourselves, but for our allies all over the world.

The year 1943 was a year of worldwide transition to the offensive, as our gathering strength was brought to bear and our forces began their relentless march. On May 11, the Africa Korps surrendered in Tunisia, and we were free to mount the operation which was to end the reign of the evil man who had first been Hitler's mentor and later his dupe—Mussolini, inventor of fascism, and whose lust for territory and power brought on World War II. Our shattering offensive against Sicily in July was the blow which ended his tottering regime, and our first lodgment on the Continent of Europe on September 3 was followed 5 days later by the unconditional surrender of Italy. The first of the aggressor nations had reached the inevitable end of its criminal adventure.

This year also saw the beginning of our great air offensive against Hitler's fortress Europe. On January 27, United States bombers of the Eighth Air Force made the first of the daylight precision attacks which were to bring utter devastation to the "1,000-year Reich." On August 1, in one of the most heroic air actions of the war, 175 United States Army Air Force Liberators bombed the great oil refineries of Ploesti, Rumania, from tree-top height, to deal a devastating blow to the vitals of the Nazi panzer divisions.

Meanwhile, in the Southwest Pacific, General MacArthur had started his long drive to Tokyo. In February 1943, the Sixth United States Army was activated under Gen. Walter Krueger, who had served for more than 40 years in every grade from private to general. With the Sixth Army as his spearhead, General MacArthur started his drive up the New Guinea coast, and soon great American bases and airdromes were rising in areas which had been overrun in the Japanese onrush of 1942. This year also saw the beginning of the final doom of the U-boat, as our Air Forces and Navy combined with American inventive genius to reduce the toll of these underseas assassins by 60 percent. In Italy, General Clark's Fifth Army was continuing its relentless drive up the peninsula which Hitler had turned into a battlefield to complete the ruin of that hapless people which Mussolini had begun.

In the Central Pacific, forces under Admiral Nimitz, in bloody battles, captured Makin and Tarawa, in the Gilbert group, to initiate the second arm of a gigantic pincers movement against Japan.

Huge appropriations supported these efforts. For fiscal year 1943, the Congress appropriated $75,188,911,703 for the Military Establishment. For fiscal year 1944, $74,211,249,961 was provided.

Nineteen hundred and forty-four was the year of decision. Our Air Forces in Great Britain had now reached a peak of devastating power, which enabled them, in one daylight raid early in March, for example, to rain 360,000 bombs on Berlin. Our mighty air armadas were bringing utter devastation to the Nazi industrial machine with pinpoint bombing tactics for which General Arnold had held out against all opposition; and on these same islands General Eisenhower was gathering the mightiest army of liberation which the world has ever seen. Finally the appointed hour arrived. On June 6, a date that will live forever in history, our forces landed in Normandy and came to final grips with Hitler's hordes. The vaunted German West Wall fell before the irresistible rush of our sea, air, and land forces, welded together into a mighty team by the genius of General Eisenhower. The fighting was bitter for 2 months; but our field armies, under the inspired leadership of Gen. Omar Bradley, finally surged from the beachheads in a drive which liberated Paris on August 25 and moved forward onto the soil of Germany by fall. In support of this drive, the southern group of armies, under General Devers, invaded southern France and inflicted great losses of men and matériel on the Germans.

Meanwhile, across the world, General MacArthur was approaching the fulfillment of the vow which he had made on leaving Corregidor. In April, relying for the first time for initial air support on carrier-based aviation alone, he captured Hollandia, in Dutch New Guinea, in a brilliant operation, and broke the back of Japanese power on that island. Thereafter, nothing remained but the mopping up of miserable isolated Jap garrisons and preparation for the final thrust into the Philippines.

On October 19, General MacArthur, at the head of his forces, landed on Leyte, in a move which took the Jap General Yamashita, "the Tiger of Malaya," entirely by surprise. It was a fitting culmination to a campaign which will be studied as long as military history survives. The Jap elected to pour his resources into Leyte, but was annihilated. The year's end found General MacArthur firmly lodged on that island and poised for the knock-out blow against Japanese power in the Philippines.

In the Central Pacific, the year saw a continuation of a space-devouring amphibious offensive designed to place our B–29's in a position to strike the death blow at Japan. Eniwetok and Kwajalein fell to amphibious assaults in February; and after bitter fighting in June and July, Guam, Saipan, and Tinian, in the Marianas, came into our hands. The end was indeed drawing near for the planners of the attack against Pearl Harbor.

One final offensive blow remained within the Germans' capabilities before the year's end. On December 16 an attack through the Ardennes Forest, mounted under the cover of severe winter weather, initiated a bitter 10-day fight which has come to be known as the Battle of the Bulge. The blow was a severe one, but the tenacious stand of the Fourth and Twenty-eighth Divisions, and of the One Hundred and First Airborne Division at Bastogne, blunted the German spearhead, and with clearing weather our Air Forces turned the German venture into a slaughter. It was their last offensive of the war.

Nineteen hundred and forty-five, the year of victory, opened with General MacArthur's overwhelming blow against the Japanese forces on the main island of Luzon. Our forces drove rapidly to Manila, utterly crushing the enemy's forces and liberating our citizens who had spent more than 3 years in the concentration camps on that island. The way was now clear to mount the final offensive against the heart of the Empire itself.

In Europe, General Eisenhower again assumed the offensive, and, on March 7, the dramatic seizure of the great Ludendorf Bridge at Remagen on the Rhine River gave him his opportunity to pour our armies into the heart of the Reich. On April 25 came the link-up with the Russians at Torgau on the Elbe River, as pocket after pocket of hopelessly isolated Germans threw down their arms. Finally, on May 7, at General Eisenhower's headquarters in Rheims, our European war ended with Germany's unconditional surrender.

The appropriation for fiscal year 1945 reflected the partial ending of hostilities, with a reduction to $48,200,828,399.

Immediately a great flow of men and materials started for the Pacific, where two mighty amphibious operations against Kyushu and Honshu, the principal home islands of Japan, were in preparation. A combined Army and Marine force had landed on Okinawa on April 1. After the bitterest fighting of the Japanese war, the island was finally captured. The great airdromes hurriedly built there permitted our Air Forces to range over the Japanese Empire at will. Together with the Philippines, it would be used as a base for the forces redeployed from Europe. But while these preparations went forward without cessation, the B–29's were increasing the power of the blows which were relentlessly laying the cities of Japan in ashes. The sands were fast running out for the dreamers of the greater East Asia coprosperity sphere.

The earth-shaking impact of the atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki finished the work which the fire bombs had begun. On August 15 hostilities were officially suspended and on September 2 the most destructive war in history came to a victorious end on the deck of the U. S. S. Missouri in Tokyo Bay. It was the great privilege of General MacArthur to sign the surrender document as supreme commander for the Allied Powers, and of Admiral Nimitz as representative of the United States. Together these two magnificent leaders had encompassed the downfall of the oriental aggressor; together they were placing the final seal of doom on the mad dreams of the last of the unholy triumvirate which called themselves the Axis; and, as a last fitting touch, by their side stood General Wainwright, to witness the great victory for the cause for which he had fought so well and endured so much. In his person were symbolized the valor, the suffering, and the final triumph of his country.

For the period July 1, 1941, to June 30, 1946, a total of $214,249,156,450 was appropriated by the Congress to furnish our Army with every item it required to accomplish these great victories; $33-345,182,833 of this total appropriation has been or will be rescinded during this fiscal year since VJ-day.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, first I want to express my appreciation to the chairman as well as to the members of my subcommittee on both sides for the many courtesies they have extended to me as the ranking minority member of that committee. This is the tenth annual War Department appropriation bill which I have helped to draft and assist in steering through the House. There never has been a time, Mr. Chairman, during those 10 years when questions were decided on a political basis; and that is as it should be.

I want to express particularly my appreciation to my kind and splendid chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR], for the many courtesies he has shown to me personally. He is an able chairman and is doing a splendid job.

I was not satisfied, Mr. Chairman, with the bill. I felt that the bill could have been cut a great deal more than it was. As we went along marking up the bill in executive session I went along with each item with the understanding that I would approve that item if the bill did not contain a transferability clause. I have opposed time and again on the floor of this House the insertion in these bills of clauses permitting the War Department or any other department to transfer funds from one bureau or one department to another, in that way creating lump-sum appropriations and using those appropriations in many cases for purposes for which neither the committee nor the Members of the House intended them to be used. There may have been some excuse for the transferability clause during the war. If there was, that excuse ceases to exist now.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is based upon the assumption that we will have an Army which starts out on July 1, 1946, with 1,550,000 men. On July 1, 1947, they are to have 1,070,000 men. The average number of men in the Army during the year for whom rations, clothing, pay, and other expenditures will have to be furnished is 1,279,000. We know exactly the number of men we are going to have and where they are going.

The War Department told us exactly how many men were going to be in each theater of operations, how many in the European theater of operations, how many in the Pacific theater, and how many in the United States, so we know how many are going to have overseas pay.

There has never been a time during the 10 years I have been on this committee, and I dare say there never has been a time in the history of the War Department, when there was more complete information available as to how many men we were going to have and the amount of money required to provide for those men. We gave them the exact amount they asked for, for the number of men they told us they were going to have.

There is absolutely no need for a transferability clause. The transferability clause will give the War Department the right to transfer funds from one purpose to another. For instance, if the average number of men should happen to be reduced 10 percent, there would be 10 percent of the $7,000,000,000 that they could play with, and that is wrong. If, on the other hand the transferability clause is not in the bill—and it is on that condition that I went along because I feel personally that these amounts for rations, clothing, and other items are too high—if the transferability clause is not in the bill, if those items are too high, if there is too much money in here for rations, for clothing, and for pay or if they are not going to have the number of men they said they are going to have, then the amount the bill contains in excess of such requirements will revert to the United States Treasury, and that is as it should be. If they should happen to run short; if the cost of rations should increase or if the cost of clothing should increase; they can come before the Deficiency Committee of this House for a deficiency appropriation. All I am asking for now, and all I have asked for in the past, is that the War Department and every other department come before some congressional committee and justify every dollar they are spending. Without the ability to transfer funds from one branch of the service to another you will find money revert to the Treasury that would otherwise be transferred and spent.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to be here when the conference report on this bill comes up, as I expect to go to the Pacific as a congressional observer in the Bikini atom bomb test. I am depending on this House to stand by me and by our committee in maintaining the position we have taken on this transfer clause.

Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss briefly a number of items. The chairman has discussed the bill completely. The report is complete. I want to discuss first the question of the money that has been turned over to UNRRA; and, second, the money spent for occupation requirements. Third, I want to discuss Tripler General Hospital, where the War Department without congressional authority is building a $33,000,000 hospital in Hawaii. Then I want to talk about the atomic bomb. I will have some recommendations to make.

Mr. Chairman, the War Department declared $327,000,000 worth of foodstuffs as surplus. Under the law, when the War Department declares this food surplus, while they have the responsibility of guarding it and warehousing it, the control and disposition of that food is under the Agriculture Department. The Department of Agriculture sold to UNRRA this $327,000,000 worth of food for $138,000,000. The budget of UNRRA was distributed to the several participating nations and each nation was told how much money that nation was to furnish. The United States share is about 80 percent of the total UNRRA money. In other words, they said to the United States, "Here is your share." They said, "Here is England's share and here is France's share and here is the share of each of the other nations." When we have met that financial responsibility in terms of dollars we have complied with our obligations. I am going to put the complete information in the RECORD. In my judgment, this foodstuff which cost us $327,000,000 is worth at least $300,000,000, and could have been sold in this country for $300,000,000 through the regular channels of trade, allowing for the handling charges. But when they turn over these foodstuffs worth $300,000,000 to UNRRA for $138,000,000, or for $162,000,000 less than it is actually worth, the Department of Agriculture in effect is increasing without congressional authority the amount of our contribution to UNRRA by $162,000,000.

UNRRA is supposed to furnish supplies only to Allied Nations or liberated nations. It does not include occupied nations. Austria was an occupied nation—it was occupied by the United States and Russia. I understand that Russia has not made any contribution to UNRRA. We are contributing around 80 percent. As an enemy country, which Austria was, Russia had to take care of the people in her occupied zone 100 percent, and we had to take care of the people in our zone 100 percent. By changing the word "occupied" to the word "liberated," they threw upon UNRRA the responsibility of furnishing all the help and all the food for all of occupied Austria and thus took the responsibility off Russia's shoulders. We therefore furnished 80 percent of the food for Austria; 80 percent for the Russian-occupier area and 80 percent for the area occupied by us. Now, that is absolutely unfair.

Let us see what was contained in this $327,000,000 worth of foodstuffs. The Army bought only the very best food. There was turned over to UNRRA, through the Department of Agriculture, $168,000,000 in rations. Of those, 35,000,000 were C rations; 24,000,000 K rations, which of course were special rations. The remainder were 10-in-1 rations, which contained food in gallon cans, the finest food in the world. We turned over to them 227,000,000 pounds of meat; 152,000,000 pounds of peanut butter, apple butter, marmalade, jams, stabilized butter. Nearly 200,000,000 pounds of fruit juices. All of this was turned over for the first $125,000,000. There was more. There was $14,000,000 worth of candy. The testimony shows that the Department of Agriculture turned over to UNRRA $244,000,000 worth of supplies for $100,000,000. I asked the War Department, "Is that all?" They said, "No. We turned over another $56,000,000 for $26,000,000." I asked again, "Is that all?" "Yes." Finally, when I called them on the phone, they had turned over still another $26,000,000 worth for $13,000,000.

I am willing to pay our share of the feeding of those countries, occupied and others, but I want the other nations to do their share. It is an absolute injustice to the American taxpayer to turn over food worth $300,000,000 to UNRRA for $138,000,000. It is unfair to put that additional burden of $162,000,000 on the United States. We should have received credit for the entire amount. I wonder what other nation would have turned over food at that price. Indeed, I am beginning to think Mr. Chairman, that the old gentleman with the beard called Uncle Sam should actually be called "Uncle Sap."

Now, I want to talk to you about the Tripler Hospital at Honolulu. Some of you may remember that I made several speeches on this floor opposing the building of the Pentagon Building. We started out with $35,000,000 and ended up with $86,000,000, including $16,000,000 for roads and bridges. While the average office building is supposed to contain 80 percent office space and 20 percent for corridors and halls, the Pentagon has only 56 percent floor space and 44 percent devoted to corridors, closets, driveways, and so forth. While I was talking about this Pentagon Building, the War Department started another Pentagon hospital without governmental authority, over on a big hill at Honolulu. I did not know anything about it until last August when my subcommittee made that trip around the world and we came to Hawaii. Here on a hill in Honolulu were standing the walls for a tremendous 1,500-bed hospital. I began to ask questions, where they got the authority, and I got nowhere. I got that information when the War Department appeared before our subcommittee. The War Department went to the chairman of my subcommittee, the ranking Republican and one other Democrat. Then they went to the chairman of the subcommittee in the other body and on the statement of these three men began very quietly to build this hospital.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Do I understand the gentleman is trying to leave the impression that on the approval of individual members of the subcommittee they started this hospital?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I understand that the gentleman from South

Dakota was contacted but did not approve the hospital.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is correct. The proposition as informally mentioned to me was that the War Department had two hospital problems, one to meet a temporary condition of taking care of the wounded in the Pacific; the other to build a permanent general hospital for convalescents. The party who discussed the matter with me gave me the impression that he had already talked with other members of the subcommittee. But I told him that in my judgment provision should be made to meet the immediate situation to take care of the war wounded but that during the war was not the time to start the construction of a permanent general hospital in Hawaii. I felt that a hospital of that type should be built in peacetime when there was not such a heavy demand for materials, and moreover that probably it should be located in the United States; that is, in the mainland rather than in the Pacific.

During the time we were in the Pacific, to which the gentleman has referred, I made it a point to ask different members of the armed forces there, particularly boys who were at some hospital, whether they preferred to be hospitalized in Hawaii or in the States; and, without exception, officers and enlisted men said that when it came to convalescence they would prefer to be hospitalized in the States. This bears out the conclusion I had reached that a general hospital, a permanent hospital, should be located in the States. But to get back to the question of actual approval for Tripler Hospital, no contact was made with me beyond what I have stated. My impression was that only the temporary hospital would be started at that time. Of course I was only one member of the subcommittee and a majority could have felt otherwise. At least I did not approve what was done and was as astonished as the gentleman from Michigan when we saw what was under way at Honolulu.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I understood that; and as I referred to it I said that they contacted the ranking Republican member and two members on the other side of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am among those in the House who have commended—and I am glad to commend again—the gentleman for his very excellent work with respect to unauthorized as well as excessive expenditures, and I wish to ask the gentleman this question: Under the law, before property that has been declared surplus by a governmental agency can be acquired by another governmental agency that agency must obtain appropriations and pay for the surplus property. Prior to that law, which was recently passed, the War Department had transferred, and probably the Navy Department too, to one another, millions of dollars' worth of property without being reimbursed. My question is this: Are there any funds in this bill that directly or indirectly would be available to the War Department to purchase property that had been declared surplus by another agency of the Government, either the Navy Department or some other agency, including, for instance, the Chamberlain Hotel at Old Point Comfort?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. The War Department does a great deal of purchasing with a revolving fund for the Navy for which the Army is reimbursed. The War Department can, of course, purchase surplus property from another agency, and we encourage them to do so if it is property which they require.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I appreciate the gentleman's statement. I have no desire to interrupt him, but is there now any fund in the pending bill that would enable the War Department to purchase the Chamberlain Hotel?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. No.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That has been declared surplus by the Navy Department.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I shall cover that in a minute.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Did the committee intend to include any funds for that purpose; that is, for the purchase of that hotel or any other hotel?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I certainly did not.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KERR. The gentleman referred to an agreement that the chairman of the subcommittee had.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. That was not the present chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman is referring to two Members who are not members of the subcommittee now?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Yes. The two members of the subcommittee on the Democratic side I referred to are not now Members of the House.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MANASCO. I would like to inquire about this Chamberlain Hotel. The gentleman says the Army purchased this with a revolving fund?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. No. I said that the Army had a revolving fund with which they could purchase quartermaster supplies for the Navy, to be reimbursed by the Navy. They have done a great deal of buying jointly with the Navy.

Mr. MANASCO. That does not mean the purchase of land or buildings?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. No.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman know that the Comptroller General has submitted to the Congress an interim report with reference to the accounting of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and that in this report he says among other things:

> The company has not controlled its surplus property disposal activities.

That appears on page 3. That is just one of the things that directly relate to the War Department bill because there is involved here, as I understand it, $48,000,000 of funds for the operation of the Surplus Property Act. We should know something about that.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I am going to talk about that before I get through.

COST OF TRIPLER HOSPITAL

This Tripler Hospital is located at Honolulu, T. H. As now planned it contains 140 buildings. It originated back as far as 1943. The first estimate of the cost of this project was given in a letter from General Richardson, commander of the Pacific area, to General Marshall at $11,500,000. On August 31, 1944, a field progress report gives the cost of the entire project at $16,000,000. Still later, in August 1945, when this subcommittee was in Hawaii, they gave us the cost at $24,000,000. The actual cost we are now informed will be approximately $33,000,000, although they still carry the $16,000,000 figure on their field progress reports. The engineers furnished the following summary of the cost as of today:

Total cost of project	$32,948,800
Less transportation	1,450,000
Less free issue items included in total cost	1,633,000
Less total free issue and transportation	3,083,000
Total cash outlay required	29,865,800
Obligated to date	16,000,000

MAIN HOSPITAL

The main hospital was estimated on August 31, 1944, to cost $7,640,000. The actual cost or present estimate will be $14,350,000. The boilerhouse and incinerator was estimated at $40,000. It will actually cost $444,700. The laundry was increased from $125,000 to $356,000. The motor pool, fire station, warehouse, and shops cost increased from $375,000 to $1,204,000. Nurses' quarters were jumped from $504,000 to $1,298,700 while the post exchange was increased $200,000 to $506,900. The theater was increased from $75,000 to $216,000. The chapel was increased from $75,000 to $153,000. Roads, streets, parking areas, and drainage was increased from $370,000 to $870,000. The water supply was increased from $160,000 to $437,000; sewers not including disposal plant from $105,000 to $383,000; outside electrical equipment from $253,000 to $446,100. Steam distribution was increased from $21,000 to $241,900, with an item of $1,450,000 added on for transportation. Landscaping from $90,000 to $349,800. The project also contains $153,000 for tennis courts.

NURSES AND ENLISTED MEN'S QUARTERS

It is interesting to note that while the quarters for 153 officer nurses were increased from 78,000 square feet of space to 119,000, at the same time the space allotted for 1,017 enlisted men was decreased from 160,000 square feet to 117,000. In other words, while the Doolittle committee was studying and making a report on the Army caste system, the Army itself was changing construction plans at Tripler Hospital and gave 153 officer nurses 2,000 more square feet than they gave 1,017 enlisted men.

BACHELOR OFFICERS' QUARTERS AND OFFICERS' CLUB

A beautiful illustration of ultra-extravagance was the proposed construction of bachelor officers' quarters and officers' mess. They expect to provide quarters for 12 bachelor officers out of a total of 99 officers. The report of August 1944 gives this item as $120,000, the actual cost is going to be $488,300. The original proposal provided for a building containing 15,000 square feet. This was increased still under the name of bachelor officers' quarters and officers' mess from 15,000 square feet to 33,000 square feet.

I called General Bragdon's attention to the fact that out of 99 officers, 87 were to be furnished with married officers' quarters and only 12 for bachelor officers' quarters; that undoubtedly these married men would eat at home, and asked why it required 33,000 square feet for an officers' mess for 12 bachelor officers. I finally asked him for and received the break-down. He admitted finally that this was not a bachelor officers' quarters and officers' mess but was actually an officers' club for 153 nurses and 99 officers, and here is the break-down for this officers' club, which is going to cost $488,300:

Five thousand square feet are for basement, including lockers and storage.

Seven thousand six hundred and fifty square feet are for bachelor officers' quarters proper, including quarters for 12 resident and 5 transient officers.

Twelve thousand square feet is for a mess hall for officers, kitchen, and lounge.

Two thousand square feet is for lobbies and halls.

Six thousand five hundred feet for open porches on which they can sit and watch the beautiful Hawaiian sunset over the harbor.

We start out with a bachelor officers' quarters and mess for $120,000 and end up with an officers' club for nearly a half a million dollars at the expense of the taxpayers.

GYMNASIUM

We start with $120,000 for a gymnasium and end up with $344,900 for a gymnasium and $100,100 for a gymnasium swimming pool, or a total of $445,000. It is rather difficult to understand why a swimming pool should cost just $100 more than $100,000 and a gymnasium just $100 less than $345,000, unless it is to get a $1.98 bargain idea into the reader's mind.

OFFICERS' QUARTERS

The project provides for $1,958,300 for 87 company and field officers' quarters at $22,500 each, this sum being increased from $1,161,000. It provides for $739,900 for 46 noncommissioned officers' quarters at $16,000 each. The item for officers' quarters was increased from $1,161,000 to $1,958,300 and will, if built, provide quarters for 87 field and company officers at a cost of $22,500 for each officer. It also contains an item for quarters for 46 noncommissioned officers. This item was increased from $353,000 to $739,900, or a cost of $16,000 for each noncommissioned officer. Not so bad for corporals and sergeants.

This project is just another illustration of what happens when you have lump-sum appropriations either direct or through a transferability clause. Let me remind the House of just a few instances. In 1940 the House appropriated $466,000,000 to build cantonments for the first 1,200,000 men who were trained and cantoned in World War I. The actual cost was $800,000,000. The Pentagon Building was estimated at $35,000,000. The actual cost was over $86,000,000 including $16,000,000 for roads and bridges. The testimony before our committee shows that the veterans' hospitals to be built by the Veterans' Administration were estimated to cost $331,000,000 a few months ago. Now we are told they will cost $772,000,000. These are just a few of the many items and show this policy has become general.

After a careful study of the whole situation I make the following recommendations:

First. That no lump-sum appropriations should hereafter be made.

Second. That no transferability clause should be contained in any bill. This clause enables the creation of lump sums.

Third. That no project should be started until architect's plans are completed and the cost is determined.

Fourth. That before any project is advertised for bids, complete architect's plans together with all information as to the cost be double-checked by the architect's office of the Procurement Division of the Treasury, with instructions to eliminate all nonessential items and to reduce the cost wherever it is possible by changing plans and by eliminating unnecessary extravagant features. Adequate funds should be furnished that office to do this work.

This should be done regardless as to whether it is the War Department, the Navy Department, Post Office Department, or Veterans' Administration which is doing the construction. I am satisfied that if this were done, we could save hundreds of millions of dollars. While there is a legitimate increase in construction costs of approximately 40 percent over 1939, a look at the past construction record will convince any fair-minded person that millions can be saved by the adoption of this policy. The President could save in my judgment several hundred million dollars by ordering the Procurement Division of the Treasury to double-check the Veterans' Administration building program before construction begins. After all the millions of veterans will have to pay for their share of waste.

In conclusion I want to emphasize the fact that the officers now in charge in the Office of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army from Lt. Gen. R. A. Wheeler on down are not responsible for the planning and construction of Tripler Hospital. When this work was being planned and the project carried on as far as it has been, General Wheeler was making an outstanding record, as commanding officer of the Asiatic theater, as were many of the other officers now on duty here with him.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Possibly somebody was made a little jealous by hearing of the admiral's swimming pool constructed over there. The gentleman will remember that we were told of an admiral's swimming pool that cost some outlandish figure—$80,000 runs in my mind.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. That is right.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Before the gentleman leaves the subject of the Tripler General Hospital, I hope he will make clear to the Committee that the subcommittee reporting this bill has stopped the program as to many of the items the gentleman has discussed and is allowing only limited funds for the completion of buildings already started.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. We are permitting them to complete the nurses' quarters and hospitals, the walls of which have been partially built. We have to finish them. We allowed the enlisted men's quarters and the laboratory and, over my protest and objection, allowed $200,000 for landscaping. The rest was cut out.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KERR. For the construction of this hospital not one dollar was appropriated by our committee.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. No. They got this money just as they got the Pentagon money, by transferring it out of the Engineers' Service fund. They have the money. There was no money appropriated for this. They could not have obtained it in the House. We are making them turn back the money, with these exceptions, into the Treasury.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. What is going to happen to the Pentagon Building; does the gentleman know?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Ask me something easy.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have observed the gentleman for many years now in the great and effective efforts he has made to bring the facts to the Congress. It grieves me that these recommendations have not been followed. I wish to commend the gentleman for the suggestion he has now made. I wish also to inquire if there is a clear provision in the bill before us which will prevent a repetition of the conditions of which the gentleman complains.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. So far as this particular project is concerned, yes, we can control it. But as the bill now stands they cannot do anything unless we go back to the transferability clause and provide a lump-sum appropriation. If we go back to that, I just do not know what is going to happen. The subcommittee took the transfer clause out before.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I thought there was a provision in this bill which took away this power of transfer.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. We took the transfer clause out of this bill. Last year, Mr. Chairman, I made a motion in my committee cutting it from 20 percent to 10 percent. I made a motion in the House cutting it from 10 percent to 5 percent. When it got over to the other body they put it back to 10 percent. That is the way it stands until July 1, 1946.

I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Mrs. BOLTON. May I ask the gentleman as a matter of procedure whether all this planning of the War Department has to go through the Committee on Military Affairs for an O. K.?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. The Committee on Military Affairs authorizes the projects. The War Department had a blanket authority under Executive order. They had this blanket authority during wartime.

Mrs. BOLTON. That was during wartime?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Yes.

Mrs. BOLTON. Are we going to have a plan or program from the War Department giving us their plans and letting us know what they propose to do, and then will that have the O. K. of the committee?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. In the first place, they are not supposed to do any construction unless it is first authorized by the legislative Committee on Military Affairs. Before they can actually obtain the money after such authorization they have to come to us and justify the amount so that we would have the complete justification.

Mrs. BOLTON. Does not the Committee on Military Affairs bring any bill to the floor of the House for an O. K. from the floor?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I will let the Committee on Military Affairs answer that question.

Mrs. BOLTON. They do not do that. Of course, I am asking these questions of the gentleman in order to obtain information.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. They authorize the construction.

Mrs. BOLTON. But we do not authorize it. Does the Committee on Military Affairs authorize it?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Yes.

Mrs. BOLTON. But not the Congress?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. The authorization bill goes through the Congress just like any other bill that the House passes.

Mrs. BOLTON. Have we had an authorization for this?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. No; not for this. Not for this particular hospital.

I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Referring to the item of $3,275,000,000 of pay for the Army, does that take into consideration the increased pay that probably will be allowed under the Selective Service bill?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. No; there is no authority for us to include the amount of increased pay. Until the act has actually been signed, that will have to come through the Deficiency Committee.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. In answer to the gentlewoman from Ohio, the fact of the matter is, as I understand it, that the War Department claims they do have authority to build these hospitals, and they claim they had the authority to build this particular hospital in Hawaii. Is that not so? But they got the funds by representing to the committee that it was going to cost so much money and then under the transfer clause they used more money.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. They had no authority to build that specific hospital in Hawaii. Nobody knew they were building it. I knew nothing about it and I am on the Appropriations Committee. They had blanket authority during wartime to build these temporary buildings and hospitals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

If you will go through the arsenals as I have you will find, for instance, a building which was built during the War of 1812. Then there had been no construction until the Mexican War. Then you will find a building built during the Mexican War. Then there will be one built during the Civil War. Then there is one built during the Spanish-American War, and then you will find buildings built during World War I. They are using the wars to build up these permanent facilities, Mr. Chairman, and to obtain money for projects that Congress would refuse in peacetime.

I want to answer now this question which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] asked. Approximately $48,000,000 is scattered through this for the handling of surplus property which has been turned over to the War Assets Administration. The Navy Department bill took that money out. We left that money in but earmarked it so that it could only be used for that purpose. If it is not used for that purpose, it is going to be turned back into the Treasury.

Here is the situation as far as the Army is concerned: Here is a warehouse, for instance, that may be two-thirds full. Gradually that material is declared surplus. One-third of it may be War Assets Administration property and the other two-thirds may be Army. The same warehouse, the same guards, the same help will handle both the war surplus property and the Army. We felt the Army could handle it cheaper than by trying to transfer funds around. We were afraid that if we denied these funds, then the War Department would get additional funds from the War Assets Administration which they could play with as they saw fit. This way we know exactly how much they are spending and the purpose for which it will be spent.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. It has been rumored that the Army is planning to enlarge the Pentagon Building with a large tower in the center.

Mr. BENDER. I heard that also.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. About a year ago I wrote a letter to the Secretary of War. I told him I had been informed that the War Department was going to build a Tower of Babel in the center of the Pentagon Building and asked if it were true. The Secretary of War assured me that they were not going to build any Tower of Babel in the Pentagon Building.

Mr. REED of New York. Or any other kind of tower?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. No.

Now, before I close I want to appeal to the House again. I will not be here when the conference report on this bill comes up. I want this House to stand by me for just once on this transferability clause. They will tell you that they can transfer funds and cut appropriations. The fact of the matter is that when you put the transferability clause in there they will inflate those funds so that they will always have something to transfer. They have appropriated $26,000,000,000 more in 5 years for the Air Forces than the Air Forces could even obligate, and that is where they got a great deal of their lump-sum money to transfer. They are going to see that they have a surplus in some fund if you leave that clause in there. You will find that you will save millions of dollars if you take it out.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, since before the beginning of the war the annual appropriation bill presented by our subcommittee on War Department appropriations has been the largest bill considered by the Congress during each year. Expenditures by the Army during the war were necessarily very, very heavy. Today we present to you a bill which calls for an expenditure in fiscal year 1947 of about $7,000,000,000. Seven billion dollars, when compared to the peak wartime military appropriation bills, is not so large a sum, but when considered in the light of our national debt it is a very large sum of money indeed. We cannot apologize, however, for presenting this request to you. If we were willing to appropriate to the War Department something over $200,000,000,000 in order to win the war—which we did—we cannot now at the end of the war throw overboard our military power and might, and sacrifice the very things we fought for. We want to get something out of the heavy expenditure of money and out of the precious expenditure of life which was necessary in order that the war might be won. It is with that in mind that we present this bill to you. We must be on a firm military basis in this uncertain postwar period.

Yes; $7,000,000,000 is a large sum of money, but the very largest sum involved is for pay of the Army, an Army which will average about 1,280,000 men during the coming year. About one-third of the money is for pay of the Army, and then large sums are for subsistence, clothing, and equipage of one kind and another. So the committee has been as conservative as it dared be in presenting this bill.

What did we get out of this war? We preserved our liberties, we prevented the annihilation of our country and the destruction of our Government. We got a great deal out of the war from that standpoint, and it is up to us by constant diligence to retain the victory which was won. Dollars are going to be part of the price of retaining the fruits of victory.

I should like to discuss with you briefly some other things which we got out of the war, some things that are more or less of a material nature. True, they are the lesser things but I think they are things of which we should be aware. In other words, in this great effort toward victory we developed many things which are today serving America in peacetime and which will continue to serve America in the years to come and make more happy, and prosperous, and delightful the civilization in this fair land.

American inventive genius, under the spur of wartime necessity, produced innumerable things which will better the daily lives of us all.

AERONAUTICS

In the field of aeronautics, of course, the advances have been so unbelievable that to some degree they lose significance through sheer inability of our minds to comprehend them.

Here are a few startling facts which have grown commonplace almost overnight. In 1927 Charles Lindbergh made his nonstop flight to Paris. For nearly 14 years thereafter the total number of persons who crossed the Atlantic by air could almost be carried in a single 15-hour trip of one of our present-day transoceanic air liners. Yet, under the impetus of military necessity we literally moved armies overseas by air. In fact, only a few days ago the Air Forces Air Transport Command was commended by the President for carrying its four millionth transoceanic passenger. And even now, on a peacetime basis, it is flying 483 crossings a month to implement and expedite necessary military business.

Before the war our fighter airplanes were capable of top speeds of 300 miles an hour and our bombers had a range of about 1,000 miles. During the war and since, we have reached speeds of 500 miles an hour with our fighters and have carried 10 tons of military load for 4,000 miles. It is this progress in aircraft design and construction which has resulted in the mighty air liners which are such a familiar sight in the air over our Capitol today. And this trend of development is headed steeply upward at this time. The peak is not in sight, and we are reaching out into the realms of supersonic speeds, rocket propulsion, and many other fantasies, that even Jules Verne's wildest imagination could not have envisoned a few years ago.

To reach these goals, we must have new means of propulsion. With jet engines we are entering a field which also includes gas turbines and rocket motors, or combinations of all of them, in order to propel aircraft in these amazing speed ranges.

QUARTERMASTER ITEMS

Less spectacular, perhaps, but no less important and far-reaching are the contributions of the Quartermaster Corps. In view of the class of supplies in which this corps is interested, the bulk of research and development performed during the war will have an effect on civilian economy, either directly or indirectly.

In the field of clothing and textiles, fabric construction techniques have been greatly improved. The development of shrinkproof, mildewproof, and coated fabrics will also be widely accepted. Industry will find broad application for the windproof and pile fabrics developed by the Quartermaster Corps. Garments and fabrics have been developed which will greatly benefit the sportswear and rainwear industries. Research in the field of high-strength synthetic fibers have greatly improved nylon fabrics and have led to the development of body armor which will be of benefit to law-enforcement agents.

In the field of footgear, improved soles, superior adhesives, waterproof leathers, and leather preservatives have been developed and have great commercial possibilities.

Practically all subsistence research will benefit the civilian economy. For example, the storage life of canned foods and dairy products has been greatly lengthened through Quartermaster research. New items of Army rations are now being packaged for civilian consumption and food acceptance studies will assuredly result in the more economical use of our national agricultural resources.

The work performed in climatic research laboratories will be of real value to industry in whatever climate or under whatever conditions man is required to work and to be exposed to environmental stresses.

A large number of scientific and industrial reports covering the above subjects have been and are continuing to be released to industry through the Department of Commerce.

One of the most interesting men in the Army is Brig. Gen. G. F. Doriot. Throughout the war he has been one of the keymen in research in the Quartermaster Corps. He has done an outstanding job in seeking better food processes, better textiles, and better quartermaster items of all kinds for the men and women of our armed forces. His testimony begins on page 180 of the hearings.

MEDICAL

The Surgeon General of the Army, Gen. Norman T. Kirk, appeared before the committee in behalf of the Medical Department of the Army. Some of the facts presented were rather technical, but I think they will be found of interest.

It has been said that the war served as a vast clinic for the medical profession. The impetus given thereby to research, new developments, and improved applications and techniques, while primarily to conserve the fighting strength of the Army, will redound to the lasting benefit of the civilian population, not only of this Nation, but of countries around the globe.

The wonder drugs, penicillin and the sulfas, were of outstanding importance during the war and their success in the treatment of certain diseases and in allaying infections has been proven. Streptomycin, a new drug for the treatment of some infections resistant to penicillin and the sulfas, is still in the experimental stage but bids fair to be life-saving for certain conditions.

In the suppressive treatment of malaria, atabrine, a new synthetic drug, was substituted for quinine when the supply of the latter was cut off with the capture of the East Indies by Japan. A still later drug SN-7618, recently developed through research, gives evidence of being superior both to quinine and to atabrine.

Processes by which plasma was extracted from blood, dried to keep indefinitely, and shipped the world over for administration to the sick and injured were developed during the war. During the latter part of the war it was possible also to ship whole blood by airplanes, apparatus having been developed through research whereby the blood could be shipped and stored for as long as 30 days.

The public will benefit from the development during the war of special techniques in general surgery, improved methods and materials in plastic surgery, better artificial limbs resulting from improvement in mechanical design and in materials, and from the new acrylic artificial eye, fabricated from synthetic resin, which is superior to the glass eye and is practically unbreakable.

Among the important developments in the prevention of disease, the following may be mentioned: The development of a process of application of oil to floors and bedding to prevent the spread of airborne diseases; the virtual elimination, by vaccination and delousing processes, of typhus as a menace; vaccination whereby tetanus has been practically prevented in the Army; mass chest X-rays of inductees and of Army industrial workers whereby incipient tuberculosis may be discovered and early treatment initiated; the development of vaccines for dengue fever; the development of an influenza vaccine which has given very encouraging results; the development of a dysentery vaccine, now undergoing experimentation in tropical areas. An important adjunct in the preventive medicine program has been the use of DDT and its compounds, not only in the antimalaria campaign, but also in the elimination of other disease-carrying insects and pests.

Great advances were made during the war in the prevention and treatment of mental diseases. The results of the procedures followed and the special training of medical men by outstanding psychiatrists commissioned in the Army during the war offer great hope for improvement in the care of such patients in the future.

CHEMICAL WARFARE

The committee was provided with extensive information in regard to the effect of the wartime work of the Chemical Warfare Service on our civilian economy.

These discoveries will be helpful in the treatment of ptomaine poisoning, the treatment of an eye condition known as glaucoma, and in the treatment of cancer.

ORDNANCE

In addition to the development of weapons of war as such, the Ordnance Department during World War II was instrumental in the development of equipment, materials, and techniques which will essentially benefit the peacetime activities of the engineering and scientific professions and industry in general.

We were given information about a rocket that has been developed and successfully fired to an altitude of 230,000 feet. These rockets will be of great value to all agencies concerned with exploration of the areas at extreme altitudes and with more accurate weather forecasting. This information now being collected in the rocket program is providing scientific data on the phenomena in the ionosphere at heights never before attained by man. These data include information on temperatures, pressures, currents, bacteria, and gases above the stratosphere. The most far reaching of all may well be knowledge which will be secured on cosmic rays.

A number of wartime vehicles developed by the Ordnance Department and industry have been converted to full-time commercial usage.

On research sponsored by the Ordnance Department a very unique machine, the electronic numerical integrator and computer, has been developed. It is among the foremost scientific achievements of the war. It solves intricate problems a thousand times faster than any machine ever built. It opens up new fields of research, not only to the Ordnance Department but to all branches of science; and performs computations heretofore impossible by other methods and beyond the capacity of human beings.

Another installation of great importance is the Ordnance Department supersonic wind tunnel at Aberdeen Proving Ground. This tunnel is playing a major role in further development of our knowledge of ballistics at speeds many times that of sound. Through the use of scale models many valuable lessons have and will be learned on this subject which is of great importance to both the commercial and military future of this country.

Today we are procuring gun forgings more than double the strength of those of World War I. These improved steels are available for peacetime industry. Ordnance developed and placed into mass production during the war the centrifugal casting process for making cannon. The same process is now available for the production of commercial products.

Waterproofing of engines necessitated by amphibious operations has resulted in waterproof spark plugs and ignition systems which will have commercial application in automobiles, trucks, and busses.

Major contributions were made in the field of flexible cables, increasing the durability factor a hundredfold.

Constant research in the fields of materials, hydrodynamics, mechanical engineering, and chemistry helps assure the security of the Nation by providing the best weapons obtainable, and contributes much to the science and industry of the United States in days of peace.

If I had the time I could enumerate the various departments of the Army and discuss and recapitulate what appears in the hearings or information secured otherwise, with respect to these numerous discoveries and developments which are now available for peacetime America and for the world. But I will not have time to complete the remarks which I had intended to make.

ENGINEERS

The United States Army Engineers learned many lessons in the field of construction now being utilized in our peacetime programs which I will not take the time to discuss.

THE SIGNAL CORPS

The Signal Corps spent billions of dollars during the war and made a tremendous contribution in the saving of lives. If I have time before the conclusion of my remarks, I should like to make further reference to the great benefits which our civilian economy will derive from the wartime discoveries of the Signal Corps.

ATOMIC BOMB

As all of us know, the greatest and most spectacular scientific development that came out of the war was the atomic bomb. Possibly it is the most spectacular development of all time. This greatest military weapon was provided by this Congress, and more specifically by this committee, of which I am honored to be a member. It was not possible in 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945 for the members of this eight-man subcommittee to make known to the Congress the fact that funds were being appropriated for the atom bomb in the bills which we were then submitting to you. The scientists, the military people, labor, and industry cooperating together did the most marvelous job of all time under the leadership of that able commanding general of the project, Gen. Leslie Groves. He has done a great service for the Nation and the work which he has done is not only a monument to him but it is a monument to the inventive genius and the labor and the scientific skill of our country. We provided the money for this project by reason of the urgent necessity of the situation. When General Marshall came to us in our committee and said that our enemies were seeking to develop this weapon of death and destruction and were making some headway, we went forward with all possible speed.

I think some of us often wish that the atom bomb had never materialized. But the atom bomb was on its way and it was a question of whether America would have the weapon first or whether our enemies would have it first.

The people of our country should be very grateful for the fact that we outstripped other nations in achieving success in perfecting the atomic bomb. There is no doubt but that the bomb hastened victory and saved hundreds of thousands of American lives. In complimenting our committee for our work in connection with the atomic bomb project, Secretary Patterson said in part:

I asked for your confidence, which you never broke. * * * I want to express my deep appreciation of the way in which this committee cooperated on that project, and I think you may have the satisfaction of realizing that by doing that, you saved hundreds of thousands of lives of American soldiers.

The activity in the atom bomb project continues. It is now going along at a rate of about two-thirds the wartime basis. We recommend the appropriation of $200,000,000 recommended by the Budget, and we add to that the sum of $175,000,000 in order that this money may be used prior to the beginning of the fiscal year 1948 for contract obligations. The secrecy of the lethal weapon which has come to the world must be preserved for our people and for our Nation, and America must be in the forefront of all scientific development, including the atomic energy field and all other fields.

As all of you know, it was because of the foresight of this Congress in making available some $2,000,000,000 for research of one kind or another that we were able to win the war at a lesser cost of human lives. It was a question in many instances of spending money upon a slender thread of hope, but this committee has been willing to pour out the treasure of the people in order to try to safeguard the lives of the men of this Nation who were called upon to fight.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. MAHON. In this bill you will find that we recommend the appropriation of $281,500,000 for research and development. It is a pretty large sum, by far the largest sum for research and development that has ever been suggested in peacetime, but it is most essential that we remember the lessons that we learned during the war and that we keep abreast and out in front in all of these matters involving research and development.

The largest sum out of the appropriation for research and development is $185,000,000 for the Army Air Forces. If this committee has its will and its way, you will find that our Nation, which is already out in front in the field of aviation, will go forward, ahead of the parade, in order that we may be more secure in the future, and that no nation will dare challenge us at some future time. While we talk of money, airplanes, weapons, and research and development, we realize that military might alone cannot insure the peace and security of this Nation and the world. We realize that much more is required. But we do feel that while going along with the United Nations program and with the program of better understanding, cooperation, and good will throughout the world, we must go forward with our program of military preparation, hoping for the time to come when nations will lay down their arms and live in peace.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman has spoken about the appropriation for atomic research. I take it that the committee was perfectly satisfied in recommending this large appropriation that the military authorities were prepared to go ahead with their experimental work on atomic bombs and other atomic weapons, even though it has not been decided whether or not eventually the program will be turned over to some civilian agency.

Mr. MAHON. I realize there has been a conflict over what shall be done about the atomic energy program for the future. Frankly, I think if the McMahon bill becomes law in its present form we will come to regret our action in passing that legislation. I do hope we will not take out of the hands of the military all authority and power in matters involving atomic energy and atomic weapons. I hope the gentleman's committee will be able to present to us legislation which will safeguard the military interest of the Nation.

Mr. ELSTON. I am glad to have the gentleman's views on that because our committee has adopted an amendment which will make it mandatory that the armed forces be represented on the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. MAHON. When you turn anything over to a full-time commission you often have difficulty, it seems to me. Gen. Leslie Groves during the war, as the top man, was the driving force behind the project. Some one person must be responsible on a big task like the atomic energy program. Let him have a board of directors or commissioners or advisers, but let us have somebody who is responsible and accountable for the carrying on of this program.

Mr. ELSTON. I certainly agree with the gentleman.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand, the gentleman is the ranking Democratic member on the Subcommittee on Military Appropriations.

Mr. MAHON. Yes, I am.

Mr. WHITE. Can the gentleman tell me how much money is involved in the legislation now before the House? How much is being appropriated?

Mr. MAHON. The sum of money involved is shown in the report of the committee. It is substantially $7,000,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1946.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. WHITE. We are told by the press that this amount is far in excess of any other appropriation for peacetime military purposes.

Mr. MAHON. That is right.

Mr. WHITE. Now that so many of the enlisted personnel of the Army have been discharged, has any committee of the House or the gentleman's committee in particular, in making investigations as to these appropriations, made any investigation as to the excess number of officers still on the pay roll? We are told that the Army is top-heavy with officer personnel, that the men have been released but that the officers are still on the pay roll. Have you appropriated money for that, and have you made any investigation as to what the situation actually is?

Mr. MAHON. I thank the gentleman for his question. May I say that during the war I believed in the man who was Chief of Staff, Gen. George Marshall. He had a bigger job than any human being could possibly discharge in every detail and particular. He did a marvelous job for his country. At this time we have as Chief of Staff, Gen. Dwight Eisenhower. He appeared before the committee. He has appeared before numerous congressional committees. He is a top-flight American citizen and a military man who has no superior in the world today. We conferred with him and his many aides and assistants in regard to all these appropriations and we made reductions wherever we could make them.

Yes, this is the largest peacetime appropriation ever recommended to the Congress. But this is a most unusual time in the history of our country. We must vary our program with varying conditions. We not only have General Eisenhower as our Chief of Staff and adviser in matters military, but we have Gen. George Richards who has worked with this committee for years and who is head of the Budget Division. A more conscientious and able man in uniform I have not had the privilege to meet. We have had his unfailing assistance in our efforts to make reductions wherever we could. But if we are going to maintain an Army of 1,280,000 it is necessary for them to be paid, fed, and clothed. If we did nothing but feed, pay, and clothe those men, we would still have to appropriate a vast sum of money.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. MAHON. I have already taken up too much time of the committee.

Mr. WHITE. If the gentleman does not want to meet the issue, that is his responsibility. But it is an issue before the American people and I propose to investigate it. If you do not want to answer questions, then say so.

Mr. MAHON. I will be glad to answer any questions that I am able to answer.

Mr. WHITE. I want to ask the gentleman if it would not be a simple matter to compare the officer personnel before the war and the officer personnel since the war and arrive at some conclusion as to what should be the structure and organization of the Army and eliminate this excess, expensive officer personnel who are using the money of the taxpayers of this country?

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman may be sure that the members of the committee do not want a top-heavy officer personnel and we have striven in every way possible to cut the deadwood out of the War Department, whether it be in personnel or otherwise. If the gentleman will read the hearings, he can get very complete figures. I cannot give each figure at this time but they are available in the report and in the hearings.

Mr. WHITE. I asked the gentleman if any investigation was made in his committee of that situation. We are told by the press every day that there is a top-heavy personnel. The men are discharged and released, but the officers are still on the pay roll, and they are the highest priced part of the Army, using up the taxpayers' money.

Mr. MAHON. I do not have the figures before me, but our investigation revealed a drastic reduction of officer personnel.

Mr. WHITE. You have not made any investigation along these lines?

Mr. MAHON. Our investigation revealed a very drastic reduction in the officer personnel. I concur that there should not be a top-heavy officer personnel.

I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. I like the comment that the gentleman has made in tribute to the Army Air Force. I think he is quite right to say that we have leading this Air Force today in the person of General Spaatz one who knows the score.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; the gentleman is correct in his estimate of General Spaatz, the commanding general of the Army Air Forces. We are trying to help streamline the Army and make reductions wherever we can. In peace, as in war, we want a Military Establishment of which the people of this Nation can be proud—a Military Establishment which future would-be aggressors of the world would not dare to challenge.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Fifty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

AUDIT OF RFC WAR ACTIVITIES

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I think the calling of a quorum was not because I was about to make some remarks, but because someone thought there should be a larger attendance here during the consideration of a $7,000,000,000 bill.

The matter to which I shall address my first remarks, however, is a subject with which every Member of the House of Representatives will find himself concerned in the next few weeks. It is an interim report by the General Accounting Office on its attempt to audit the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, particularly as they dealt with production and procurement of war goods and the disposition of surplus war property.

These remarks are occasioned by a document which has appeared today, Document No. 674 of the House of Representatives, Seventy-ninth Congress, second session. I suggest that Members may want to take that number down because we are going to hear a great deal about it in the days to come. This document carries a report from the General Accounting Office and is transmitted by a letter from Lindsay Warren, the Comptroller General of the United States. During the consideration of the Government corporations appropriation bill the other day a Member of the House thought it in order to criticize the minority members of the subcommittee for bringing in a minority report on the bill then under consideration. When the House is fully aware of what is in this report from the Comptroller General they will wonder no longer why the minority members of the committee made the recommendations that they did.

Now I am going to read from the letter from Mr. Warren to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The letter is dated June 19, 1946.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: There is forwarded herewith copy of a communication dated June 17, from the Corporation Audits Division of the General Accounting Office to the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. This communication deals with matters being covered by an audit that the Corporation Audits Division is making of the affairs of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its subsidiaries and affiliates for the year ending June 30, 1945, under section 5 of the act of February 24, 1945.

Now, then, catch the significance of the following sentence and bear in mind that this is not the minority members of the Committee on Appropriations speaking, but here is the Comptroller General of the United States saying, and I quote:

Upon consideration of the intelligence disclosed by this communication it was decided that it was of such seriousness and moment that it should be transmitted to you as an interim report as well as taken up administratively with the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The audit is proceeding with the utmost intelligence and dispatch, but the conditions stated in the aforementioned communication render us unable to say when it will be completed and our ultimate report submitted.

Respectfully submitted.

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General.

Following Mr. Warren's letter of transmittal, there are 17 pages of a report in the nature of a letter from T. Coleman Andrews, Director of the Corporation Audits Division of the General Accounting Office to the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The letter is dated June 17, 1946. I shall not attempt to read it all, of course, but shall read a few highlights and comment thereon.

Mr. Andrews states that the Corporation Audits Division has been engaged for approximately 8 months in an examination of the organization, the operating and accounting methods and the financial statements of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. He states that under ordinary circumstances the work should be nearing completion but that circumstances encountered have made that impossible.

Indeed—

Mr. Andrews says—

it has been found that a satisfactory audit cannot be made and that no certification may be given of the financial statements of the companies at the close of June 1945. It is even doubtful that a satisfactory audit and certification of the statements of June 30, 1946, will be possible.

And then this General Accounting officer makes this astounding statement:

The RFC and its affiliated companies have not developed an adequate concept of the control of financial and operating responsibilities through accounting. * * * Some of the most important accounting records are so poorly devised * * * it is doubtful, from a management standpoint if any really useful purpose is served by their continued maintenance. * * *

Because of these conditions—

The report says—

the accounting records of the companies do not afford an adequate basis for turning out financial statements which would disclose fully the financial positions of the enterprises at any date or the results of their operations for any period.

Is it any wonder, then that the minority members of the Appropriations Subcommittee the other day, then ventured to raise some questions about the operations of this Government agency, this huge Government agency which has handled many billions of dollars of our wartime expenditures?

The General Accounting Office sums up its interim report by making eight specific charges on the inadequacy of the accounting methods of the RFC. I quote now from the report at page 3, top of the page:

Specific examples of the failure of accounting functions of the RFC are presented in the paragraphs immediately following:

1. The Company does not control the $7,000,000,000 investment in properties.

2. The Company does not control its $800,000,000 investment in inventories of the Defense Supplies Corporation, the Metals Reserve Company, and the United States Commercial Company.

3. The Company—

Meaning the RFC—

does not control its cash receipts.

4. The Company does not control rentals earned on its properties.

5. The Company does not control certain important liabilities.

6. The Company does not control recoveries due it on plant extensions built for utility companies.

7. The Company has not controlled its surplus property disposal activities; and

8. The Company has had no control over the activities of its affiliate, U. S. Commercial Company.

Then follow paragraphs discussing each of these eight points. Bear in mind, as I read on, that this is not the report nor the words of a minority member of the Committee on Appropriations or a minority Member of the House. They are the words of the General Accounting Office in a report submitted by the Comptroller General, Mr. Lindsay Warren.

Under the first head:

The Company does not control its $7,000,000,000 investment in properties. The balance sheet of Defense Plants Corporation as of June 30, 1945, reports that this subsidiary had invested an aggregate of approximately $7,000,000,000 in plant properties.

I might say parenthetically that a great deal of the money which has been appropriated to the War Department during the war has been linked with the operations of the Defense Plants Corporation, either by allocation of funds for expediting production to allied plants or contribution of tools to companies operating those plants of Defense Plants Corporation, or by payments for equipment produced by the companies operating those properties. So that this $7,000,000,000 which the General Accounting Office is unable to find control for relates directly to the appropriations for the War Department and the Navy and other defense activities. And that is why this report is of special interest when we are considering new appropriations for the War Department.

The report goes on:

The records supporting this aggregate are not designed readily to disclose how much of it is invested in any one project; they are intended instead to show, without important regard for location, the total cost of all land owned, the total cost of each class of buildings owned, the total cost of each of many classes of equipment, and the total amount of expense disbursements capitalized as part of the investment. No complete determination of the amounts actually invested in the individual plant projects has ever been made by the company, and no accurate determination has been possible under the accounting methods applied. The nearest approach to such a determination has been the occasional totaling of disbursements made, whether they were investments or expense disbursements, in order that it might be known that the aggregate amount authorized for expenditure on any project had not been exceeded.

That is, no separation has been made between expenditures for what would be called capital investments and operating expense. I read further:

This test has not taken the capitalized expense disbursements into account, because these are not deemed to be covered by the authorizations.

We became apprehensive of the effectiveness of the control exercised by Defense Plant Corporation over its plant properties early in our examination when it appeared to us that the company had no reliable way of knowing if the properties turned over by its lessees in the settlement of their accountability, were actually all of the properties which they should have turned over.

In other words, the General Accounting Office is saying that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is unable to tell with respect to this $7,000,000,000 investment in properties turned over to operating lessees, whether when the property has come back, the lessees or operators are turning back all of the property which should have been returned.

My interest in this proposition of auditing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other Government corporations by the General Accounting Office stemmed from a little thing which came to the attention of this Appropriations Subcommittee for the War Department when we were working on the civil functions bill a couple of years ago. It came to my attention that the General Accounting Office had reported in connection with the audit of the Panama Railroad that it was unable to make a complete audit because it had no way of reconciling the cash, because the cash which came in in some of the minor activities of the Panama Company, the operation of concessions and the like, was mingled with the cash received in the operation of the railroad and the hotel. Although apparently there had been a private audit made for the directors of the Panama Railroad, it was not of even date with the GAO audit of the Government's activities and necessary information to reconcile cash was not available to the General Accounting Office. So the General Accounting Office, in its examination and report at that time said something should be done so that they should have greater authority to make a complete audit and check the cash, and thereby reconcile the complete operations in Panama. Growing out of that this subcommittee recommended that a change be made and that the General Accounting Office be given authority to make a complete audit of our operations in the Canal Zone.

I recall the incident quite clearly because some of the officials in the Canal Zone felt our action was reflection on them. A change in governors had recently been made, and the new governor thought the action indicated we did not trust him. I remember saying to him or to his representatives that there was no connection between the change in governors and the new policy; but that I had been stung by the remark in the report of the General Accounting Office that all it could do in matters of this kind was to report the situation to the Congress and leave it to Congress to do something about recommendations made.

Well, in that instance, we did something about it—the subcommittee handling this appropriation bill for War Department activities did—we proposed that the General Accounting Office should make a complete audit and we proposed that certain recommendations on the operation of the Tivoli Hotel be carried out. And out of the whole incident, I, for one, became convinced of the importance of establishing a uniform system of audit and budget controls for the various corporations and business enterprises of the Government.

This conviction was increased by matters brought to light by the hard-working gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] in his inquiries on the independent offices appropriations for various Government corporations. That, as I recall, was in December of 1943 and January 1944.

About that time a distinguished Senator from Nebraska and a distinguished Senator from Virginia introduced in the other body a bill which came to be known as the Byrd-Butler bill, and eventually became the Government Corporation Control Act. Before that bill was acted upon, however, a little crisis arose, one of these minor political crises, you might say, within the administration when Henry Wallace was nominated as Secretary of the Department of Commerce in order to provide him with a place in the Cabinet. At that time the Federal Loan Agency, headed by Mr. Jesse Jones, was within the Department of Commerce. Rumor said that Mr. Wallace could not be confirmed to succeed Mr. Jones in both positions.

A bill was introduced which eventually became Public Law 4 of the first session of this Seventy-ninth Congress, the act of February 24, 1945, which is cited in the letter by the Comptroller General as the act under which this particular report which I am discussing was made. This bill was a forerunner of the Government Corporation Control Act. But it did not start out that way. It started out as S. 375, a bill to divorce the Federal Loan Agency from the Department of Commerce before Mr. Wallace was confirmed as Secretary. But in the Senate some important amendments were added to it. The first part of the bill, as I have said, provided for a divorcement of the Federal Loan Agency from the Secretary of Commerce. But there was added to it section 5 through three amendments which became known as the Byrd amendments, which established an audit for all governmental corporations by the General Accounting Office. These amendments were taken from the Byrd-Butler bill. While they were not the complete bill which we later adopted as the Government Corporations Act, they were the nub of it, and it was under this act of February 24, 1945, that this audit of the RFC was started, as cited in the Comptroller's letter, and has been going on for some 8 months.

If I seem somewhat familiar with this matter it is because during the discussion of that Wallace-RFC divorcement bill in the House on February 16, 1944, I called attention to the importance of these audits, and introduced a letter to me from the Comptroller General setting forth the list of Government corporations which the General Accounting Office would audit under the provisions in the bill, and further called attention to the fact that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] and I had introduced companion bills to the Byrd-Butler bill in the House, H. R. 2177 and H. R. 2051, respectively. A revised form of that bill became law, as has been stated, but it was under the short form in the bill which was passed to make it possible for Mr. Wallace to be confirmed as Secretary of Commerce, that the audit was undertaken that is the subject for this extraordinary report made to the House in the document which I have been discussing.

This report is of further importance to the committee in its consideration of this appropriation bill for the War Department because of the determination by the audit of certain matters about surplus war plants and property. I read again from the report at the middle of page 4:

1. The company has not yet ascertained for any one of its approximately 2,500 DPC plant projects that it has a reliable record which reports in identifiable detail the items of property comprising its investment. This accomplishment for all 2,500 projects, in order that all of the lessees concerned might be held fully accountable, is the principal objective of the program undertaken on January 5, 1946.

The General Accounting Office further says:

It is not possible to ascertain from the accounting records of the company which DPC properties had been declared surplus at June 30, 1945, or at any other date before or since.

In other words, under the accounting procedure which has been going on it has not been possible for the General Accounting Office as of June 30, 1945, or any other date before or since to determine what DPC properties had been declared surplus.

The report goes on further to say:

It is not possible to ascertain from the accounting records which DPC properties have been disposed of through any date. This has been the case for sometime but the impairment in control on this account became even greater in 1946 when the disposal responsibility was transferred to War Assets Corporation and later, completely out of the RFC group, to War Assets Administration.

There are some funds in this bill that have to do with the disposal of surplus war property as the Members know, and yet here we find the General Accounting Office saying that it has not been possible to determine from accounting records which Defense Plant Corporations have been disposed of through any date and that that has become even worse following the transfer to the War Assets Administration.

In addition the report says:

The records show large amounts of unidentified sales proceeds at all times. In at least one instance of this coming to our attention a very substantial quantity of equipment was scrapped without proper identification, and as to the project in which this condition occurred the company has obviously rendered itself incapable of ever making a satisfactory accounting.

Now, the Members have had their attention called at different times to the alleged scrapping of property which was known as war property in one form or another.

It now appears that one reason why it has not been possible to find out what was scrapped and what should be accounted for apparently is because the accounting methods employed simply have not preserved records so that there could be an identification of the details as of any given date.

Another interesting item in the comment by the General Accounting Office says:

By April 1946, the net amount of approximately $77,000,000 had been recovered by RFC in renegotiation settlements with contractors. This recovery reflects substantial reductions in recognition of the effect of the renegotiation settlements on the contractors' liabilities for income tax, the gross recovery having been more than $300,000,000.

In that connection I may say that during the hearings on this bill a letter was received which was placed in the printed hearings at page 1101 by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], reviewing savings to the Government under the renegotiation statute. It will be recalled by many Members that the renegotiation statute stemmed from an amendment which I offered to the Sixth Supplemental Defense appropriation bill in the spring of 1942.

Activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were not covered in the 1942 law, but inquiry in our hearings on the next bill for the War Department revealed that contracts for identical items at similar prices were renegotiated if straight War Department contracts but not if they were contracts of an RFC subsidiary. So, we extended renegotiation to apply to RFC activities on war contracts by an amendment which I offered to the War Department bill in the spring of 1943, I believe it was. And under that extension, the recovery was made cited in the Comptroller's report.

Incidentally, it may be of interest to the Members to know that the total recoveries by the Government under renegotiation were $9,556,372,000 as of May 3, 1946. The letter from Secretary Patterson, dated May 17, 1946, says:

WASHINGTON, May 17, 1946.

Hon. FRANCIS CASE,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CASE: This is in response to your request of May 9, 1946, for a recapitulation of the total estimated savings resulting from the renegotiation statutes.

The War Department Price Adjustment Board as of May 3, 1946, had completed renegotiation of cases in which excessive profits of $6,374,438,000 had been determined. As of that date the Navy and Treasury Departments, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Maritime Commission, and War Shipping Administration had completed cases involving excessive profits of $3,184,934,000. The total thus determined was therefore $9,556,372,000 as of May 3, 1946.

On the basis of the best available estimates, Federal income and excess-profits taxes would have recovered approximately 70 percent of excessive profits determined through statutory renegotiation, leaving an estimated net recovery from renegotiations conducted by the War Department of $1,911,431,000, and from all departments of $2,866,912,000.

In additions to the above, the Office of the Chief of Finance of the War Department reports contract-price reductions in War Department contracts in the amount of $3,255,508,000 as of March 31, 1946, and similar adjustments by other departments are known to be very large. Some of these reductions resulted directly from statutory renegotiation and others were brought about by the independent activities of contracting officers or through the coordinated action of contracting and renegotiation officers.

It should be noted that neither the refunds in renegotiation nor the price reductions on existing contracts include the amounts reflecting the lowering of prices on reorders and successive procurements. It is impossible to arrive at even an approximate estimate of the aggregate of such amounts, but it is known to be tremendous and in substantial measure has resulted from the influence exerted by the existence of the renegotiation statute and of the policies followed in its administration.

The renegotiation recoveries are after allowances of deduction for amortization of war facilities under certificate of necessity except to the extent that the refunds may be modified through the renegotiation rebate on recomputed amortization.

You early recognized the dangers inherent in unrestrained accumulations of profits on procurement for war, and you exercised farsighted leadership in fostering and maintaining the legislation to curb those accumulations. I am, therefore, certain that you must derive much satisfaction from the successful administration of the renegotiation laws which brought about not only the impressive monetary savings as noted, but also other results which in my opinion are even more consequential. Among these were stimulation of efficiency in industry, speeding up procurement and production of war matériel, combating inflationary tendencies inherent in a wartime economy, and protecting our American system of free enterprise against indictment that business has retained unconscionable and excessive profits out of its participation in the war effort. I believe the entire country will increasingly recognize the vital role renegotiation has had in the war period.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War.

One of the striking statements in the Comptroller's study of RFC accounting relates to plant extensions built for utility companies. At page 10, the letter from the General Accounting Office report states:

Defense Plant Corporation is the owner of certain of the utilities plant extension which it has constructed, and in these cases it has contracted to recover all or part of its investment through rate reductions based upon consumption at the DPC premises served, or upon other use of the facilities.

The practice has been for the utility companies to give effect to the rate reductions in the billing which they have rendered to the DPC lessees operating the plant. DPC has recovered its investment through remittances which the lessees have made along with the regular rental remittances.

Although the accounting methods employed by DPC have made a segregation of the investment recovery element from the rental income element of the lessees' remittances, the company has made no independent determination of what investment recoveries should have been accomplished.

In other words, the General Accounting Office is saying that the DPC has made no independent determination of what investment recoveries should be made on these plant extensions built for utility companies.

Then there is a very extensive comment on the general conclusion that the company has not controlled its surplus property disposal activities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman ten additional minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the General Accounting comment says:

The RFC and certain of its subsidiaries were surplus property disposal agencies from the day on which the surplus property disposal activity began until the close of business January 15, 1946. On January 16, 1946, War Assets Corporation, an RFC subsidiary, became a disposal agent in their place.

War Assets Corporation never really existed as a separate entity except insofar as the legalities of the matter were concerned. It had no employees of its own, it maintained no complete separate corporate accounting records, and its operations were conducted in every respect as merely an activity of the RFC. No determination of the status of the disposal activity was made on January 16, 1946, and the condition of the records, including the memorandum records maintained for the purpose of furnishing information to the administrative and sales personnel, was such as to preclude the making of any reliable subsequent determinations.

In other words, at the time RFC turned the handling of surplus property over to War Assets Corporation, there was no cut-off date on their accounting and the records were so kept that no subsequent determination could be made reliably.

The communication goes on to say:

At no time during the period from inception of the disposal activity to March 25, 1946, when War Assets Corporation was relieved of its responsibilities, did the RFC possess a reliable record, either in quantities or in dollars, of the properties and commodities which had been declared to it for disposal; nor did it develop at any time during this period, a controlled orderly system of operation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Am I to infer from what the gentleman said that these various companies did not keep inventories or keep inventories current as to the things they had and what they sold and what they manufactured and the money they had, and things like that?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The only way in which I can interpret this report is that the RFC subsidiaries or the RFC itself did not keep a proper inventory to differentiate between investment and operating expenditures, nor did it keep an inventory from which it may be possible to determine the properties which were turned over from RFC to the War Assets Corporation, or from the War Assets Corporation to War Assets Administration.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. When subsidiaries like this were organized by the RFC, was there not a provision that they must report to RFC what they did and how they did it and what they had on hand, and so forth?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am sure that I cannot answer that question, but let me read further. This report just came out today and I have not had an opportunity to go into the matter that far, but apparently the answer would be in the negative. Here is something that bears on the gentleman's question. I read from General Accounting Office letter at page 13:

It is our opinion, in the case of the surplus property disposal activity, that no satisfactory accounting could be made without practically the complete reconstruction of the accounting records. It is our further opinion that such a reconstruction could not be made with any assurance of accuracy, because of the omission on the part of the company to make important determinations at the dates on which the responsibilities changed hands.

I assume that that is an answer to the gentleman's question.

Now then, I hope that every Member of the House will get this House document and study it, because unquestionably it is epoch making in our attempt to achieve a better control over Government expenditures and over the expenditure of funds which the taxpayers of the country have to pay.

In the few minutes remaining I want to direct attention to a few of the other features of this bill. In the first place, I want to say that there is language in this bill which I think should be removed from the bill, and I shall at the proper time offer an amendment to that effect. That language occurs on page 57, section 4, where it says:

Appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year 1947 shall be available for carrying out—

Then I am skipping line 13—or carrying into effect the provisions of paragraph 8 of Executive Order 9630 of September 27, 1945.

That Executive order is the Executive order which transferred to the State Department the disposal of surplus war goods abroad. I am afraid that this language, if it remains in the bill, will in effect give to the State Department the right to tell the War Department what it must do with the funds appropriated for the War Department. I do not believe that language should remain in the bill. It is in there, I think, through a misunderstanding. I shall seek to remove that language at the appropriate time.

There is an item in the report on the bill to which I should like to direct attention, and that occurs on page 6. As has been remarked already, this bill carries $350,000,000 for government and relief in occupied territories. During the hearings on the bill, when General Echols was before us I asked him the current rate of expenditure for this purpose, and he gave the average monthly expenditures during the fiscal year 1946 as $30,000,000. That subsequently became the base on which the $350,000,000 was carried in this bill; in other words, 12 months at $30,000,000 a month would be $360,000,000. Because of savings which the committee believed could be made in administration and government of the occupied countries through greater use of the native people, the item was reduced to $350,000,000, which is a reduction of $150,000,000 from the request.

The report of the committee calls attention to the fact that favorable crop conditions in the occuplied areas during the current season should reduce the necessity for large and continued expenditures for the purchase of foodstuffs. That is true, but at the same time I think the record should be clear that it was not the intent of the committee that the reduction of $150,000,000 should be made at the expense of the food items proposed to be purchased for relief. We intended that the $150,000,000 reduction from the Budget estimate should be accomplished throughout the field of proposed expenditures, wherever they could be best made in the judgment of the War Department, and not confined to food.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. The gentleman will recall that the committee had particular reference to the reduction in overhead costs, such as administration.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes. I am glad the gentleman brought that out because, unfortunately, that is not mentioned in our report on the bill, but it certainly was the understanding of the committee. I think the picture should be clear that we expect a substantial part of this reduction to be accomplished in the administration of government in the occupied areas, and not have the entire $150,000,000 saved at the expense of the stomachs of the people who are starving. We hope they can raise more of their food each year, more this year than last and also, that they may increasingly take on the responsibility and cost of their local government. If the funds we have proposed should not be sufficient, a deficiency estimate can be considered in January.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am sure the Committee appreciates the contribution of the gentleman from South Dakota with respect to the report of the Comptroller General. I call attention to his suggestion that he is going to offer an amendment to strike from the bill a proposal whereby the State Department is to dispose of certain surplus property, rather than permit the War Department to sell it. In view of the criticism of the gentleman from Michigan a while ago as to the manner in which the War Department has handled the disposal of surplus property, does the gentleman think the War Department would do a much better job than the State Department in regard to it?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Opinions might differ on that but that is really not what is involved. There is now pending before the deficiency subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations an estimate for, I think, $150,000,000—I am not sure of the figure, but it is a large amount of money—for the State Department to handle this. I feel that they should get their money directly and not have the broad authority carried in the portion of the bill I have cited to tell the War Department how to expend its funds or to require that they be spent for a State Department activity.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. To explain the situation, the War Department did not handle the disposition of these foodstuffs. Under the law, where the War Department declares foodstuffs surplus, they go to the Department of Agriculture for disposition. It was the Department of Agriculture which turned over to UNRRA this $327,000,000 of foodstuffs for $138,000,000.

Mr. REES of Kansas. As I understand, there was a sort of manipulation or understanding between the two agencies.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. No, I would not say that. I want to be fair about the matter. The War Department was following the law. If there is any criticism, and I think there is, it should be directed to the Department of Agriculture for turning over this amount of food to UNRRA for $138,000,000, or less than half its actual value.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I recall now that the figure that is pending before the deficiency subcommittee for the State Department for handling the disposal of surplus goods through the Foreign Liquidation Commission is $120,000,000 rather than $150,000,000. But in view of that fact certainly the State Department should not have the broad authority to dip into the War Department appropriations we have made on a nontransferrable basis this year and tell the War Department how much it should expend in the liquidation of surplus property abroad under the jurisdiction of the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NORRELL].

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, first of all, may I say that at the time of the passing of our beloved chairman, Hon. J. Buell Snyder, this subcommittee sustained a great loss. Chairman Snyder was admired and respected by all of the members of this committee. His work as chairman of this subcommittee during the war will never be forgotten. Always the fine work of this committee during the war should stand as a great monument to the memory of Mr. Snyder, one of the numerous heroes who gave his life for his country during the terrible war just ended.

Our present chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina, Hon. JOHN H. KERR, is a very able and worthy successor. Judge KERR also has the respect and admiration of each member of this committee. He has conducted the hearings in a very able manner, and we believe that we are presenting today a proposed supply bill for the Military Establishment which will adequately and fairly cover the operation of our Army during the next fiscal year. I wish I had time to say something about the other members of the committee, especially the gentleman from Michigan, Congressman ENGEL, a very able and courageous member of the committee and ranking minority member thereof. I would like to say something about how we appreciate the fine, courteous, capable, and patriotic services of Maj. Gen. George J. Richards. I would also like to say in passing since this is the first peacetime bill to be presented to the Congress that the War Department is entitled, including all its officers and enlisted men, not only to the admiration of this committee, but to the admiration of the entire American people. They have brought us through—each one exerting his or her own effort—the greatest and most terrible struggle that civilization has ever witnessed. I am not defending the mistakes that have been made, but I want in passing to give my compliments to the GI who went into trenches and the front lines and who under the supervision of his officers caused the great victory to be achieved which we enjoyed. I would like, if I had the time, to say something about the great work among the civilians which was done during the war and which was necessary in order to back up our military forces. All have rendered a great service and all have done a great job from the least to the highest. Mistakes have been made everywhere, even by Members of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, it is a great pleasure and a privilege to have the opportunity of presenting for your consideration the Military Establishment appropriation bill for fiscal year 1947. The hearings on this bill have been of great interest to each member of the committee and we believe that we are presenting today a proposed authorization for the Military Establishment which will adequately and fairly cover the operations of our Army during the next fiscal year. In its consideration of this appropriation bill, the committee was privileged to discuss the many difficult problems which still face our military forces with the Honorable Robert P. Patterson, Secretary of War; Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, the Chief of Staff; Gen. Thomas T. Handy, the Deputy Chief of Staff; Gens. Carl Spaatz, Jacob Devers, and LeRoy Lutes, commanding generals of the Army Air, Ground, and Service Forces, respectively; Maj. Gen. George J. Richards, Budget Officer for the War Department; and the chiefs of each of the operating agencies and divisions of the War Department. Many of the men who appeared before our committee were the same men who led our Army to its glorious victories in Europe and in the Pacific. The printed record of these hearings covers some 1,183 pages and is filled with important facts covering the plans and programs of the Military Establishment for fiscal year 1947. The committee freely sought, and was given, the advice of our great military leaders and has given due consideration to their testimony in acting upon the proposed authorization.

Briefly stated, the tasks which confront the Army at the present time and which will continue through the oncoming fiscal year are: occupation, maintenance of lines of communication, operation of training and supply establishments in the United States, effective garrisoning of key points in our national security structure and the institution of research and development and other programs designed to keep our Nation ahead of all others in the field of national security.

SIZE OF THE INTERIM ARMY

From a peak wartime strength of approximately 8,300,000 individuals, it is contemplated that the Army will have been reduced to 1,550,000 by July 1, 1946, and will further decrease to 1,070,000 by July 1, 1947. The proposed authorization for fiscal year 1947 is based on an average strength of 1,279,000. The committee was informed that these terminal strengths were determined after manpower requirements as stated by the Army's field commanders had been carefully weighed and considered in the light of the policies and plans of the War Department. The committee has been assured that these figures indicate the minimum force necessary to accomplish the tasks ahead.

FUND REQUIREMENTS

The bill which we are presenting today proposes new authorizations to the Military Establishment totaling $7,091,034,700. The committee proposes several changes in the amounts as submitted to it. These changes are explained in our report. They do not affect the size of the Army upon which the estimates were based. The bill does not provide for the reappropriation of any amounts which may be in unobligated status on June 30, 1946. Any such funds will revert to the general fund of the Treasury. The proposed authorization for fiscal year 1947 is to be compared with estimated obligations during fiscal year 1946 of $19,963,055,064. A part of these funds relate to the atomic energy project and Government and relief in occupied areas. These two activities are not directly attributable to the Military Establishment although at the present time they are assigned to the War Department for accomplishment.

The details of the various programs which are planned for accomplishment by the use of the proposed authorization are fully covered by the printed record and the committee report. I will just briefly summarize these programs for your present information; but do recommend a study of the record for information on the various projects in which you may be individually interested.

ARMY AIR FORCES

The Air Forces' plan for fiscal year 1947 is designed to meet both the requirements of the moment and the long-term peacetime requirements of future security. It is designed around a force-in-being consisting principally of long-range bombers and fighters supported by all the other elements of a balanced force. Programs for research and development, for procurement of aircraft and special equipment needed to support our essential air industry, and for schools and training, have been incorporated to assure an air force qualified to meet any challenge.

The network of air transport routes is being reduced, and a reorganization of major command structures is being put into effect to increase efficiency and assure close cooperation and joint training with the other major services. The experiences of World War II showing the tremendous effectiveness of a closely knit air, land, and sea military team will be closely followed in achieving the maximum efficiency for the peacetime Air Force.

The Air Force fund requirements for fiscal year 1947 provide $368,701,400 for the procurement of 1,046 complete airplanes and $54,457,180 for all other procurement; that is, maintenance and operating supplies and equipment. Operating expenses, exclusive of pay of personnel, amount to $224,038,440. Education and training will cost $4,443,980. The research and development program, exclusive of pay of personnel, will total $160,513,000. The final item to make up the total proposed authorizatior of $1,199,500,000 is $387,346,000 for the pay of civilian personnel for all Air Force activities. These funds cover all Air Force requirements for which the Air Force has budgetary responsibility. The pay, subsistence, clothing, and medical care of Air Force military personnel and general supplies which are common to the whole Army are covered by other appropriations.

I might tell you that during the course of the hearings the committee was shown photographs and artists' sketches of some of the airplanes of the future and told of their peculiar characteristics. When these planes become an actuality, the aircraft of today will be somewhat in the same category as the plane of 1919 is as compared to the present-day long range bombers and fighters. The progress in this field is reaching fantastic proportions; but I am convinced the United States cannot afford to lag behind other nations in this highly important part of our national security structure.

QUARTERMASTER CORPS

The Quartermaster's program calls for an authorization of $602,505,100 for Quartermaster Corps activities and $19,000,000 for welfare of enlisted men. This program is closely geared to the strength of the Army and is considered by the committee to be the expected normal requirements. The 1947 fund requirements are considerably less than the estimated obligations for 1946, mainly because of the reduction in troop strength to be supplied. There has also been an appreciable lowering of the authorized levels of supply with a resultant reduction in the quantities in Quartermaster pipe lines to all points where occupation troops are stationed. In computing requirements, it is now possible to eliminate combat and shipping loss factors and to lay greater stress upon food conservation and maintenance and reclamation activities.

In the subsistence program the committee was informed that every effort has been exterted to utilize to the fullest extent all foods which became excess to Army requirements upon the termination of hostilities. On the other hand, we were assured that the War Department is still following its policy of providing the best possible subsistence to the soldier. An increase in all overseas areas, in the supply of perishable items in the form of fruits, vegetables, meats, and dairy products has been made possible by the ending of the war. Accordingly, a solider's diet today, by weight, is composed of approximately 35 percent processed foods. In 1920 the basic garrison ration for the Army was computed at 70.8 ounces costing 43 cents; for 1946 the ration is 81.9 ounces costing 62.7 cents. There were fewer components in the 1920 authorized ration and they weighed less. This comparison does, however, reflect the generally higher food costs of today.

Under its subappropriation "Regular supplies," the Quartermaster Corps provides such items as forage for animals, stationery and office supplies, office machines, sanitary supplies, insecticides, tableware, kitchen equipment, reference books and technical publications, packing and crating supplies and equipment, warehouse equipment, fixed bakery equipment, special mobile equipment, printing supplies, and petroleum products. Even though this appropriation covers many miscellaneous items, the estimates are based on actual anticipated requirements, and there is no provision for any unforeseen contingency. The committee was assured that all stocks on hand, both in the United States and in overseas theaters, had been taken into consideration in computing the requirements under this program.

Requirements for clothing and personal equipage are, of course, greatly reduced from the current year's program. The various items of clothing which will be procured this next fiscal year are detailed on page 301 of the printed record. There are no new items, only the required standard items, to initially equip and maintain the enlisted personnel. One of the reasons for additional procurement is the fact that a certain amount of clothing is retained by an enlisted man upon his discharge from the Army. This fact has tended, of course, to deplete existing stocks which were on hand when the demobilization program got under way in a full-scale manner. As a matter of interest, the items which each enlisted man is allowed to take with him at the time of his discharge are listed on page 302 of the printed record. Our committee was informed that the War Department follows the policy of maintaining and reclaiming all items practicable rather than entering into new procurement. The total dollar value of items to be reclaimed during the fiscal year 1947 will be approximately $107,000,000. All classes of supplies, clothing, and general items will be reclaimed.

ORDNANCE

After having established and generated a great production machine during the war to turn out a flood of guns, tanks, ammunition, and other combat items to insure our victory, the Ordnance Department is now engaged in dismantling this great machine. Contracts have been terminated and claims are being settled. Plants are being converted to commercial work, and disposition is being made of property no longer needed. At the same time, the peacetime needs of the Army must be provided and research must be continued to assure the best weapons.

The budget program of the Ordnance Department covers training, procurement of a small number of newly developed weapons, and maintenance of the arsenals which performed such outstanding services in the early critical days of the war and maintained heavy production throughout the war. Certain plants will be maintained in standby status to meet any future emergency, and great quantities of left-over war equipment will be preserved as war reserve. Many of the items being returned from overseas theaters and from troops in the United States, are in need of repair before they are serviceable for reissue. At the present time, there are approximately 6,000,000 tons of ammunition stored in the United States. There is no requirement for about 20 percent of this amount. It is planned to break down this excess ammunition and sell the various components as scrap. The remainder of the ammunition consists of types which are standard for weapons being retained. About 40 percent of this ammunition will have to be renovated to make it suitable for firing. This is necessary because much of it has been stored in the open for several years and has deteriorated. On account of the large quantities involved, the renovation program will have to spread over a number of years.

One of the larger items in the ordnance program is the storage of ordnance matériel. Already many hundreds of millions of dollars worth of items have been declared surplus; and additional amounts are being declared daily. Only items for which there are foreseeable future needs are being stored. The long-term storage program consists of preparing selected items and placing them in hermetically sealed containers. It is anticipated that items sealed in containers free from all moisture, will remain in a condition ready for issue for a longer period than if they were merely greased and stored subject to humidity variations and condensations.

The Ordnance Department has a big job ahead of it, not only from the standpoint of cleaning up the left-overs of war, but in keeping abreast of the important developments in this very essential part of our national security.

Research must be emphasized and our troops must be trained in the use of the latest weapons.

ENGINEER SERVICE

The Chief of Engineers is charged by law and Army regulations with the supply of engineer materials and equipment, design and construction of facilities for the War Department, maintenance and repair of War Department facilities and the operation of utilities; acquisition, management, and disposal of War Department real estate; development and production of maps for the War Department; mobilization and training of specialized engineer units and personnel; development of improved engineer equipment and techniques; collection and dissemination of engineer intelligence, and the planning of the engineering phases of military operations; and the advising of the War Department general staff on engineer matters.

In addition to fund requirements for the actual construction of facilities in the United States and at overseas bases, funds are needed for procurement of certain engineer supplies and equipment. Engineer items range in variety and in size from small hand tools and hardware, such as hammers, nails, and screws, to large and complex machinery, such as tractors, cranes, crushing and screening plants, and hydraulic dredges.

One of the most important projects under the title "Engineer Service, Army" provides for construction of facilities at permanent overseas bases. To meet specific operational needs, wartime bases were established, war materials were assembled in dumps, ports were hurriedly reopened and put in operation, and troops were placed in temporary field shelter and in tent camps. In order to provide suitable facilities and adequate quarters for the permanent garrisons at certain overseas bases, a long-range program has been developed. There is housing, both permanent and temporary, construction of runways and operating facilities for airfields, construction of storage space and shops, utilities at posts, and miscellaneous facilities. Permanent type construction is contemplated only at permanent bases. The funds in the proposed authorization will cover but a relatively small percentage of the total requirement overseas.

Construction in the United States has been limited in this bill to those items which are required from the standpoint of health, safety, training, or research. The requirements are acknowledged to be far greater than can be taken care of under this bill; but it seems better to defer some of the projects until the materials situation in the United States has eased somewhat and probably more pressing needs have been taken care of. The greater part of the housing provided in this bill for construction in the United States will consist of conversions and temporary structures.

SIGNAL CORPS

The authorization proposed for the Signal Service of the Army will furnish communication services for the Army in the United States, in the occupied areas, and at other points where maintenance of communications is essential; and will provide for important research and development work. A small amount of procurement is proposed to augment existing stocks. Provision is also made for a limited amount of newly designed equipment for extended field tests. The principal items of standard procurement are those which are consumed at a uniform rate, such as electron tubes and dry batteries.

The major expenditures for research and development under this appropriation title will be in the general multipurpose radar field, in continued research in wave propagation in an effort to widen the usable portions of the already crowded radio spectrum, and in improvements in the field and fixed plant applications, including short-, medium-, and long-range ground radio communications equipment.

On the whole, this program represents a large reduction in the amount of communications facilities and services. It is believed to be the minimum amount essential for the conduct of the business of the War Department.

CHEMICAL WARFARE SERVICE

Just like the Ordnance Department, the Chemical Warfare Service has a clean-up job to do in the dismantling of production machinery, redistillation of toxic agents, and the conversion of its wartime plant to a peacetime basis. Fund requirements for fiscal year 1947 are only a small percentage of wartime years.

It should be well understood that the Chemical Warfare Service is primarily a research and development service in addition to its being a procurement, supply, and fighting service. New developments in chemistry and related fields indicate potentialities of destructive power which will dwarf the violence of any destructive agents used in World War II. I believe the security of the Nation depends upon a continued program of military research and development.

I want to digress at this point to comment briefly upon one of the major contributions of Chemical Warfare Service to our victory in World War II. At the beginning of the war, the United States armed forces had no incendiary bombs of their own. Through the perseverance of CWS leaders, authority was obtained to explore this field. After that, providing fire bombs became their biggest single job and, I think, the greatest CWS accomplishment. The damage these bombs did to military targets in Japan and Germany has been well publicized. "Never in the history of aerial warfare," declares an Army Air Forces report, "has such destruction been achieved at such a moderate cost." CWS produced a total of 260,000,000 incendiary bombs. Victory was won after less than one-fifth of that number had been dropped.

MEDICAL

It has been said that never has an army received such splendid medical care and treatment as that accorded the Army of the United States during World War II. The Medical Department's program for fiscal year 1947 is to continue to render the same, and better if possible, fine medical care for which it is recognized. It must continue to procure certain medical supplies and equipment, operate station and general hospitals, dispensaries, depots, and other related Medical Department installations, and perform certain research and development. The fund requirements for the Medical Department are to a great degree influenced by the size of the Army. This program has been reduced to a minimum without sacrificing the high standards of medical care which have been established.

TRANSPORTATION

Transportation of War Department equipment and supplies by commercial carriers ashore and afloat, operation of Army transports in various parts of the world, and operation of Army ports of embarkation at New York, New Orleans, San Francisco, and Seattle, are the requirements of the Transportation Corps during the next fiscal year. The proposed authorization under this title will cover all freight movements of the War Department, other than by air, and other than from the vendor to the first point of use or storage; and will cover movement of personnel by water.

CIVILIAN COMPONENTS

Reactivation of the National Guard, Organized Reserves and the Reserve Officers' Training Corps will occur during fiscal year 1947. From the testimony which the committee heard, we were convinced that the plans were well determined and that the objectives of the leaders of these units could be accomplished. The proposed authorizations for these elements of our national defense system have been carefully considered; and I believe they are adequate.

ATOMIC SERVICE

While considerable of the testimony on the proposed authorization for the continuance of the atomic energy project was off the record, and I am sure you will agree that it should have been, the printed record does contain considerable of the pertinent facts concerning this activity. Inasmuch as the future of this project is more in the "unknown" class than any other, the committee relied to a large degree upon the advice and recommendations of our military leaders in taking action on this part of the bill.

The committee was informed that certain operating contracts must be let before the end of fiscal year 1947 to insure a continuation of the operation into fiscal year 1948. The estimates as submitted to the committee were insufficient to cover these contracts. For that reason, the committee has recommended that the estimates be increased to fully cover the stated requirements of this project. I might say that this increase will not have the effect of spending more money during fiscal year 1947 than had been recommended to the Congress by the President, because expenditures under the operating contracts will not be made until fiscal year 1948. I believe the committee was wise in taking this action. We certainly can leave nothing undone in this highly important development.

GOVERNMENT AND RELIEF IN OCCUPIED AREAS

The committee considered in substantial detail the requirements under this general head. It covers the fund requirements for carrying out the United States occupational responsibilities in Germany, Austria, Japan, Korea, and, to some extent, in the northeast corner of Italy. The War Department has been charged by the President with initial financing of the procurement for those supplies needed to bring feeding, medical care, and transportation up to certain minimum standards which will prevent disease and general unrest, thereby avoiding unnecessary friction between local populations and occupying forces. These supplies are imported into the occupied area wherever it is determined that the local economy is presently not self-sufficient to meet minimum basic dietary and health standards. It is through the medium of these activities that we hope the job of winning the war will be completed and the committee feels that the authorization is a reasonable one for these purposes.

The table on pages 109 and 110 of the hearings contains an itemized account under the heading "Care and handling surplus property," the total of which is $48,326,838. The committee in its deliberations proposed no change in the particular items making up this total amount, although some reductions were made in some of the over-all items in which these particular items are found. It was the purpose of the committee to provide the funds referred to above to enable the War Department to carry on in the same, or similar, manner as heretofore in its care and handling of surplus property, paying for such care and handling of such property from the funds herein provided. To strengthen and clarify the authority of the War Department to so carry on in the care and handling of surplus property there was included in the language found in section 4 of the bill, the section of the bill indicating certain purposes for which funds in the bill might be used, a reference to paragraph 8 of Executive Order 9630 of September 27, 1945, which has reference to the disposal of surplus property in accordance with the provisions of the Surplus Property Act of 1944, as amended.

CONCLUSION

Gentlemen, I have covered the highlights of the programs having major fund requirements in this bill. The committee made a very searching investigation of the estimates as presented to it, and we believe that the bill as finally adopted fairly and reasonably covers the needs of the Military Establishment for fiscal year 1947.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRELL. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. On page 5, I notice a nonflying officer is allowed up to $60 a month for making a flight of 5 minutes a month. Will the gentleman explain why that is necessary?

Mr. NORRELL. If I mistake not, this provision was placed in the bill several years ago and no change was made this year. It was generally understood that flight personnel must have more training and skill than the Ground Forces in the air services. This was possibly the reason this provision was originally placed in the bill.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF JUNE 24

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I wish to use this time to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] the program for next week.

Mr. McCORMACK. Assuming that the pending bill is disposed of today there will be no further business this week.

Monday will be District day and completion of H. R. 5857, the Census bill; then S. 896, relating to the retirement annuity of those on retirement where the increase was not made retroactive. This to me is a most worthy bill.

On Monday also the conference report on the strategic stock-pile bill will come up. That conference report has already been filed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And is it to be understood that if a roll call is demanded on Monday it will go over to Tuesday?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly. There is an agreement that after today if on any Monday a roll call should be demanded the roll call will take place the following day, Tuesday.

Tuesday we may meet at 10 o'clock, although I have not submitted this request yet.

The selective-service conference report will be called up. I doubt if the War Department appropriation bill can be finished in time today to complete consideration of the railroad retirement bill. If we cannot take it up today, then the railroad retirement bill will come up on Tuesday; and if that bill is disposed of in time on Tuesday, we will also take up H. R. 6477 which extends the commissioner's loans in relation to agriculture. If that is not taken up on Tuesday it will be disposed of some day next week, and must be because the authority under which those loans are made expired the 20th of June.

Wednesday: Again comes our Calendar Wednesday.

Thursday: We will take up the deficiency bill. We must of course give appropriation bills the right-of-way.

The remainder of the week I am leaving rather flexible because at the end of the fiscal year I have to.

There are other conference reports that might come up on Monday or during the week, such as the OPA if agreed upon, or others.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has reported out three resolutions rejecting the three reorganization plans. I am hopeful that the committee members on both sides will get together and confer with the leadership on both sides as to a day when we can bring them up, a day which the leadership can arrange for them. Of course, it is a matter of high privilege if any Members wants to call them up, but I hope they will not exercise this privilege, and I am sure they will not do that without conferring with the leadership. If necessary, we will bring it up some day next week. We will have to make arrangements for it. In any event I hope that the membership of that committee, as I stated, will confer with the leadership on both sides to see if we cannot work out some time that is satisfactory taking into consideration the busy program we have. I know the House will not misunderstand when I say that we have an awfully busy program and accordingly there has got to be a lot of flexibility. The leadership on both sides will keep the House advised of any changes as far in advance as possible. We have in mind the question of final adjournment and all those matters have to be taken into consideration. The House has been very kind in cooperating with getting legislation through expeditiously and I know the House will continue to do so.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Perhaps the majority leader has not been informed, but the stock-pile minerals bill has been recommitted to conference. The conferees will meet the first part of the week. As I understand the situation it is simply to make some corrections which I do not think will be controversial. I do not believe, however, it can be called up on Monday.

Mr. McCORMACK. I conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and it was as a result of that that I put it down for Monday. I am glad to get the additional information. Under the circumstances, it cannot be brought up on Monday.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman mentions three bills adversely reported having to do with reorganization plans, and the gentleman spoke of the high privilege of these bills. It will be necessary to go before the Rules Committee. I understand, however, unless these plans are acted on before the 16th of July they will become effective. Under the circumstances it is highly important that they be brought up for consideration as speedily as possible. As a member of that committee, I propose to call up these bills in the event they are not presented for consideration by next Thursday or Friday.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. May I say that I talked to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO], chairman of the committee, and I am sure there is no disposition on the part of the committee to delay the matter. I was advised that he was going to confer with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], majority leader, looking to the possibility of bringing those up some time next week and trying to get a definite date, the earlier the better.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO] has talked with me on two or three occasions. My note here is that he tried to get them up on Thursday. They have to come up on some day next week. The gentleman will note I stated that I hoped Members on both sides of the committee will confer with the leadership. What I would like to see is the members of the committee get together and agree on 1 or 2 hours to debate the three of them and bring them up all together.

Mr. PITTENGER. We all want to cooperate with the leadership of the House. I know you have difficulties. I hope you will give us a definite date and that it will be on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday of next week or the week following.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is pleasing to me and the gentleman may rest content that there will be no delay on my part even if I could exercise it. It is simply a matter of tolerance on the part of any Member of the House, having regard for the rest of the program that I am seeking an agreement as far as possible. I hope you can get together and agree on time. Then when you do, let us confer with the leadership on both sides and we will agree on a day as soon as possible.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, we are not going to have any trouble on time if you will just give us a date. But we do not want a date when the Members have all gone home.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. Of course, the House ought to know that the Committee could take 30 hours on these resolutions. Each of these is privileged for 10 hours of debate.

Mr. McCORMACK. Correct.

Mr. JUDD. But we feel on both sides that we can handle the thing in 2 or 3 hours. I agree that we ought to get it out not later than Thursday.

Mr. McCORMACK. I suggest that you agree on a time, and I will bring it up just as soon as I possibly can. As a matter of fact, in my notes here I have it down for Thursday if we can get rid of the deficiency bill.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TIBBOTT].

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Chairman, it has been a pleasure to work with the distinguished members of the Subcommittee on Military Establishments. The committee has made a thorough and comprehensive examination of the program proposed for the fiscal year 1947. We are well aware of the heavy responsibilities which devolve upon our committee to recommend the appropriation for a program for the first year following the war.

In dealing with the Quartermaster Service of the Army, and the testimony of the Quartermaster General, it was estimated the requirements for his department for the fiscal year, 1947, to be $615,706,644, $19,000,000 of which is for enlisted men. We recommended in appropriations $597,750,100, which is a decrease of $17,956,544. The factors involved in the reduction are due to: First, a reduction in troop strength; second, lowering of levels of supply; third, elimination of combat loss factors from their requirements; fourth, increased emphasis of food conservation; fifth, elimination from their program of requirements for international aid and disease and unrest; and the stressing of economy wherever possible.

It is evident that the Quartermaster General is aware of the present urgency for economy and intends to follow in this direction. He assumes the responsibility of maintaining the high standards of his department and to be ready to meet all emergencies at the same time keeping in mind the demands for those things which the civilian population sacrificed while we were actively engaged in war.

Every effort is being made to prevent the waste of food. Qualified personnel, properly trained, are receiving the scope of training in the purchase of food. The estimated reduction in personnel for the fiscal year 1947 is estimated to be 64 percent.

There is a substantial decrease in the estimate for the disposition of remains. This is due to the decrease in the size of the Army, prisoners of war, and in the number of anticipated deaths.

Both General Gregory, the former Quartermaster General of the United States Army, and General Larkin, present Quartermaster General, I believe, have done a good job and are to be complimented for their hard work and fairness.

The Army program for 1947 includes the reestablishment of the National Guard and the ROTC. We understand that the plans for the reconstitution of the National Guard are now being worked out with the States. It was testified to by the Secretary of War that the plans call for 150,000 a year and over a period of 5 years, they hope to get 650,000 men.

It is estimated that $110,000,000 will be required for National Guard activities during the fiscal year 1947 for activation of men and officers; that reasonably complete table of organization equipment will be furnished without cost to the National Guard except when excess War Department stocks are not available. We are given to understand, too, that the Federal Government must provide an even larger portion of the cost of operating the National Guard in order to relieve the financial burden on the States and to create an even more efficient National Guard than existed in 1940, at the time of its induction into Federal service.

In the Air National Guard it is hoped that there will be a striking force to have at least one squadron in each State and two or three squadrons in the larger States.

We were assured a very close technical supervision by experienced personnel over the Air National Guard, arrangements for which would be through the National Guard Bureau. It seems that the War Department is getting their squadrons' officers for the National Guard Reserve and keeping them up to date. Quite likely a considerable number of the Reserve officers are going to take advantage of that. The testimony reveals, too, that eventually the requirements will call for a training rate of 5,400 pilots a year. It was made clear to us that the 22,500 pilots in the Air Reserve are not all that are required in the program, but they will be in need of some 30,000 additional men, who will be available for administrative duties and for combat crew duty other than pilots.

General Spaatz, in his testimony, informed us that in order to keep our Air Force effective they must have a constant influx of Reserve officers on extended active duty. This, in turn, would provide a constant flow to Reserve and National Guard units trained in the latest technique and on the latest equipment.

General Eisenhower, in his testimony before our committee, said:

> The National Guard must be stronger than ever before. This will require the Federal Government to bear a larger share of the operating cost of the National Guard than in the past. The framework of the Organized Reserve is rapidly being reestablished. The plan for this component calls for a portion to be completely organized into units and fully equipped. Legislation to authorize inactive-duty training, with compensation therefor similar to that presently authorized for the National Guard, will be sought. The Reserve Officers' Training Corps, the product of which paid such great dividends during the war, has already been reestablished. All courses have been revamped or are in the process of revamping to take advantage of our recent experience. The future graduate of this great corps will be even better equipped to take his place in the Organized Reserve Corps than his predecessors Increases of pay, additional assistance in a civilian capacity, additional office equipment and supplies, and overhead facilities must be taken into consideration. The National Guard should be prepared at all times to carry out its assigned mission in peace and in war.

The National Guard's primary interest to the Federal Government is basically required to develop a balanced force in the Army of the United States, and is not essential for State security.

We must remember that when the National Guard was inducted into the Army of the United States their identification as National Guard men was lost.

As to the ROTC, the schools, colleges, and universities are now making their postwar plans, and we should be able to state definitely what our ROTC policies will be.

We are told that—

> Practically all the States feel that they cannot raise the complete number of troops in the troop bases unless they receive Federal aid in the construction of armories and other facilities necessary to house the troops.

With the present unsettled conditions of the world and our responsibilities as one of the leading nations of the world, the next step seems to be to determine the minimum strength of the Army which would enable us to meet those responsibilities.

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIBBOTT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KEARNEY. I was quite interested in listening to the gentleman's discussion of the National Guard. I wonder if the gentleman can give us any information as to just what assistance the Federal Government will give the States in rebuilding the armories to house the new Army, especially the new mechanized outfits.

Mr. TIBBOTT. I will say to the gentleman, that during the hearings the question came before the committee. It is my understanding the matter of assistance to armories was not included in the appropriations for the fiscal year 1947, but would be considered at some future time upon development of the postwar program.

Mr. KEARNEY. The armories as now constituted are wholly inadequate for the housing of these new outfits.

Mr. TIBBOTT. That was understood by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS].

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, the members of the committee will note that this bill is for the amount of something over $7,000,000,000. I do not know whether the chairman of the committee or the ranking minority member has brought out the point that not all of it is for military functions. I think I recall during the hearings we developed the fact that something like $1,200,000,000 was for civil functions as conducted by the War Department. The reason I bring that out is because sometime someone may ask us here in peacetime why we are appropriating $7,000,000,000 for the maintenance of an army. If you take the civil functions item of $1,200,000,000 out, you do not have a $7,000,000,000 army. It is my proposal, and has been my proposal to the committee, that next year those items for civil functions as conducted by the War Department be taken out of the military appropriations and put in a separate civil functions bill just as we have many items like the Canal Zone item in the civil functions bill. I think it is only fair because in that way we will then actually reflect the cost to the taxpayer of the maintenance of our Army and of our War Department. This committee went through this bill thoroughly and we did the very best we could. I think we combed every item. I think you can depend on that. We made every cut we possibly could. Sometimes we cut a little more than I wanted and sometimes we did not make quite as much of a cut as I wanted to make. But we struck a happy medium.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I would be interested to know whether in the testimony you had during these lengthy hearings you delved into the matter of surplus property held by the Army.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We went into that rather thoroughly.

Mr. BAILEY. And what did you find with reference to surplus property held by the Army?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Does the gentleman mean in regard to the amount of surplus property that they have?

Mr. BAILEY. There is a feeling on the part of some of the officials dealing with surplus property that the Army has not been sufficiently liberal in turning loose some of the surplus compared with what the Navy has been doing.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not know whether I can answer that sufficiently or not, but I do not believe the subcommittee feels that the Army is holding on to anything that they should give up. They are getting rid of it just as fast as they can.

Mr. BAILEY. There is a feeling on the part of a great many people that they are not, when they want some surplus property.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That may be true. If you and I wanted a jeep and the Army still had it, we would probably think we should have it, but I think the committee feels the Army is doing a good job in handling surplus property.

Mr. Chairman, there are two items that I want to discuss particularly. Briefly, I want to mention the Tripler Hospital. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], talked about Tripler General Hospital. I want to concede to him that he did uncover a great many things there that we do not approve of and do not condone. I do not condone some of the errors made by the War Department. I do not want to approve of some of the things they want to do. But we have now put safeguards around the War Department in further construction. I believe the gentleman will agree with me on that, in connection with Tripler General Hospital. I wanted to give you some of the background. We are passing all of the blame, it seems to me, on to the War Department and I do not feel that we should do that. If I am incorrect in any of the statements I make in regard to dates and so forth I will be glad to be corrected, because I was not a member of this subcommittee at the time of the inception of Tripler General Hospital. However, as I recall from what I can find out, Tripler General Hospital was started on the orders of the then Chief of Staff, General Marshall. I believe it was in 1942 that General Marshall made a tour of the Pacific, and feeling that the war with Japan would not be ended as soon as it really did end, he felt it would be dragged out, and that we would need adequate hospital facilities. Therefore, he gave directions for the construction of the hospital. As a result of that they started plans for Tripler General Hospital in Honolulu. I had the pleasure of going out there to see that. Just as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] said, I did not know anything about the background of this until we actually visited the site of that hospital. It is unfortunate that during the war much of the discussion before the committees whenever we held discussions about construction abroad, was kept off the record. Therefore, we really do not have a record to go on, to see who was at fault for some of these things. General Marshall was interested in this hospital, I have no doubt, and if he had not felt the war would be dragged out much longer than it was, he would have held up plans until a later date when they could have really made better plans. But you will recall that during the war, especially when it came to installations such as hospitals or any other installation for the benefit of our servicemen, we acted promptly, and in doing so, we often wasted money. The truth of the matter is that war is a waste of money, and you have to continue to build and work and plan and you have to do it rapidly. We found out during the testimony on this bill, after having questioned the engineers and General Kirk, that one of the greatest troubles about Tripler General Hospital and its excessive cost, was the fact that they had to do their work and make their plans so quickly.

These plans were made hurriedly and they are not the kind of plans that we would like to have made. The Veterans' Administration has made better plans. But I want to point out this to you that in the hearings I questioned the Engineer Corps and General Kirk. This appears at page 1022 of the hearings. If you will read this you will get a little clearer picture of what happened.

They point out the excessive cost. I believe the gentleman from Michigan said it was to have cost $8,000,000.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Eleven million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Eleven million five hundred thousand dollars. The costs went up from time to time They also pointed out that this was partially due to the increased cost of materials and also partially due to the increase in labor costs. I put in the record at the same time the fact that the Veterans' Administration had made proposals to us to build veteran hospitals. I forget the number at the moment, but they are in the hearings here. They gave us a certain amount as needed to build those hospitals throughout the country for the veterans, but a little later they asked for additional funds and to appear before the Deficiency Committee. I was invited to sit in on the hearings, and then I found that in many cases the cost was more than twice as much to build those Veterans' Administration hospitals in this country as they had originally estimated. Now, Tripler Hospital no doubt has increased in cost just the same as these other hospitals. At the same time I think some of the plans they have can certainly be modified and some of the things the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] mentioned can be eliminated.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] did bring out some things that were wrong, but that is not entirely the responsibility of the War Department. They did contact certain members of the subcommittee. At the time they did get tacit assent to beginning construction of Tripler. Those men are not here now. There were three of them, Joe Stearns, of Alabama, Mr. Snyder, and Lane Powers, who was the ranking minority member. The gentleman from Michigan says he was not informed of this plan and, as he said, did not know anything about it until he saw the hospital out at Honolulu. The truth is that the War Department did come to the committee both of the House and of the Senate, and then on their statements were given tacit assent. Now the fault lies in the fact that Mr. Powers did not inform the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], and it also lies in the fact that there was not a committee meeting called and the thing threshed out and approved formally. I will admit that to the gentleman. On the other hand, it was at a time when we were doing things in a hurry, but they did come up and get tacit assent. They also went over to the Senate and got tacit assent from that body, too. At a later date it was brought out—and you will find the conversation here on page 1025 of the hearings between General Kirk and Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma, chairman of the same committee in the Senate, in which the Senator said that there was money sufficient in here without being earmarked for the construction of this hospital.

So now we have it in this position, that the construction that they have started on already they may continue, and in addition to that we gave them the right to continue on with three or four other projects—I do not recall which they are at the present time, but they are in the report at page 7—they can continue with them because we felt it was necessary to complete the hospitals for use in January. Except for these four which have not been constructed which amount to two million and some hundred thousand, if they are going to do any more construction they must come to the Military Affairs Committee for authority and then come before this subcommittee for their funds. Therefore, they cannot continue without the consent of Congress.

Let us not lose sight of the fact that this is the only permanent hospital in the Pacific for our Army, and that in addition to that provisions are made for the veterans under the direction or at the request of the Veterans' Administration.

I am interested in that particularly because my committee has to handle veterans affairs. We do not want to lose track of the fact that if we are going to build a hospital, and it has been started, we want to build a good hospital because it is the only general and permanent hospital in the Pacific. We have bases out there which I am going to talk about later. Because something was done wrong here previously, we must not do something to delay the construction of facilities that are necessary, not only for the members of our armed forces but for the veterans who will use the hospital.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield to the gentleman from California .

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Out near and bordering my district there are two large Army hospitals that were built there by the Army for treatment of their prisoners. I believe I can say from a visual examination of the buildings that they are permanent. We anticipated that when the Army was through with them, which they are now, the Veterans' Administration would take them over. When that was suggested to the Veterans' Administration or the Veterans' Committee, they said, "No; these hospitals are not adequate for our patients. They are not efficient, they are not the right kind of hospitals."

Does not the Army in building a hospital have in mind its possible use by other governmental agencies, and also is not the hospital problem an old problem? When they build one of those hospitals, there are certain principles and fundamentals that are well known which they should have put into those hospitals.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I would like to answer the gentleman briefly, because I have something here I want to discuss and my time is passing. I do not know the two hospitals the gentleman is talking about; however, up to now the hospitals that the Veterans' Administration felt were of a permanent nature were accepted. Some of these may look permanent on the outside but they still may not be fireproof and the Veterans' Administration is not going to use them. We do not want them unless they are fireproof and of permanent construction because it may be a danger to the patients. The policy of the Veterans' Administration is to take the permanently constructed hospitals, and then they want them to be near medical centers, and I think they should be near medical centers. I would like to talk with the gentleman about that later and I will be glad to do so about their policy. So far we have approved the hospitals that the Veterans' Administration has taken and the policy they have followed, in our committee. I will be glad to discuss this with the gentleman later.

I want to discuss with the members of the committee for a few minutes our bases in the Pacific. I had the pleasure of going out there with the late Buell Snyder and the members of our committee. We visited many of the bases which I shall discuss with you. May I say that we took these bases in the Pacific at a great cost in manpower, in lives of our boys, and in money. In fact, I may say that it cost billions of dollars to build the bases that we have out there now. I have some figures here in regard to what it cost us in lives. I will not give a break-down and these figures exclude the Navy. Including the lives we lost on Okinawa by the Navy and on the other islands by the Marine Corps and Army, we lost a total of 90,289 men. When we bring in the Navy's total on islands aside from Okinawa and include the lives which we lost out in the Pacific on battleships and in one way and another, I imagine they will run well above 100,000 men.

We have certain bases out there which were mandated to us. There are one or two of them. We took other bases or other islands on which we have established bases, which were mandated to Japan after the last war. In addition to that we have bases on islands which were under the sovereignty of the British Empire and of France and of the Netherlands.

I want to discuss with you what I think we ought to keep out there.

I brought a map in here which I have marked, which will give you some idea of the picture that I am trying to get across to you.

OUR PACIFIC OUTPOSTS

Our complete and final victory over Japan has placed the United States in possession of many of the strategic islands of the Pacific Ocean formerly controlled by the Japanese. Our Pacific adversary has been smashed, and the ring of strategic bases which were his outposts have been wrested from a desperate and fanatical enemy in battles which are glorious pages in American history. The names of Tarawa, Kwajalein, Iwo Jima, and Okinawa will resound like bugle calls as long as men respect valor; but they also will bring back the memory of bloody struggles which required incredible efforts by our land, sea, and air forces in the mightiest combined operations the world has ever known; efforts which cost us heavily in ships, in planes, in supplies, and, above all, in the lives of thousands of our finest young men. The price of victory was not a light one.

Millions of American dollars and uncounted hours of American toil were poured into these islands, once they had been taken from the enemy, in order that they might be made suitable stepping stones to bring us to grips with the enemy on his own shores. The skill and devotion to duty of our engineers, both Army and Navy, were a fitting complement to the valor of our assault troops. Roads were built, harbors developed, and airfields carved from mountain and jungle, in what can truly be described as modern miracles. Great bases sprang up where formerly a few miserable Jap huts had stood in fever-ridden swamps. From the easternmost tip of New Guinea, through the scattered islands of the Philippine Archipelago and on tiny coral atolls in the watery wastes of the Central Pacific, the blood, treasure, and talents of America were expended without stint to build a highway to the heart of Japan.

Every man and woman in the Nation hopes and prays that never again will there be war. Nevertheless, the advances of modern science, which make possible weapons of greater destructiveness, range, and stealth than any the world has heretofore known, make mandatory the securing of our shores against attack from any quarter. World War II gave the faintest preliminary indication of the destruction which can be wrought with guided missiles and atomic bombs. A war in the future could bring devastation from the sea, from the air, and from long-range guided missiles launched from distant shores. All these would make man's worst efforts to date seem like the work of children.

An adequate military posture demands that we possess bulwarks against aggression, sufficiently distant from our own shores to screen them against attack from any quarter whatsoever. Our possession of such bases denies to any enemy their use as sites from which offensive operations could be launched against us.

To rely merely on defenses within or close to our own shores would be to invite disaster. Our minds reel when we consider what might have resulted if the Japanese had attacked Hawaii with forces large enough to wrest those strategic islands from us. From such a position, our west coast could easily have been assailed, and our people would have learned at first hand the horrors that the Jap brought to Nanking and Manila.

If we are to keep an enemy from our shores, we must have bases which are capable of being defended and supplied, and so located as to protect our air lanes, sea lanes, and continental shores. The system must have depth and flexibility, so that penetration of any one area by the enemy will not result in catastrophe. World War II has demonstrated for all time that, far from being a bulwark against invasion, an ocean is, instead, an open and inviting road to the heart of a nation which is weak.

The islands of the Pacific were bought with American blood and developed by American sweat and money. They must remain available as bases for the defense of the United States against any aggressor. Certainly, we have fully earned the right to insure that these vital shields of our western flank will never again be used against us.

Much remains to be done before we possess a well developed and adequate system of bases in the Pacific. Many of the bases which we now occupy were developed at top speed during the war. A breathless haste was the order of the day, in order that the bases might fill their operational missions. It was imperative that airfields be constructed in the shortest possible time, so that we could relentlessly press our attack on the enemy. Such airfields are not now adequate for the operation of the heavy-type aircraft now being produced. They must be strengthened, or in some cases reconstructed or even entirely relocated, to eliminate operational hazards which had to be accepted in wartime.

Further, our logistical arrangements on these installations must be adapted to peacetime use. Permanent storage facilities, depots, and repair shops must be provided, if installations are to be operated with reasonable economy. We can no longer operate supply dumps on an open beach as we did during the war. In tropical heat and rain or in Arctic snows, equipment and supplies deteriorate with appalling speed if adequate protection is not provided.

In peacetime, permanent housing is required for military personnel and their families. In the base areas which we propose to retain and develop, much of the construction is of such filmsy nature as to be entirely unsuitable. Substantial housing must be provided for the health, safety, and well-being of our troops and their familes. We cannot ask American soldiers to live in substandard facilities at a time when every effort is being made to encourage enlistments in the Army and to improve generally the lot of our fighting men.

If, then, we are to have the system of adequate bases so vital to our very existence, we must provide permanent construction to include airdromes which can accommodate the largest aircraft now projected by our great airplane industry; and adequate storage and repair facilities and troop housing of a standard which can be countenanced by the American people. The system of bases which I visualize must include many of those islands of the Pacific which were formerly Japanese mandates or possessions, such as Saipan, Tinian, Okinawa, and Iwo Jima, which were won by the valor of American arms. If you will look at the map you will note that these bases which I mention are Army bases and run in a circular curve southward to Guam and Okinawa and do not include an outer circle which we should have of naval bases. I think we should maintain our control of these bases without any question from anyone. In addition to the bases which I have named and which were either owned by Japan or under Japanese mandate, we plan for an Army base near Manila and for at least a refueling station at Kwajalein in the Marshalls. I should also like to say that the Navy, in my opinion, should have a base on New Caledonia and Manus which is in the Admiralty group. I realize, of course, that New Caledonia is under French sovereignty and that Manus is under British sovereignty or is a mandate of Australia. I do not know what steps the State Department is taking in regard to these bases but I know what steps they should be taking. They should be negotiating for bases in both New Caledonia and in the Admiralties. In the Admiralties the Army alone spent about $140,000,000. The Navy has a great base and a fine harbor and should by all means retain that base.

I wish you would observe this chain of bases which I propose that the United States maintain, first beginning with our Army and Navy bases on the island of Oahu in the Hawaiians and then in an outer circle the Navy base on New Caledonia, a Navy base on Manus in the Admiralties, a Navy base in the Philippines, at Leyte, a naval base on Okinawa, and, of course, our naval base at Dutch Harbor, in the Aleutians. This, as I said, is the outer circle of protective bases. The inner circle would begin with our Army and Navy bases at Honolulu with our refueling stop at Kwajalein in the Marshalls, and Army and Navy bases on Guam, Saipan, and Tinian, an Army base near Tokyo on the Tokyo Plain and an Army base on Attu, in the Aleutians, and end with our Navy base at Dutch Harbor, in the Aleutians.

There may be those who question the propriety of such proposals. I want it clearly understood that I am expressing only my own thoughts on the matter, but I have found that my thoughts are corroborated by those who have studied international affairs and the danger of an open gate in the Pacific. Whether you agree with me or not in this statement, I feel that the influence of the British Empire and their military power was much more potent in the days before the last war than they are now, and yet the Japanese were able to take the great bases of Hong Kong and Singapore and the Netherlands East Indies, and, of course, our own bases in the Philippines and control all of the mid-Pacific and southwest Pacific. The United States is the only power that was able to clear the Pacific of the Japanese. The United States will remain the only power in the Western Hemisphere who can maintain control of the Pacific. If you will observe these bases you will see that so long as we hold this outer circle of bases beginning at Hawaii, with a base in New Caledonia if it is possible to get such a base, a base at Manus in the Admiralties which we must have, and also bases on the Philippines, Okinawa, Tokyo, Attu, and Dutch Harbor, no power can break through. With the bases at Okinawa, Tokyo, Attu, and Dutch Harbor, we hold both hinges of the gate to the Pacific in this direction. With the bases at Oahu, Manila, Manus, the Marshalls, and the Hawaiians we hold both hinges to any gate to the Pacific in the mid- and southwest Pacific. As a deterrent to any aggressor these bases will contribute to the effectiveness of the United Nations Organization. We earnestly pray that the United Nations Organization will save the world from another terrible war; but if we are to do our share toward making that Organization adequate, the United States itself must be strong. Support of the United Nations and our own security, demand that the islands of the Pacific be adequately defended and properly organized. This bill contains $195,000,000 for the consolidation of our overseas bases. I urge your earnest support of this amount. Any other course would only lead to a heedless destruction of the fruits of victory, and is an invitation to a tragedy which might well mean an end to western civilization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will be glad to yield to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman recollects, of course, that several years before this war started some of us wanted to fortify the island of Guam.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I mentioned that.

Mr. MAY. If we had done that, we probably would not have lost it in the beginning, but, having lost it and paid for it in both blood and money, as we did in all of these bases, I think we ought to keep them.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. I have heard that story so often, and I am simply surprised that the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, in the face of the knowledge that should be in his hands as chairman of that committee, would have the audacity to stand up here and make the statement he has just made with respect to Guam. I hope in a few days to give the gentleman some information on that subject. If he knows the war plan of the Chiefs of Staff that was adopted—rainbow 5—as he should know it as chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, he will know that the Joint Chiefs of Staff from the very beginning have ruled, and have it in writing, that Guam was not defendable and could not be defended, and never was there a proposal to fortify the island of Guam. Do not bring that old red herring in here because you are going to be exposed in a few days when we make our Pearl Harbor report. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. MAY. I do know what I am talking about.

Mr. KEEFE. I know the gentleman does not when he makes that statement.

Mr. MAY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that from the RECORD.

Mr. KEEFE. I am tired of hearing those statements made.

Mr. MAY. I offered the amendment here myself to fortify it, and the RECORD will show it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope the argument between the two gentlemen is settled to their satisfaction and the satisfaction of everyone in the House, but I am afraid we will be arguing the fortification of Guam as long as the history of the United States exists.

I want to say this myself in regard to the fortification of Guam. Whether we were attempting to fortify it with $5,000,000 or not, and I do not know whether you would call that fortification or just improvement, does not make any difference. It simply reveals the policy that when we should have been fortifying Guam and our bases in the Pacific against aggression, when we should have seen what Japan was doing, and we tried to get only $5,000,000, this House voted it down. That is a clear indication of what would have happened if we tried to get something to fortify our bases in the Pacific.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The reason why it was not fortified is because we had been told for five long years before that by the United States Navy that Japan was just a breakfast spell and we did not need to pay any attention to her and could lick her in 3 months.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will not comment on that.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I intended to speak on the question of bases. I knew that the gentleman from Florida was going to talk about them. I think he has presented the matter to the committee very ably. In my judgment the war with Japan was made possible and probable by the secret treaty between England and Japan made during World War I and before the United States entered that war whereby in the case of victory, Japan was to have the Mariannas, the Carolines, and the Marshall Islands, and England was to have the Gilberts. When World War I was over, big-hearted Uncle Sam said, "We do not want a thing in the world but just the privilege of paying for the war." The result was that Japan did get those islands and England did get the Gilberts. All we had left was Wake and Guam. I am not blaming England because England was in a tight spot when that agreement was made. The possession of the Mariannas, the Carolines, and the Marshalls by Japan, together with other islands like Okinawa and that string of islands, together with the inability of England to defend the Gilberts, enabled Japan, as they knew they would be able to, to block the United States completely from the Philippine Islands. No Guam or Wake fortifications could have saved us. The committee was unanimous that that must not occur again and that the United States should keep those islands if for no other reason than that no other nation could come in and fortify those islands against us. Is that not correct, may I ask the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is correct as I understand it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is it the gentleman's view and the feeling of the committee members that we should not join with any group or anybody in a trusteeship of the bases indicated on the map by the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. It is my opinion we should retain those islands ourselves. Let us take Manus Island. Manus Island in the Southwest Pacific was owned by Germany. In World War I Germany lost it. It was mandated by the League of Nations to Australia. Australia was unable to hold it. Japan took it and we took it from Japan by a great sacrifice and spent $140,000,000, as I recall, on Army installations alone in addition to what the Navy did. It was an Australian mandate. If the Navy needs it, I say we should be just as realistic about it as Joe Stalin is and we should keep it. I think Australia would agree to that. That is how I feel about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, what I shall say pertains to defense, but I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, the people of the United States have invested in the Tennessee Valley Authority dams, reservoirs, generators, transmission lines, and other power facilities, in round figures, $750,000,000. The Authority has just completed the Fontana Dam, in Fontana, N. C. The Congress, in December 1941, authorized the construction of the Watauga Dam and the Holston Dam, the Watauga Dam being on the Watauga River a few miles east of Elizabethton, in Carter County; the Holston Dam being above Kingsport, on the Holston River. Approximately $4,500,000 has been spent on the Watauga Dam and $6,500,000 has been spent on the Holston Dam. Work on the Watauga Dam was stopped by the War Production Board in 1942, and work on the Holston Dam was stopped in 1943, due to a shortage of critical materials. H. R. 6777 carried a provision of some $10,000,000 for resumption of work on these two projects. It was eliminated by the committee on the theory that strategic materials might be required that otherwise could go into veterans' housing. Investigation discloses, however, that these dams are, for the most part, to be constructed of earth and rock.

This further fact argues in favor of resumption of work on them at this time: The TVA has a trained force of men who are ready to go from the completion of the Fontana Dam, with salvaged materials and heavy construction machinery, directly to work on the Watauga Dam at this time. If they are not put to work on these dams they will be dispersed and it will cost a large sum of money to reassemble such a force.

In addition to that, this work that has been done up there, the construction work that has been done on these two dams, more than $10,850,000, by a delay of 1 or 2 years will deteriorate in value, and the Government will suffer heavy loss on this account. In addition to that, the Authority has equipment up there. It has installations there. It has housing there. It has contracted for office space in Elizabethton. There is a pool of available labor within 40 miles of the Watauga Dam of 20,886, according to the employment facilities in charge of that matter at Elizabethton. I hold in my hand a letter from Mr. Frank B. Poteat, area director of the United States Employment Service, stating this to be true. In addition to that, more than 75,000 men within a radius of 40 miles of the Watauga Dam on which it is proposed to resume work at this time, served in the armed forces of this country. Most of them are back home and thousands of them desire to work on this project. These men live in their own homes and reside within easy access of the dam sites. No appreciable quantity of critical materials will be required in the construction of these dams during the first 2 years of work on them.

These are multiple-purpose dams. They are for the purpose of flood control, and for the purpose of producing power. At Elizabethton, in 1940, which is an industrial city in a section of the country built upon and surrounded by river bottom lands—at Elizabethton and vicinity a flood from the waters of the Watauga caused approximately $6,000,000 damage.

There was destruction of residences, damage to railroads, damage to farm lands, and there was loss of life. There are installations there, rayon plants, that cost over $26,000,000, where 6,000 people are employed daily. Rayon, of course, was most vital to the defense of this country during the war.

At Kingsport, which is an industrial city of 75,000 people, is one of the greatest ordnance plants in the world. It was constructed during this war. It is a place where we made our most devastating explosives. That is in the lowlands, and it would be threatened by floodwaters from the Watauga River because the Watauga runs into the Holston between Kingsport and Elizabethton. Kingsport is situated on the Holston River. So you have all those arguments from the standpoint of giving the people employment, from the standpoint of economy, and the saving of the work that has already been done and accomplished, and the necessity for flood control because floods may occur at any time. In addition to these facts, the Watauga Dam, when completed, will be capable of producing 50,000 kilowatts of prime power. This dam will produce 50,000 kilowatts of prime electrical energy, which means power that is produced day in and day out every day in the year. Holston Dam will have installed in it a 30,000-kilowatt generator which in turn will produce 30,000 kilowatts of prime power day in and day out the year around. These waters that are impounded by these two dams will go on downstream on the Holston, and passing out of Sullivan County through Hawkins and Hamblen into Grainger, these waters will flow into the Cherokee Dam, and from that dam they will flow down the Holston into the Tennessee at Knoxville, where the junction of the Holston and the French Broad form the Tennessee. With the aid and support of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], who is sitting before me at this time, on the tenth day of my membership in this House, he and five other Republicans made possible the building of the dam at Lenoir City costing $40,000,000, which also will utilize this water as it comes down the stream. It will go from there to the Watt's Bar Dam, from there to Hale's Bar Dam, from there to Chickamauga Dam, and on down to Wheeler, Pickwick, and Kentucky Dams. Thus we can use this water impounded in these two dams at each of the downstream dams I have named, and thus increase the production of power at each and all of them.

I wish to impress upon you, Mr. Chairman, and upon the Members of this House the urgency of this matter. The resumption of work on these dams is a matter of economy and is in furtherance of the national defense and for the welfare of the whole country. We all realize that the Tennessee Valley Authority made a most notable contribution to the national defense during this war. That is why the Government built the atomic bomb down there in my district. The Tennessee Valley Authority furnished power in great quantities.

There were also available trustworthy and patriotic men and women to do the work. This current will be needed down there. It will save coal, because such vast quantities of electric current are used in that project at Oak Ridge that at some times it is necessary to use not only this hydroelectric power but to use as much as 40 railroad cars of coal per day in the most modern and efficient steam-generating power plant in the world there at Oak Ridge at this bomb plant.

Then there is a personal reason that I want to urge, and I think it will not have a bad effect on my colleagues over on this side of the Chamber. Both of these dams are in the district represented by our colleague the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE]. This people and he himself are tremendously interested in the completion of these two dams. I have here a stack of telegrams and letters from hundreds of citizens of east Tennessee appealing to the Congress that work on these dams be resumed. Let me say that the Senate will likely restore this appropriation of approximately $10,000,000 for the resumption of work on these dams, and I am taking this opportunity to set these facts forth in order that when the conference report comes in you will know what it will mean to the people of this country and to the people of upper east Tennessee, western North Carolina, and western Virginia to complete these two projects. They have been authorized by the Congress. They can be built more cheaply now than later. The danger of destructive floods will be eliminated, power will be produced, employment furnished to veterans, and the Tennessee Valley Authority will be enabled to further serve the people of that region and the whole country. Let us build these dams now at less money than they otherwise hereafter could be completed for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, I notice in this bill an appropriation for $375,000,000 for the further development of atomic energy. I have no particular quarrel with that, but I rather imagine that this item of $375,000,000 or an expenditure of better than $1,000,000 per day for a year comes rather as a surprise to the American people.

Some time ago, the Honorable JOSEPH MARTIN, minority leader of the House, introduced House Resolution 325, a resolution resolving that before the United States adopts compulsory military service, the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the personal representatives of the President of the United States on the United Nations Organization be and hereby are urged to work unceasingly for an immediate international agreement whereby compulsory military service shall be wholly eliminated from the policies and practices of all nations.

This resolution, Mr. Chairman, has had my wholehearted support. The resolution was referred to the House Military Affairs Committee, which committee up to date has not seen fit to take action thereon. I am inclined to feel that now is a most propitious time for this legislation to be passed and I intend to do my utmost to obtain action by the Military Affairs Committee through calling for a vote on this resolution.

As we are all aware, great discussion is going on amongst the nations of the world as to what should be done on an international basis, regarding control of atomic energy. It has been suggested that atomic control vested in a world organization is the best answer as to how we can safely handle this new-found power. The Military Affairs Committee of the House is presently considering the McMahon bill, which sets up a United States commission of five men who would have absolute control of all atomic matters in this Nation.

The other day Bernie Baruch offered to make a deal on the part of the United States for international control of all atomic matters with other nations of the world toward complete abolition of all atom bombs and further atomic developments which might be used as instruments of war. A ready response came from Russia, one of our allies of World War II. As we so well know, Russia up to this time is not equipped nor do they have complete knowledge nor have they been able to keep abreast with the United States in atomic development, and therefore it is easily understandable why they so gladly expressed a willingness to cooperate to the end that military atomic force and development be done away with.

This brings me to my point; namely, that if the nations of the world because of their known lack of information, know-how, or ability to create atomic bombs and weapons are so overwhelmingly willing to support the suggestion by Mr. Baruch that all atomic bombs held by the United States be destroyed and that all atomic energy and development be placed under control of an international organization, then it likewise seems reasonable to me that Russia in particular and other of our allies might well agree through action by the United Nations to cooperate and formulate an agreement which will wholly eliminate compulsory military service as a practice and policy of every nation.

If, I repeat, nations of the world are willing to agree to do away with atomic energy and place development of this destructive power under the control of an international body, with the same reason, Mr. Speaker, and with the same logic, we can and have the right to ask that compulsory military training likewise be done away with on the part of all nations.

I do hope and trust that we can obtain quick favorable action on the Martin resolution to abolish conscription.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think the gentleman has made a most interesting suggestion. I wonder if the gentleman would carry that a little further and suggest international control in the same way of the use of gas and other lethal weapons for conducting war.

Mr. ARENDS. I see no reason why that could not be done, for the simple reason that we are trying to do away with atomic energy and force because it is an instrument of war with which we do not want to deal, and by the same logic we should do away with the other weapons, because our only hope is that we may somehow or other develop a lasting peace in this world.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That might even be carried further if we are going to suggest that Russia apply to her own weapons the same logic which she is proposing in asking us to destroy the atom bomb before we set up controls, and that might even be applied to asking them to abandon compulsory military training as a further solution of the whole problem of postwar military training.

There is one other thing in the gentleman's remarks on which I would like to comment briefly. He referred to $375,000,000 as being more than $1,000,000 per day. Of course, the gentleman is aware of the fact that the appropriation is not based on that rate of expenditure in fiscal 1947. The appropriation is based upon the Budget request for $200,000,000 for fiscal 1947 and a subsequent expenditure in 1948 of $197,000,000, most of which must be contracted in 1947. The committee thought that instead of making an appropriation of $200,000,000 now plus contractual authority for $175,000,000 and then a subsequent appropriation of $197,000,000 for expenditure in 1948 it would be better to make the $375,000,000 appropriation at this time in order to save confusion and double charges of expenditures for this project.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. All I wanted to do was to tell the gentleman that I very much agree with his remarks, and that to prove it I introduced a resolution very similar to the one he mentioned. I believe it is along that road that we have got to travel if we are going to save mankind.

Mr. ARENDS. In our dealing with the UNO, we should take advantage of all these opportunities.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENDS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. There is quite a large sum in this bill for laboratories for the development of the atom bomb; am I correct in that?

Mr. ARENDS. The whole question of atomic energy; yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And they are looking at various Army bases with a view to establishing laboratories.

Mr. ARENDS. They are going on with this development every day, as the gentlewoman knows.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER].

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be brief. After listening to the debate this afternoon I am inclined to vote against this bill, not because I do not believe in an adequate army, and not because I do not believe in national defense, and not because I do not believe in the War Department, because I do believe in all those, and I believe we need them more now than ever before. I think the debate this afternoon challenges consideration on the part of the Members of this House. I refer particularly to the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], in which he pointed out the facts—and I do not know whether he is correct about everything he said—and developed the idea that there was somebody in the higher brackets in the War Department and in the Army who did not know the value of a dollar in peacetime. I am afraid that that is correct.

It seems to me that Congress ought to have better control of the policies of the War Department, and it seems to me that the men in the higher brackets in the War Department ought to recognize and ought to measure up to the responsibilities that rest upon them to the American people. I do not believe they are doing that. Some of them are going to wonder why some day, as to the reason the Members of this House voted against the draft bill, and some will vote against it when it comes along again very shortly for a vote. It is going to be because we do not think they know what they are doing.

When I was listening here this afternoon to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], I thought of that nonsensical report that is now reposing in the files of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of this House in connection with a bill I introduced providing that Congress take over the Inspector General of the Army so that we have somebody over in the War Department and in the Army who could tell Congress the truth, so that Congress could act intelligently. What do you suppose happened? The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] got a letter, of which I have a copy, saying that it would just be too bad if we let the Congress interfere with the policy-making people in charge of the things that really count in the War Department.

I want to say that until and unless we know that we have somebody who is making policies that are correct, Congress had better exercise that prerogative, which started back in the days of George Washington, when Baron Von Steuben was the first Inspector General of the Army, in the Revolutionary War.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not want to minimize at all the salutary effects of the gentleman's remarks, but I think that for the record we ought to differentiate between the appropriation situation on this bill and on the bills throughout the war. During the war we did appropriate large sums, and we had a transfer clause in those bills. It was under the transfer clause that the War Department was able to transfer funds from one purpose to another. It was necessary during the emergencies of the war, we felt, to have a transfer clause because of unexpected situations developing in the stress of battle. However, in this bill the transfer clause has been eliminated and the funds are appropriated under specific terms, so that at least we are trying to prevent the happening under this bill of what perhaps happened during the war.

Mr. PITTENGER. I thank my colleague for his contribution. What I said about having Congress appoint the Inspector General in the Army, who can go out for us and get facts without any fear that the Secretary of War or the high ranking brackets in the War Department will cut his head off if he does not bring us the right kind of a report, is still very much in point. I believe Congress ought to have a closer approach and a closer contact, especially in peacetime, with the expenditure of $7,000,000,000. I do not minimize the importance of the War Department in wartime. We all did support it and trust it.

I have over in my office, Mr. Chairman, newspaper clippings which just came to me, showing pictures of Army vehicles which have been deteriorating for months and months and the implication is that in due time they will become of no value. This is a direct charge of waste. It is a reflection upon the War Department. I wonder if those high-ranking men in the War Department who are asking for $7,000,000,000 in this peacetime world of ours are responsible for letting these Army vehicles rot and go to rack and ruin. These charges that have come to me may not be true. I have requested a report. I know in advance, however, that that report will be a "white-wash," and that nobody is going to admit that anybody made any mistakes. They do not do business that way in the Army. I do not like to criticize, but I want to repeat that the men in whom we placed so much confidence in wartime and the men who had the spending of billions upon billions of dollars in wartime have, in my opinion, failed in almost every way to measure up to their responsibilities to the American people since the close of the war.

I fear that money which they could and did spend, and justify during wartime, will now in peacetime be wasted by men in high command with extravagant ideas. That is exactly what our distinguished colleague from Michigan has told us has been and is being done. How can anyone justify a vote for a large peacetime army in the face of these serious charges which have gone unchallenged on the floor of this House?

If we had an Inspector General of the Army who was appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Representatives, we would then be able to find out the truth about these enormous expenditures. Such a person should be solely responsible to Congress. He should hold office for a definite period of time and he should not be removed except by a concurrent resolution of Congress. He should make reports to Congress. He should represent Congress so that Congress would know what was going on among the policy-making officials in our armed forces. I would not hesitate, so I would start in with the Secretary of War and then give attention to those under him and selected for important and far-reaching responsibilities. If we had such an official, he and his subordinates would have a very wholesome effect upon the professionals in our armed forces, upon those who are indifferent to the fact that the American taxpayer is entitled to consideration and is entitled to have his dollars spent wisely and not wasted as has been charged on the floor of the House today.

So, Mr. Chairman, I urge the enactment of H. R. 5122, Seventy-ninth Congress, a bill which I introduced to place the Inspector General of the Army under the jurisdiction of Congress. Those of you who are interested ought to examine the letter which Mr. Robert P. Patterson, Esq., alias the Secretary of War, wrote under the date of May 21, 1946, to the gentleman from Kentucky, the Honorable ANDREW J. MAY. It is a most rarefying expression of opinion, emanating in the brain of someone tinctured with the doctrine of infallibility, and, reading between the lines, it points rather plainly to the conclusion by the War Department that Congress should attend to its own business and let the brass hats do whatever they like. I do not subscribe to that philosophy, and I shall press for hearings and for a vote on H. R. 5122.

There is a lot more I could say about this bill and to its great advantage, and many things in its favor, but time does not now permit. I am serving notice, however, that you will hear from me again on this subject. Sometimes we have to protect America from its friends, as well as its foes outside the Territorial limits. This bill which I have introduced will serve that purpose.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, the first duty we have in these terribly critical days is to try to prevent war, not to prepare for it. It may be that we have to pass a bill like the present one in order to achieve the end of preventing war. This has been called the American century. What is it going to portend? I was in conversation the other evening with a gentleman who represents here in Washington one of the British Commonwealth nations. He told me the United States is the only Nation in the world that any other nation completely trusts. I believe that is true. I believe in the disturbed times through which we are passing now the strength of the United States can be an extremely important factor making for peace. If this is not the case, then God help our children. It is our solemn duty to make it the case.

One reason a substantial military strength in the United States is necessary is because we are up against a world problem presented by a great dictatorship whose aims and purposes we know not and whose will to expansion seems to be very great indeed. Some limit evidently has to be placed against the expansion of any power if the world is to live at peace—particularly if the freedom of other and weaker peoples is involved. When Secretary Byrnes said as he did to the United Nations that it is impossible to have peace if any nation, however large, can achieve its ends by the use of force, what he said implied that the United Nations would have to be prepared to see that such things did not happen. I know the strength of this country has to be maintained, for some of the reasons I have already given.

But the question still remains whether in the eyes of the rest of the world American power is going to appear as an attempt at American domination or whether it is going to appear as a means of implementing American leadership toward peace. It all depends on whether the forces provided for in this and other bills are held in trust for all mankind or whether they are intended as a constant means to power for this Nation alone. Are we willing, for example, as soon as a balance is established and peace made, to give up the right to decide military policy unilaterally for ourselves and start on the road toward the internationalization not only of atomic weapons but of all weapons of mass destruction? The gentleman from Illinois spoke very ably a few moments ago in answering the question of the gentleman from South Dakota and said he believed that it was along that road that we had to travel. I believe that too, for I know that the alternative to it is an armament race in the development of weapons against which there can be no defense for people behind the lines.

I know that it will be an armament race in the development of weapons which can wipe out civilian populations and the civilization of nations and render utterly impossible the continuance of that kind of free democracy that America has believed in—regardless of the outcome of such a war.

So the question remains after we pass this bill: How hard are we going to work for peace? Peace cannot be won by any appeasement of Russia or by failing to stand up for what this Nation knows to be right under all circumstances; a strong policy is the only one that the Russians will understand. It is the way they operate themselves. But neither can peace possibly result from an armament race, or by permitting the growth of suspicions between nations. Peace can only be won by a policy of give and take, a policy of open, bold dealing, above all, a policy of challenging the world with measures that we know can lead to peace. Once already, indeed in the greatest field of all, America has done that thing and when our representative on the United Nations Atomic Energy Committee made that memorable address which I had the honor to insert in the RECORD, it was the voice of a great nation speaking because that voice said:

> We will throw into the scales for peace everything we have provided only * * * that every nation will accord to an international authority composed of the best scientists, engineers, and others the unlimited right to enter the borders of every nation, to go wherever they will, to control the production of atomic energy and to exercise police power to prevent possession or development of any atomic weapons. For then all peoples can know what is happening in all other countries and their representatives on this authority can go home and assure their people that indeed this agreement is being kept.

I remind the gentleman from Illinois in this respect the American proposal is altogether different from the Russian proposal, which provides for no such international controls.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman very much.

Indeed the whole genius of the American proposal is that all the peoples of the world should be able to know at all times that no other nation is violating the agreement. In other words, America offers, in the field of atomic weapons, a bold new plan for enforceable disarmament.

And now I want to call the attention of the membership to an article appearing in the Reader's Digest, written by William Hard and Andre Visson, entitled "Let Us Get Off the Road to War." I hope every Member of the House will read that article. It calls on us for movements toward peace and away from war. It proposes that instead of fortifying an area like the Aleutian Islands, that we propose that no one fortify any area in the North Pacific, that Russia agree to make no fortifications in that area if we do not, and that both be allowed to satisfy themselves at any time that the agreement is being kept. Instead of fortifying the islands off the coast of China, the article suggests that the United States propose that neither those islands nor Vladivostok nor Port Arthur nor Hong Kong nor any other place bordering China should be fortified, and that China should have a chance to live her own life instead of living under the guns of great powers. The article proposes international control of colonial areas, international control, not necessarily by the United States or Britain or Russia or a great power, but international control by the small free nations of the world in all so-called colonial areas including those which are important sources of raw material, in order that freedom of access to those raw materials may be assured. And in return for that, that we demand the freedom of every people, including Poland, for example, and every other people, to decide their own fate and their own forms of government.

Peace depends upon America's strength in times like these. But it also depends upon America's vision and upon America's demonstrating her will to peace so definitely and so clearly that she challenges every other nation in the world either to join with us or to stand in the position of obstructing peace.

I am going to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD tonight a proposal for a commercial treaty between the United States and Russia. I do it because I think it is necessary that the relationship between this country and all other countries, but above all between this country and Russia, be on an open and above-board basis. Today it is not. I do not know how many Members know it, but Russia is today obtaining most of the things that she wants to rebuild her strength and her economy by the process of paying three or four prices for it in gold. I can submit to you a list of the American corporations that are carrying on that trade. They are some of the biggest ones in the country. Instead of that, what we ought to have is a commercial agreement whereby all American companies would have an equal chance to engage in it, whereby our people, our businessmen, scientists, engineers, yes, our artists and newspapermen, should have access to Russia to the same extent that Russian citizens have access to our country. These and other provisions could be included in such an agreement. They might help to roll up the iron curtain, and if they did it would be a most important move toward peace.

There are some things about the bill before us which I worry about very deeply. I worry because in the bill there is $150,000,000 cut off the appropriation for the feeding of people in areas for which we are responsible; in countries which our armies are occupying. Over against that, and I do not criticize that, but we have greatly increased the appropriation for the development of atomic energy. I know we must continue with the development of atomic energy until such time as some such world program as we ourselves have proposed is accepted by all nations and effective controls are in effect. But the contrast between those two things worries me a great deal. For peace can only be built in a rehabilitated world. America must spell hope. If she does, other nations will prefer our freedom to any other system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute in order to ask a question.

I want to make two things clear. In the first place, the increase in the appropriation for atomic energy is not an increase for the fiscal year.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I understand that. And may I say again I believe that item for atomic energy is, as matters stand today, quite necessary. I wish with all my soul it were not, but I believe it is.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The $150,000,000 reduction in the item to which the gentleman referred earlier is not a reduction of $150,000,000 in the program for feeding people, but it is a reduction in the combined item for government of occupied countries as well as the relief program. It should be made clear that we do not contemplate that the $150,000,000 is to be entirely cut off from the food item.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. But the bulk of it will, because most of that expenditure has been and is for food. It is less than the amount the Army asked for and less than the Budget asked for.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The item that is in the bill maintains the same rate of expenditure that is currently being carried on. It was the feeling of the committee that if $30,000,000 a month is the amount we are spending now, the fact that improvement which we naturally expect in the rehabilitation of the economy of the captured countries should make that enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield the gentleman from California another minute.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I have read the testimony of the Army officers on this question, notably the testimony of General Echols. As I understand it, this figure was asked for because last year the Army did not take the responsibility for this feeding until toward the end of the year. I understand further that the present ration is far below what they believe it ought to be if there is to be a chance for so-called democracy in those regions, and that it was the opinion of the Army that they needed that full amount for this purpose. I feel that if we are going to do the kind of constructive job that I have been appealing for, that America must not only be strong but she must see clearly that democracy and freedom and hope for peace grow in a soil where people have at least enough to nourish them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time during consideration of peacetime appropriations for the War Department to bring up the matter of automobiles for the amputees and paraplegics in order that they may be rehabilitated, in order that those who have lost their mobility may be gainfully employed and will be able to compete with other people—both veterans and civilians—who have retained their mobility.

At the time we sent these men to war we appropriated billions of dollars without hesitation for the building of tanks and all sorts of mechanical equipment for these men to use in their fighting, also equipment and vehicles they might be shot down in. These amputees are the very visible effects of the war; they are the battle-injured.

The bill provides an initial automobile for these men. That is all they ask. I wish it could be reported out of the Appropriations Committee for I am sure that the House would adopt it unanimously.

To tell the truth, we have not gone very far in improving prosthetic appliances or in giving these men artificial limbs with which they can get about. I believe a little progress is being made; that more will be accomplished in a year's time.

An automobile supplements the artificial leg, and it takes at least a year or two for the men to be able to use their prosthetic appliances. I am going to ask to insert in the RECORD a little later a letter which describes just what happened to one man before he had an automobile for transportation but had to depend on his artificial limb alone, which did not fit, and what happened to him after he received his automobile.

The following is the letter I have referred to, also an editorial from the Washington Post, also a suggested bill by the Veterans of Foreign Wars:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

MRS. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
Representative from Massachusetts,
Capitol Hill, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MRS. ROGERS: I would like to place before you the case history of my son, a 20-year-old amputee of World War II, in the belief that it will give factual aid in support of your bill advocating care for amputees.

Don was discharged from Walter Reed Hospital last December 8, 1945, after being hospitalized a year. He walked very well on his GI leg, but always carried a cane as it gave him a feeling of greater security in a crowd. He had ordered an Oldsmobile hydromatic last August when he became convinced that he could never drive a standard gear shift car, but had given up hope of its delivery because of the strikes. Being strong and active and having many friends in Washington, he managed very well until he went back to college in February. Then he was put to the real test. Could he take his place in civilian life equipped with a pair of crutches, an artificial limb and a pension? The answer was definitely "no."

Due to greater activity after his discharge his stump changed shape, so that his GI leg was too big. He immediately ordered his first civilian leg although it was sooner than he had expected to do so. His stump became bruised from the ill-fitting leg. His hip became so strained that he developed a deep limp. His gait was so clumsy that he appeared to be a victim of paralysis rather than a rehabilitated amputee. In this condition he started back to college at M. U. Although he had transportation from home to school, he had to make his way up three flights of stairs, between buildings and to the lunch room on his own. The strain was beyond endurance, but rather than give up, he took off his leg and went back to crutches. This left no free hands to carry books, etc., so he tied his satchel to his crutches, always looking forward to the completion of the new leg as the hour of his deliverance, but when the new leg was ready (after two months) his stump had swelled from using crutches, and he couldn't get it on—it was more hopeless than the GI leg.

Don is not a boy who accepts defeat readily. He goes down swinging. In a last desperate attempt to meet this new kind of life which was not of his choosing, he wrote a group of letters to General Motors Corp., Mrs. McLean, and Henry Ford, asking the first two to aid him in buying a showroom model of the car he had ordered even though OPA had not fixed the price and asking the latter if Ford cars (which were being delivered) would be equipped with automatic clutches. He received very kind letters from the first two, but Mr. Ford sent him a car equipped with an automatic clutch without further exchange of formalities. This he gladly paid for with money he had saved for the Olds.

I cannot express to you in words the difference the car made in this boy's life. For the first time in a year he could go where and as far and as fast as he wished to go, without depending on someone else. A whole new world opened up and, best of all, the strain on his hip and stump was removed because he rode every place, except up the steps. He shrunk his stump so that he could wear his new leg. He discarded canes entirely, and from teachers, neighbors, friends, everyone, came the same exclamation, "Doesn't he walk well since he has had his car." And it is true! The casual observer would never know he is an amputee, although his leg is off above the knee.

His story could end here with everyone happy, but there is an anticlimax. Two weeks ago he got the Oldsmobile he ordered so long ago, and was able to pass the Ford along to a fine boy at Forest Glen who had money saved with which to buy it. I know he will be saved much discouragement and suffering because he will start civilian life with four wheels to supplement his crutches and prosthesis—the two things given him with which to face a swiftly moving, not too sympathetic, highly mechanized world.

Now my son is completely satisfied, but what about the boys who, through no fault of their own, do not have $1,200 to $1,500 to buy a car? Some of my son's money was overseas pay, but some of these boys were wounded a week after getting overseas. Some have home responsibilities. Some are poor managers. If they cannot be given cars when discharged, a program of supervised saving should be put into effect, because I am absolutely convinced that no amputee can take his place in civilian life without a car which he can drive.

You have my sincere thanks, Mrs. ROGERS, for your interest in our disabled boys. You will be remembered always by them, because of your help and kindness.

Very sincerely,

GENEVIEVE ADDOR,
Mother of an Amputee.

[From the Washington Post of June 21, 1946]

CARS FOR AMPUTEES

A number of bills authorizing the furnishing of automobiles to seriously disabled veterans are now before committees of Congress. Hearings currently are in progress on H. R. 6304, introduced by Representative EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, and various amputees have been called upon to present their case. It seems to us they have a good one. And if this assistance is to be of the most benefit to veterans, the measure ought to be passed in this session of Congress.

Cars for amputees and other similarly afflicted, in our opinion, should be considered not as a disguised bonus, but rather as additional prosthetics. The bills in Congress amount to recognition that existing prosthetics are inadequate to give amputees and paralytics the best chance possible for rehabilitation. Good transportation is a semi-necessity for such veterans to compete in ordinary jobs. The hazards for amputees involved in riding crowded streetcars and busses are obvious. Under the Rogers bill up to $1,500 is authorized for the purchase of an automobile in each case. The Government rightly would assume no responsibility for maintenance or replacement. Certain automobile manufacturers and dealers already are cooperating by giving disabled veterans priorities and by making available specially equipped vehicles.

Some important questions remain to be settled; for instance, just what constitutes a major disability. It is important to determine just how great a degree of paralysis or how much of an amputation qualifies a veteran—whether loss of, say, a hand warrants this special consideration. Likewise, there is the question of whether such assistance is to be made retroactive for veterans of previous wars. The Rogers bill provides that at the option of the veteran concerned or the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, a payment in lieu of an automobile may be made. This seems to us open to the charge that it constitutes a bonus. If automobiles are to be actually additional prosthetic devices, they should be considered as such and distributed only to persons who can use them. Part of the objection might be eliminated by following one suggestion already made, i. e., to issue vouchers for cars instead of making actual cash payments to veterans.

The following is a copy of a bill suggested by the Veterans of Foreign Wars:

A bill to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to furnish funds for the purchase of an automobile by certain disabled veterans, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be available to any veteran having a service incurred disability due to loss, or loss of use of, one or more limbs, a credit not to exceed $1,500 toward the purchase price of an automobile, which amount shall be payable to the seller by the Veterans' Administration upon the submission of evidence as to the value of the automobile involved, the terms of the sales agreement, and evidence that a good title will pass to the veteran upon complete settlement of the purchase price;

Provided, That the Administrator may issue such rules and regulations as may be appropriate to accomplish the purpose of this act which is to facilitate the rehabilitation of such veterans by enabling them to purchase an automobile for their own use;

And provided further, That only one such payment on the purchase price of an automobile shall be made for the benefit of any one veteran.

SEC. 2. The penal provisions under Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, as amended, shall be for application under this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN].

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise now merely to ask the chairman or some member of the subcommittee a question which I brought up before the full committee on yesterday relative to the use of funds in this or any other appropriation bill for a purpose not authorized by law. I have in mind the 30-cent bonus that has been promised to wheat growers in order to induce them to turn loose their wheat. I am not discussing the merits of the bonus pro or con, but it was not authorized by Congress and therefore not authorized by law. So far as I know Congress was not even consulted; consequently I believe it would be in order to have a provision in this bill (which calls for the expenditure of $350,000,000 for the procurement of food) against any possibility of Congress finding itself committed to a procedure that they have not authorized or even discussed. I am wondering whether this proviso on page 17 of the bill, line 3, will cover this situation. I will read it and I would like to get an answer.

Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for the payment of any subsidy on agricultural or other products.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The language which the gentleman has read will clearly take care of the situation with which he is concerned. It is true this particular proviso appears under the subheading entitled "Subsistence of the Army" and under the main head "Quartermaster's Service, Army," but the language does say that none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for the payment of any subsidy on agricultural or other products, consequently would be controlling over the appropriation for government and relief in occupied areas, which is the $350,000,000 item to which the gentleman had addressed his amendment in the full committee the other day.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Why would any Government official, regardless of how high he might be in the Government, authorize an expenditure of 30 cents a bushel in order to get the farmers to sell their grain? Nothing like that should be undertaken by any official of government without proper authorization. The gentleman does not mean to tell me now that someone in the Government did that without authority, does he?

Mr. HORAN. I would prefer that that be answered by someone else. I am trying to ask that question myself.

Mr. RICH. It seems to me if anyone in the Government did such a thing as that he ought to be taken out of the office which he holds because no man should spend a dollar of funds that belongs to the Treasury of the United States unless he is authorized to do so.

Mr. HORAN. May I say that the Appropriations Committee is determined that the unauthorized use of funds shall not continue in the future, and I am glad to get this expression from the subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of the Army: For pay and allowances of the Army of the United States, including pay of Reserve officers and officers of the National Guard of the United States ordered to active duty under the provisions of section 37a and the fourth paragraph of section 38 of the National Defense Act, as amended; pay of civilian employees at military headquarters; allowances for quarters for enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available; interest on soldiers' deposits; payment of life-insurance premiums authorized by law; payment of exchange fees and exchange losses incurred by disbursing officers or their agents; repayment of amounts determined by the Secretary of War, or officers designated by him, to have been erroneously collected from military and civilian personnel in and under the Military Establishment; and losses in the accounts of Army disbursing officers in accordance with the acts of December 13, 1944 (31 U. S. C. 95a) and December 23, 1944 (50 U. S. C. 1705–1707); $2,375,000,000: Provided, That the appropriations contained in this act shall not be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by nonflying officers at a rate in excess of $720 per annum, which shall be the legal maximum rate as to such officers, and such nonflying officers shall be entitled to such rate of increase by performing three or more flights within each 90-day period, pursuant to orders of competent authority, without regard to the duration of such flight or flights: Provided further, That, during the continuance of the present war and for 6 months after the termination thereof, a flying officer as defined under existing law shall include flight surgeons, and commissioned officers or warrant officers while undergoing flying training: Provided further, That section 212 of the act of June 30, 1932 (5 U. S. C. 59a), shall not apply to retired military personnel on duty at the United States Soldiers' Home: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, no officer of the Army shall be entitled to receive an addition to his pay in consequence of the provisions of the act approved May 11, 1908 (10 U. S. C. 803): Provided further, That provisions of law prohibiting the payment of any person not a citizen of the United States shall not apply to military and civilian personnel in and under the Military Establishment: Provided further, That without deposit to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States and withdrawal on money requisitions, receipts of public moneys from sales or other sources by officers of the Army on disbursing duty and charged in their official accounts, except receipts to be credited to river and harbor and flood-control appropriations, may be used by them as required for current expenditures, all necessary bookkeeping adjustments of appropriations, funds, and accounts to be made in the settlement of their disbursing accounts: Provided further, That no collection or reclamation shall be made by the United States on account of any money paid to assignees, transferees, or allottees, or to others for them, under assignments, transfers, or allotments of pay and allowances made under authority of law where liability might exist with respect to such assignments, transfers, or allotments, or the use of such moneys, because of the death of the assignor, transferor, or allotter: Provided further, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be used for any expense pertaining to (1) the instruction, education, or training of class IV-E conscientious objectors in colleges, (2) the service of such conscientious objectors outside the United States, its Territories and possessions, (3) the transportation of such conscientious objectors to or from any college or any such service, or (4) the compensation of military or civilian personnel performing any services with respect to the matters set forth in (1), (2), or (3) above after the enactment of this act, except any services which may be necessary promptly to terminate any such class IV-E conscientious-objector college or foreign-service projects existing on the date of the enactment of this act.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUCK: On page 5 strike out lines 12 to 16, inclusive, and line 17 through the word "flights."

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, deletion of the lines I propose to strike out would eliminate flight pay for nonflying officers. I believe this type of pay has become a racket and a scandal in the eyes of the public. That was emphasized very recently when a plane carrying officers on a joy ride for the purpose of maintaining flight pay status crashed into a bank in Manhattan and killed everybody on board.

Let us examine this provision in the bill in a little detail. It provides $720 a year or $60 a month for these non-flying officers. If you follow the wording of the bill, a man could get into a plane, have it take off the ground for a second or two, land, and collect $60 a month. It just does not make good sense and does not make for proper Government administration.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, the basic law provides flying pay to the extent of 50 percent of the pay of the military personnel involved. This provision in the bill limits the flying pay to $720 per annum—$60 per month.

In other words, this action on the part of the committee in inserting this provision into the bill conserves money rather than permitting a much larger sum, which would be far greater than $720 a year, for this flight pay. So, if the language should be stricken from the bill, it seems to me that then it would be permissible to expend flight pay to the extent of 50 percent of the man's salary. In other words, the gentleman is not accomplishing what he seeks to accomplish by his amendment.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BUCK. My language would leave in the bill the words:

Provided, That the appropriations contained in this act shall not be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by nonflying officers.

That stays in. My amendment would strike out beginning with line 12 down to the word "flights" on line 17.

Mr. MAHON. In other words, the gentleman leaves in, "Provided, That the appropriations contained in this act shall not be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by nonflying officers at a rate in excess of $720 per annum."

Mr. BUCK. No, ending with "nonflying officers."

Mr. MAHON. Well, then, I am probably in error in my conclusion as to the import of the gentleman's amendment. Of course, this is in compliance with the law that flight pay is required, and it seems to me that an appropriation bill is not the place in which we should undertake to change the basic law of the land with respect to flight pay.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Is this the provision which deals with the flying pay of doctors and flight surgeons?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, that immediately follows this provision.

Mr. MAHON. I think the gentleman's amendment should be voted down and that the Committee on Military Affairs should study the matter. If it sees fit to do so, now that flying is less hazardous than it once was, they can change the basic law. I think a change in the basic law might well be in order in view of the circumstances.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the gentleman was in error when he said that you could take off and land and get flight pay. They are required, I believe, to make three series of flights every 90 days. The purpose of this is not to give them something for nothing. These are men who have to deal with the Air Forces. They have to keep up with the latest developments in flying by directions of our Air Forces. I think we should keep them flying. They have to fly in order to know what to do with their new developments. We are not giving them something for nothing. As to a nonflying officer, it does not mean that he is not flying all the time. It does not mean that he has nothing to do with the Air Forces. He is an officer that has to keep up with all the latest developments of the Air Forces and has to fly so many hours each 90 days to collect that pay.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the wording of the bill is "without regard to the duration of such flight or flights."

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is my understanding that they have to fly so much. I do not know how that language got in there, but I know I talked to an official of the War Department about it, and they have to fly so many hours to collect that pay. They are the men who have to keep up with all the latest developments in the Air Forces.

Mr. MAHON. Let me read the basic law:

Officers, warrant officers, nurses, and enlisted men of any of the services mentioned in the title of this act and members of the Reserve forces of such services, and the National Guard shall receive an increase of 50 percent of their pay when by orders of competent authority they are required to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights, and when in consequence of such orders they do participate in regular and frequent flights as defined by such Executive orders as have heretofore been, or may hereafter be, promulgated by the President.

So that is the law of the land. The committee reduced the basic law provision of 50 percent to $60 per month.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The effect of this amendment will be to knock out all extra pay for nonflying officers who are carried up in the air, that is all. It would not, however, affect at all the operations of the flyers who actually have to fly in connection with their work. This thing has been abused to such an extent that it really needs attention. I think it is a good amendment.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from New York to section 18 of the Pay Readjustment Act as amended June 1, 1945. This act provides that these men may receive a maximum additional pay up to 50 percent of their base salary. With that in mind, what the committee has attempted to do here is to put a limitation upon the increased pay that may be received for this kind of service so that under no circumstances can they pay a person more than $720 extra in 1 year's time. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is adopted, then there is no limitation on the money that can be paid by the War Department.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I am afraid the gentleman does not understand the amendment. The amendment is that all after line 11 shall be stricken out. It knocks out all increased pay for aerial flights by nonflying officers. That would be the effect of it.

Mr. NORRELL. The basic law provides an increase of 50 percent. If you knock out the words beginning in line 12, "at a rate in excess of $720 per annum," I think you leave the thing open for the basic law to operate, and in place of limiting them to $720 the War Department can pay them 50 percent of their base salary.

Mr. TABER. I think that the gentleman's construction of that part of it is correct.

Mr. NORRELL. That is exactly what you are doing. In place of decreasing the earnings of the man you are making it possible for him to get an increase up to 50 percent, whereas the committee puts a limitation there of $720 a year.

Mr. TABER. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the following language beginning on page 5 in line 17 is legislation on an appropriation bill:

Provided further, That, during the continuance of the present war and for 6 months after the termination thereof, a flying officer as defined under existing law shall include flight surgeons, and commissioned officers or warrant officers while undergoing flying training.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK] offered an amendment to that paragraph and it was debated and voted down.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1947 the dependents and household effects of such military and civilian personnel (without regard to rank or grade) in and under the Military Establishment on duty at stations outside the continental limits of the United States, or in Alaska, as may be determined upon by the Secretary of War, may, prior or subsequent to the issuance of orders for the relief of such personnel from their stations, or subsequent to the discharge or release of such military personnel from active military service, be moved (including packing and unpacking of household effects) from such stations outside the continental limits of the United States, or in Alaska, to such locations as may be designated by such personnel, by the use of either Government or commercial means of transportation, and later from such locations to the duty stations to which such personnel may be ordered, and current appropriations of the Military Establishment available for travel and transportation may be used for this purpose, the decision of the Secretary of War to be final as to the dependency of any individual sought to be affected by this provision except as to travel performed subsequent to arrival in the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, in prescribing per diem rates of allowance in accordance with law for officers and warrant officers of the Army of the United States traveling on official business and away from their designated posts of duty, is hereby authorized to prescribe such per diem rates of allowance, whether or not orders are given to such officers for travel to be performed repeatedly between two or more places in the same vicinity, and without regard to the length of time away from their designated posts of duty under such orders, and also the actual and necessary expenses or per diem in lieu thereof as he may determine and approve for military and civilian personnel in and under the Military Establishment on special duty in foreign countries;

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make the observation that if this bill is disposed of today I intend to ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns we adjourn to meet on Monday next. If the bill is not disposed of, we will have to meet tomorrow.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to suggest that if anyone contemplates offering any amendments or raising points of order that we might dispense with further reading of the bill at this time and have it open to points of order or amendment at any point in the bill. I do not like to do that on an appropriation bill but it is getting so late that perhaps we should do that if there is no objection. There is not any desire in that connection to wipe out the right of any Member to make a point of order or offer any amendments.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered as read and that, first of all, points of order may be in order according to the section numbers, and, secondly, that amendments likewise be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order to section 1?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I understood that points of order as well as amendments would be in order according to the numbering of the sections in the bill. I assume the first request would be with reference to section 1. I have a point of order or an amendment.

Mr. NORRELL. The request was to commence where we are now in the bill and then proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order with reference to section 1?

Are there any amendments with reference to section 1?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 52.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS of California: On page 52, line 15, strike out "$350,000,000" and insert "$500,000,000."

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to restore the Budget estimate and the Army's request for the item entitled, "Government of Occupied Areas and Relief in Occupied Areas."

We have a bill of great size for the Army of the United States. We have a very large appropriation in the bill for the development of atomic energy. The reasons we are doing these things is because we believe that America has got to be a force for peace in the world and because we want her to remain strong, we even want her to remain active in the field of the development of atomic energy until such time as she, by her own motion and the acceptance of that motion by other nations, can make possible the building of a true structure of peace.

Mr. Chairman, from the same point of view I offer this amendment. I do not do so out of any discourtesy to the committee, I can assure you of that. But I have read those portions of the hearings which have a bearing upon this matter and I am convinced that the money is needed if we are to properly discharge our responsibility to the people in those occupied areas where we have complete responsibility for what happens to those people. I take it that our objective in those areas is the development among the people of a way of life and a structure of government which will prevent their ever seeking to go to war again. I take it that America wants to develop, if possible, the institutions of freedom and democracy in those nations to the greatest possible extent. I submit that the alternative may well be between the embracing of some form of dictatorship, such as Communism in those nations on the one hand, or a reasonably adequate provision for the needs of the people in this period of difficult transition, upon the other.

Assuming, therefore, that it is to America's interest to see to it that we discharge as well as possible our obligation to those people for whose whole destiny we are presently responsible, I offer this amendment.

I understand one reason the committee cut this was because they said there was a crop coming along. That of course is true, but in Secretary Patterson's own testimony on the bill, Secretary Patterson explained as follows. He said:

Our calculations take into account the indigenous production of the country itself.

A little later on he stated:

Our purpose is to maintain a steady ration, which in Germany today I believe is 1,250 calories.

As a matter of fact, it is not even 1,200 calories today; although the Army's aim is to have a ration of 1,500 calories. According to the testimony of General Echols, even that would be substantially below the rations of the countries surrounding Germany.

In Japan, according again to General Echols' testimony, General MacArthur is having a most difficult time with the rations in that country at even 900 calories per day.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. The record will also disclose that it was costing $30,000,000 per month to administer this program and is costing $30,000,000 per month to administer it. In view of all the circumstances, the committee felt that economies should be made and that the amount provided would be adequate to meet the situation.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I appreciate what the gentleman says. But in answer to his point, General Echols said in the hearings:

The principal increase in this appropriation for 1947 over 1946 is for food. We did not take over the problem of feeding Japan or Germany until relatively late in this year. In addition to that, we have not been able to get the food which was actually required to support those areas, and the 1947 estimate is based on the assumption that we will support a ration of 1,550 calories in the United States zone in Germany and 1,350 calories in Japan, which is distinctly higher than the ration levels in those areas now.

Again he said:

Our own particular area which was never able to feed itself and which has a large increase in population requires food imports.

He says again:

The countries surrounding Germany with the exception of Austria are on more than 1,500 calories today.

And then the gentleman from South Dakota asked him some questions as to whether the rations in some of the concentration camps were not almost as much as the people in the occupied areas are now getting. And the answer was that those rations were between 800 and 900 calories a day. It seemed to me in reading the discussion that the gentleman from South Dakota was as concerned about this problem as I am.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment is not intended to feed people luxuriously; my amendment is intended to make it possible to maintain a high enough ration to prevent disease, suffering, and unrest in those countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee went into this item very thoroughly and very carefully. The Department said very conclusively that they were using $30,000,000 monthly to take care of the situation. Not only that but these people are now at work and they are to a large extent taking care of themselves. Some of us who have been over there and know something about it know they are not starving. They are getting to work and they are contributing largely to their own support. With the aid of this appropriation they will be taken care of handsomely.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I had the privilege of talking this week with a colonel who was in the military government of the American occupied zone of Germany. He has charge of the agricultural extension work. He pointed out to me that the floor space of my front office would cover every inch of ground that was not in cultivation in that area that ever had been cultivated. He said, furthermore, that they had established a fertilizer factory and whereas it had been calculated they would produce 25 percent of their needs for the current crop year they had actually worked so continuously day and night in that factory that it was producing 50 percent of their needs.

Mr. KERR. I want to say to the gentleman that as a matter of fact from my own observation most of the German farm land is rich enough to produce wonderful crops without any fertilizer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICH: On page 21, line 22, after the word "station" strike out "$475,000,000" and insert "$375,000,000."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, let me read from the report of the committee:

Transportation service: The committee proposes a reduction of $49,664,256 in the appropriation item for transportation service leaving $475,000,000 for such purpose during the coming fiscal year. The amount requested is approximately one-third of the amount that has been appropriated for this purpose each year for the past 3 years although the emergency conditions have ceased to exist. The size of the Army is to be about one-fifth the size it was during the peak of the emergency.

Mr. Chairman, if the Army is to be one-fifth the size it was during the war, and if we appropriated $1,785,000,000 for transportation services during the war, one-fifth of that amount would be $357,000,000. I cannot understand why the committee put in $475,000,000 when $357,000,000 should be sufficient. I have therefore offered an amendment striking from this appropriation just $100,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, every Member of Congress knows that during the war there was more transportation of soldiers than was absolutely necessary. A soldier started in at Boston and we would send him out to San Francisco. They did not want him there except for a week or so and they would ship him back to Washington and from Washington they would ship him out to Michigan. We had a great many men traveling over the country during wartime, probably because of the fact there were so many of them it was difficult to keep from moving them back and forth all over the country.

We have come now to the time when we ought to know why these men are traveling for the Army and we ought to make every traveled mile count. We ought to save everything we can in transportation cost.

I am allowing $17,000,000 more than the average that we used during previous years and it seems to me that we can strike $100,000,000 from this item. If for any reason the Army finds it does not have money enough, they can come back and ask for a supplemental appropriation later on. This will say to the Army, "We are through permitting all this unnecessary travel."

Mr. Chairman, I think my amendment ought to be adopted and I hope the committee will agree to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that during the war, the last fiscal year, we appropriated approximately $2,000,000,000 for that item, at a time when the Navy was transporting a lot of Army goods and personnel. This year the Budget reduced the item down to $524,644,256, approximately four-fifths of what they had last year. The committee cut this item to the tune of $49,664,256.

We think we have made the most drastic cut anywhere in this entire bill on the item of transportation, and I care not to consume the time of the committee further.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRELL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. On page 390 of the hearings it will be shown that the subject of commercial ocean transportation was discussed. Last year for commercial ocean transportation the sum of $2,000,000, plus, was expended. This year the War Department is asking for $133,000,000 for commercial ocean transportation. That is where a large part of this money will go and that is brought about by this fact, that during the war and immediately after the end of the war these men and supplies were transported by the Navy and by the War Shipping Administration, and that expense was not charged to the War Department appropriation bill. But beginning July 1, 1946, the Army has got to pay its own way on commercial ships. That is the reason that this tremendous increase was brought about for this particular item. Of course, as the gentleman from Arkansas has so well pointed out, the over-all item for transportation was drastically cut, as it should have been for fiscal 1946.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRELL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If you take $1,785,000,000 annually for the last 3 years, and you cut the Army down so it receives only one-fifth as much as it received during any one of those 3 years, one-fifth of the amount would be $357,000,000, so why give them $474,000,000? If you give them $375,000,000 you are giving them more than $19,000,000 over and above the average necessary to transport the necessary personnel, and therefore you ought to cut down that appropriation. I have tried to be liberal now in cutting it down $100,000,000.

Mr. MAHON. There is no comparable item during this year for commercial ocean transportation, because we did not use extensively commercial ocean transportation. It is now that the war is over, and beginning on July 1, that we will be employing these ships to do this transportation job.

Mr. RICH. Can we not teach the Army a lesson to not ship the boys back and forth over the country and make every mile count? Let us economize a little.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRELL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. As a matter of fact, if the bill remains as is and there should be more than required, it will revert back to the Treasury anyway. I do not like to cut the item down that is going to mean the transportation of our own boys back and forth here. But, if there is too much, the saving will be turned back to the Treasury anyway.

Mr. NORRELL. I think the item has been cut too much now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments or points of order to section 1?

Are there any points of order to section 2?

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against section 2 on page 5, which is plainly legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KERR. I do not care to be heard, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any member of the committee desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the language is clearly a limitation. It is not legislation.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, the whole point of the section is to discourage a supervisory employee from putting into effect efficient operation. Further, it is entirely contradictory to the provision in section 16, on pages 64 and 65, whereby efficiency is to be increased. The two just do not go together.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. THOMASON in the chair). On March 28, 1924, the Army appropriation bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union when the Clerk read a paragraph similar to this, which was held to be a limitation rather than legislation. Therefore, the point of order is overruled.

Are there any amendments to section 2?

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUCK: On page 56, strike out section 2.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I cannot see any valid reason for having language in the bill such as that contained in section 2. Any manager, any superintendent, any foreman, or any other person having charge of work in a Government plant would be restrained and discouraged under this language from taking any measures which would increase the efficiency and the effectiveness of that plant. The language adds nothing to the bill. As I remarked a few minutes ago, it is entirely contradictory to the intent of section 16, which appears on pages 64 and 65. This is a day in our Government when we need greater effectiveness and greater efficiency rather than less efficiency and less effectiveness. I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order to section 3?

Are there any amendments to section 3?

Are there any points of order to section 4?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order against section 4 as a whole in order that I may address myself to the chairman of the committee and ask him about the acceptance of an amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the portion of section 4 which I think does not quite carry out what the committee really had in mind is that carried in line 14 and 15, which would make appropriations for the military establishment carried in this bill available for carrying into effect the provisions of paragraph 8 of Executive Order 9630 of September 27, 1945.

It has been pointed out to some of us that that might make it possible for the Department of State to dictate to the War Department how much they should expend on handling surplus property through the Foreign Liquidation Commission. In view of that fact, I had thought that I might make a point of order against the entire paragraph because of legislative language contained therein, and reoffer it with this portion eliminated. However, after consultation with the chairman and other members of the committee, it has been suggested that it might be better simply to place a limitation on the amount of money that may be used. Consequently, I shall not make the point of order if the chairman assures me that he will accept an amendment to place a limitation in there in advance of line 14 which would read "and not exceeding $40,000,000", that being the approximate amount carried in the break-down submitted to us in the hearings at pages 109 and 110, under project classification of "Care and Handling Surplus Property."

There is some doubt, I may say, as to whether that table was intended to indicate foreign or domestic surplus property handling. In any event, I feel that there should be a limitation on the extent to which an office in the State Department can direct the expenditure of War Department funds. I have based the figure $40,000,000 on the break-down called to my attention by the clerk on pages 109 and 110 of the hearings.

Mr. KERR. The amount there is $48,000,000.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I realize that it is $48,000,000, but, in looking at the appropriation titles, I note there are several on which we reduced the total amount carried in the bill under those heads. If we were to make this limitation $48,000,000 we would be granting the full amount for the State Department's part and force the entire reduction on the War Department. I thought $40,000,000 would permit a proportionate reduction to be made.

Also, if we should find, as I suspect we may, that this table was not intended to apply to care and handling of surplus property abroad by the War Department for the Foreign Liquidation Commission of the State Department, the question will have been raised and can be considered in the other body. At least, we are better off with a limitation on the amount that can be used than without it. I understand the State Department is asking $120,000,000 for the Foreign Liquidation Commission from the deficiency subcommittee. Certainly we do not want the State Department to take that amount from this bill and the language is wide open as it stands.

Mr. KERR. We are willing to accept the gentleman's figures and his amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota withdraws the point of order.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: On page 57, after line 13, insert the following language: "And not exceeding $40,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments to section 4?

Are there any points of order against section 5? Are there any amendments to section 5?

Are there any points of order against section 6? Are there any amendments to section 6?

Are there any points of order against section 7? Are there any amendments to section 7?

Are there any points of order against section 8? Are there any amendments to section 8?

Are there any points of order against section 9? Are there any amendments to section 9?

Are there any points of order against section 10? Are there any amendments to section 10?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, section 10 is the customary section which has been carried in the appropriation bills for a number of years to deny the availability of funds in the appropriation bills for a number of persons who are members of organizations who advocate the overthrow of the Government by force or violence. That particular language has been expanded recently in the amendments carried in the other body to apply to those who engage in strikes against the Government or those who are members of an organization of Government employees which asserts the right to strike against the Government. Those amendments are being added to all of the appropriation bills which we have sent to the other body. Many of us have thought that a similar expansion of this language should be carried here. I have prepared the amendments to this section to accomplish that purpose. I wonder if the chairman would be disposed to accept them at this time?

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, it is agreeable to accept the gentleman's amendments.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, my amendment at page 62, line 5, after the word "who" is to insert the appropriate language dealing with engaging in or supporting strikes against the Government, and in line 12, again after the word "who", to insert the same appropriate language, and in line 9, after the word "affidavit", to insert the appropriate language for inclusion in the affidavits required under this section. The language which is being submitted is the language taken from the official print of a bill that has been amended in the other body and will make this entire section conform with the language being used in other appropriation bills in the other body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: On page 62, line 5, after "who" insert "engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 62, line 9, after "affidavit" insert "has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or that such person."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota, Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: Page 62, line 12, after the word "who" insert "engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order or amendments to section 11?

Are there any points of order or amendments to section 12?

Are there any points of order or amendments to section 13?

Are there any points of order or amendments to section 14?

Are there any points of order or amendments to section 15?

Are there any points of order or amendments to section 16?

Are there any points of order or amendments to section 17?

Are there any points of order or amendments to section 18?

Are there any points of order or amendments to section 19?

Are there any points of order or amendments to section 20?

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMASON, Chairman of the Committe of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6837) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Hardy, national commander of the American Veterans' of World War II, asking that a veteran be appointed in Mr. Klutznick's place because there are so many veterans who are in these houses.

Mr. NORBLAD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ADAMS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

NEW HAMPSHIRE HAS ITS ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHTH BIRTHDAY

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, in the old North Meeting House at Concord, N. H., 158 years ago today, an event took place which stands as one of the important landmarks of the history of the United States of America and of the entire world. On that date, June 21, 1788, the State of New Hampshire ratified the Constitution of the United States; and, by being the ninth State to do so, made valid the greatest document ever drawn by the hand of man, providing for the principles under which a free people were to be voluntarily governed. It is well to take a periodic account of stock so that the people of this country, now a nation of 140,000,000 shareholders in the greatest business on earth—the Government of the United States—may have a regular and frequent appraisal of their assets, and of those things which imperil as well as those which foster and increase them.

The stake which every American citizen has in his own Government is greater than that which he has in any other enterprise on earth, for without political freedom dearly bought by the founders and protectors of this Republic the personal freedom and rights of the individual cannot exist. Our own John Langdon, who signed the Constitution, recognized this principle when, in the most critical hour of the Revolutionary War, he pledged a considerable portion of his wealth to equip Gen. John Stark and his men so that they might halt the British Army under General Burgoyne in its drive into the Champlain Valley from the north. Langdon at that time observed that if the American cause was won he would doubtless be reimbursed but that if it was lost his own estate would be quite worthless. Let me, therefore, call to mind on this occasion, in the position of a self-appointed auditor, a list of some of the more important assets of the State of New Hampshire and to call public attention to the services which she has rendered to the United States and the world, and particularly to the wealth of men and material which she has contributed to the preservation and welfare of this great Republic.

By comparison, New Hampshire is a small State; so small in area that 37 States of its size could be located within the boundaries of Texas; small in the number of its citizens, since it has only one twenty-seventh of the population of the State of New York. But it is, and has been, traditionally great in those things which do not depend upon the factors of size and number for their significance.

With the possible exceptions of ancient Greece and Switzerland, it is doubtful if any State of either ancient or modern times, located within so small an area and with a comparable population, has more decisively affected the course of history or contributed more to human civilization than has the State of New Hampshire.

From the time of its first settlement at Odiorne's Point in 1623 until the present, New Hampshire has marked its progress in the accomplishments of its sons and daughters, always keeping vigilant guard over the liberties and possessions of all our citizens as she has over her own heritage.

During the century and a half while this State was a colony under British rule, its hardy settlers ably defended themselves against Indian attacks and French encroachments that culminated in the Seven Years' War of 1754–61 between France and Great Britain, waged on American soil.

In 1745, 300 sons of the Granite State under William Vaughan joined in the successful storming of the French fortress of Louisburg on Cape Breton Island.

Nine years later, in 1754, four delegates of this State met with delegates from the other American colonies at Albany to draw up plans for their cooperative defense and union.

In 1759 the British under Wolfe defeated the French under Montcalm on the Plains of Abraham; and in October of that year Maj. Robert Rogers and his famous Rangers of New Hampshire fell upon the Indians of St. Francis on the south bank of the St. Lawrence River and utterly destroyed their village and their power to harass the colony. With the fall of Quebec the power of France in the New World was broken.

In 1760 this State furnished 800 men to complete the task of conquering the French, a task which, throughout its entire course, might well have proved impossible without the frontier skill and intrepid courage of the people of New Hampshire.

That the people here were well prepared to take the next step toward freedom from foreign rule, and to do so by force of arms, is well stated by the historian Edwin D. Sanborn, as follows:

> The people of New Hampshire were so inured to war that they never could be wholly unprepared for it. An old law required every male inhabitant from 16 to 60 years of age to own a musket, bayonet, knapsack, cartridge box, 1 pound of powder, 20 bullets, and 20 flints. Every town was required to keep in readiness for use 1 barrel of powder, 200 pounds of lead, and 300 flints, besides spare arms and ammunition for those who were too poor to own them.

The people of New Hampshire were ready for self-government as well as self-defense. In this sparsely settled colony there had been developing from its beginning a breed of men whose arduous toil with ax and plow, and hardly less arduous use of the rifle, had not blinded them to the high purpose for which these implements were to be used.

Three institutions, the church, the school, and the town meeting, had grown side by side into a seminary of liberty throughout the northern Colonies. In reference to the last of these three institutions James Bryce, former British Ambassador to the United States, declared that the New England town meeting and the Cantons of Switzerland represented the purest form of democracy in the world.

Schooled in both war and self-government, it was inevitable that the colonies should seek a redress of their grievances against the autocratic power of Great Britain, for British liberty had failed to satisfy the determination of the Colonists for freedom and independence from oppressive government.

New Hampshire played a major role in the Revolutionary War. Before he made his famous ride to Concord and Lexington, Paul Revere had ridden to Portsmouth, N. H., with news that the British Government had prohibited the exportation of arms and ammunition to the American Colonies. Acting on this information and turning the tables to their own advantage, a group of New Hampshire patriots under John Langdon and John Sullivan raided Fort William and Mary at New Castle on December 14 and 15, 1774, and carried off and secreted the powder and guns found there. Some of that powder was later used by the American Army at Bunker Hill. Due largely to the leadership of John Stark, New Hampshire furnished more than half the men who met the British attack in that battle. Councils of state kept pace with action on the field of battle. On June 15, 1776, 3 weeks before the adoption of the Federal Declaration of Independence, the people of New Hampshire declared their own independence. In the field, and at a fateful hour, they stood like the immovable granite of their native hills against invasion from the north.

Whatever may be the final verdict of historians, it appears from our point of view at the close of the Second World War that the whole course of history would have taken an ominous turn toward oppression had the United States not become an independent republic. It is equally clear that this country could not have achieved its independence at the time of the Revolutionary War, if at all, had the battle of Bennington been lost by the Colonies, for if Burgoyne had won, the American forces would have been hopelessly divided and undoubtedly conquered.

To the eternal glory of New Hampshire, her valiant sons turned the tide of the battle at Bennington. John Stark and his men, financed by John Langdon, turned back the British and Indians under Colonel Baum and made the complete victory over Burgoyne at Saratoga possible.

In 1779 the American cause was again saved by the destruction of the Six Nations under the leadership of Gen. John Sullivan.

The people of New Hampshire had borne their full part in the attainment of independence. Those who took the field had endured their share of the privations of war on the march, in bivouac, and at Valley Forge; and fought in every battle from Canada to Yorktown.

As they distinguished themselves on the field of battle, so they distinguished themselves in the councils of peace and in the creation of a more perfect Union.

Four years before the Federal Constitution became the basic law of the Union, New Hampshire drew and adopted a State constitution of her own. When the Federal Constitution was completed in the Constitutional Convention of 1787 at Philadelphia, the accident of geography enabled the delegates of New Hampshire, John Langdon and Nicholas Gilman, to sign their names first after George Washington on that great document.

But it was no accident that New Hampshire ratified it. It was rather the statesmanship of John Sullivan, John Langdon, and especially of Samuel Livermore, and the forward-looking intelligence of the people of New Hampshire and their delegates in the State convention that insured ratification here in Concord on June 21, 1788, and brought this State the honor of giving effect to the Constitution and the establishment of our present National Government.

New Hampshire has vigorously defended the Constitution in whose adoption she played so conspicuous a part. Forty years after the Government of the United States had begun to function under its beneficent provisions, Daniel Webster, New Hampshire's greatest son, rose on the floor of the Senate to defend it against the attack of Robert Y. Hayne, of South Carolina. So able was his exposition of it and so eloquent his call for "liberty and union, now and forever; one and inseparable" that armed conflict between unionists and secessionists was postponed for a generation.

Nor did New Hampshire pause there in her contribution to the Union and the growth of America's greatness. She lays claim to having been the determining factor in bringing to the Presidency of the United States its greatest Chief Executive and the greatest man ever to preside over the destinies of the American people.

Abraham Lincoln had made a slight but important acquaintance with New England during a visit with his son who was attending Phillips Exeter Academy; and when he accepted an invitation to speak at Cooper Union, N. Y., and at several places in New England, it was in New Hampshire that he spent most of his time while in the East. The leaders of the Republican Party in the State were so impressed with Lincoln's apparent fitness for the Presidency that they gave their decisive support to his nomination for that office at the Chicago convention of 1860.

From its founding to the present day, New Hampshire has produced her full share of material benefits and contributed her full quota of distinguished men and women to the service of this country and the world, in both war and peace.

When war befalls, her sons she calls
From mill and forge and lea,
And bids them uphold her banner
Till the land from strife is free.

Her sons and daughters have never failed to respond to her call and to that of the Union of which she is a part. Her sons have fought in all of America's seven wars. In the Mexican War it was a son of New Hampshire who first scaled the fortress of Chapultepec; and in the Civil War, another who was the first to fall in action. It was the Fifth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry that suffered the heaviest casualties of any regiment of the North during the bloody conflict that decided "whether this Nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, could long endure."

In both the First and Second World Wars the Granite State fully maintained, in the number of men and women engaged and in the valor of their achievements, the proud record of its heroic past. In the war just concluded, New Hampshire sent 50,000 to serve in the armed forces of this Nation, and her contribution in all fields of service has been outstanding. The constructive achievements of peace have been equally notable.

The Mount Washington Railway is the first cogwheel railway built anywhere, and the aerial tramway on Cannon Mountain is the first of its kind on the American Continent. Earlier, the Concord coach was a standard conveyance in the West as well as in New England. The first free public library in America supported by voluntary contribution was established at Dublin, N. H., in 1822; and the first teachers' training school in the public taxation was the Peterborough Town Library, established in 1833; while the first teachers training school in the United States was established by Samuel R. Hall, born in Croydon.

It was Samuel Morey, of Orford, N. H., and not Robert Fulton, who first invented and operated a steamboat upon a river of America. Morey operated his boat upon the Connecticut River at least 14 years before Fulton made his cruise on the Hudson.

James Wilson, born in Londonderry, made the first terrestrial globes in America; and Ambrose Swasey, of Exeter, as though a comprehension of his own world only were not sufficient for a son of New Hampshire, made Lick & Yerkes telescopes to encompass the heavens.

James J. Walworth, born in Canaan, inventor and manufacturer of heating apparatus, equipped the White House with its first hot-water heating system in 1853.

There is time and space here to enumerate only a few of the eminent sons and daughters of New Hampshire. Besides those already mentioned are to be noted John S. Pillsbury of Pillsbury-Washburn flour mill fame; Carroll D. Wright, greatest statistician of his time; Benjamin F. Butler; John P. Hale; Henry Wells, of Wells, Fargo & Co. Express; Laura Bridgeman, Edna Dean Proctor, Mary Baker Eddy, founder of Christian Science; Celia Thaxter, and Sarah J. Hale.

There were also born here in New Hampshire: Horace Greeley of the New York Tribune; Charles A. Dana of the New York Sun; Stilson Hutchins of the Washington Post; John Wentworth of the Democrat, the first newspaper in Chicago; and Charles G. Green of the Boston Post.

Of the 12 Chief Justices who have sat upon the Supreme Bench of the United States to date, two were born in New Hampshire: Salmon P. Chase of Cornish, and Harlan F. Stone of Chesterfield, the latter lately deceased.

New Hampshire has furnished governors for 18 other States of the Union besides a Governor General, Leonard Wood, for the Philippines, and a President of the United States, Franklin Pierce.

When questioned by visitors who traverse our lakes and mountains in the enjoyment of this Switzerland of America as to the principal products turned out here, we can point with pride to the granite face of the Old Man of the Mountain looking down upon Franconia Notch and declare with Daniel Webster that "Here God makes men."

Our soil is not rich in mineral wealth, but the terrain of this region has encouraged a healthy balance between rural and urban life, and between agriculture, manufacturing, and recreational pursuits which result from the ever-increasing enjoyment of our countryside by summer residents, tourists, and sportsmen. Our economy, which fluctuates perhaps less than that of any other State in response to boom or depression, exerts a balance upon us resulting in progress rather than innovation, honesty based upon tried and tested principles rather than experimentation founded upon doctrinaire and theory.

People of New Hampshire may be called conservative in the sense that both their outlook and customs are founded upon sound and practical principles rooted in a New England heritage. It is this characteristic that has insured its steady development and which made the constitution of the State and Nation so expressive of the real wishes of the people that no other nation has ever matched its development.

The characteristics of New Hampshire's early history are a result of Puritan principles in which her people believed. That they are still fundamentally sound is proved by the record of the State in the difficult days through which it has just passed. In addition to a State government second to none and a State council of defense worthy of the committee of safety formed by our forefathers at the outbreak of the Revolutionary War, we led the Union in campaigns for the conservation of materials, and in the purchase of war bonds we led the Nation in the sixth and seventh drives. We established agencies for the conservation of critically short materials and supplies, notably the travel bureau, which was the first State agency of its kind in the country.

People of New Hampshire will never depart from the principles upon which the institutions of the State were so firmly founded. In extending cooperation to other peoples in world government she will not forget the lessons learned in the achievement of her own prosperity and happiness. She will oppose those within or without her borders who would undermine those institutions. People of New Hampshire believe in personal liberty, the freedom of enterprise, and the equality of opportunity. It is of men that such freedom has produced under the Constitution of this Republic that Dr. Lorin Webster wrote:

All hail, ye people of the Granite State,
In acres small, in manhood's power great!
Let others boast their shocks of golden corn
Which yield them wealth and all their fields adorn;
Our products last beyond earth's widest ken—
The Old Stone Face proclaims that we raise men.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

CIVILIAN CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. PRICE of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the attempt of some groups to increase the role of the military in the control of atomic energy represents a retreat and a violation of well-established American tradition.

Never in the history of the United States—not even in wartime—has the military been given policy-making powers. The military in peacetime naturally has the assigned job of assuming that we will be involved in another major war and of making preparations to win that war. The business of the Commission in charge of atomic energy must be aimed primarily at developing atomic energy for the benefit of mankind, as a background for working out those cordial international relations which will avoid the necessity for war.

The most important reason for civilian control of nuclear research and development is simple. Men must cease to think of this as only a weapon. We do not want atomic war, we want atomic heat and power and knowledge for industry and medicine in a new and rich atomic age.

The military is still charged with defending the military security of the United States. It is not charged with developing medical research on cancer through the study of radioactivity, nor of any similar peacetime usage of man's new knowledge. They never will be, unless we allow them to gradually make America into the same kind of police state they developed on a small scale in the Manhattan district project. As a matter of fact it is not the War or Navy Departments themselves who are now pressing for increased control, but those who, under the guise of military security, wish to impose military control upon the American people.

It is true that the Atomic Energy Commission as proposed now in the new amendments would have on it only one or two military men out of five. But the presence of military men would constitute military intervention in policy making. As President Truman pointed out in his letter to Senator MCMAHON on February 2:

A commission established by the Congress for the control of atomic energy should be composed exclusively of civilians. This * * * is in accord with established American principles embodied in our statutes since 1870.

SENATE

MONDAY, JUNE 24, 1946

(Legislative day of Tuesday, March 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, like the morning dew on parched ground, like the mystic quiet of summer twilight, steal upon us now with a sense of the eternal as we bring our fainting spirits to the holiness that shames our uncleanness, to the love that forgives our iniquities, to the truth that defies all our falseness, to the patience that outlasts our fickleness. In the brooding silence of this still moment, may open windows of faith flood our darkness with light, that in Thy sunshine's blaze our day may brighter, fairer be. Clothe our failing flesh with Thy renewing grace as we bring our incompleteness to Thy completeness. Give us inner greatness of spirit and clearness of vision to meet and match the large designs of this glorious yet demanding day, that we may keep step with the drumbeat of Thy truth which is marching on. In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

AMENDMENT OF SECURITIES EXCHANGE ACT OF 1934—COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 22, 1946.

The Honorable the PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE:
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I wish to recommend to your earnest consideration amendment of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 in accordance with the proposal transmitted to the Congress under date of June 20, 1946, by the Securities and Exchange Commission. The amendment would extend important protective provisions of that act to investors in the many major corporations which do not have securities listed on the exchanges. As indicated by the Commmission, it was generally agreed at the time of enactment of the Securities Exchange Act that it was desirable to afford this class of investors similar protection to that afforded investors in listed securities. But there was then little public information as to just how the over-the-counter markets operate and for that reason the time was not ripe to deal adequately with the problem. Since then the Commission has had occasion to study and report upon these markets and I am impressed with what their study has revealed. I am convinced that the Commission report demonstrates the need for and the timeliness of the proposed amendment.

Respectfully yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

PRESS AND RADIO REPORTING OF UNRRA DISTRIBUTION IN SOVIET RUSSIA—COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 21, 1946.

TO the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE:

In accordance with the recommendation in paragraph B of Public Law 262, Seventy-ninth Congress, I have, through appropriate channels, taken steps to advise countries receiving UNRRA assistance of the desire of the United States Government that the admission to those countries of properly accredited members of the American press and radio be facilitated in order that they might be permitted to report without censorship on the utilization and distribution of UNRRA supplies and services.

I am advised that satisfactory arrangements are in effect to permit American press and radio representatives to report without censorship on the UNRRA programs in all UNRRA receiving countries except the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. There is attached a translation of a communication dated March 12, 1946, to the Secretary of State from the Chargé d'Affaires of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics with reference to the situation in that country, which in effect states that the censorship rules in force for all correspondents in the Soviet Union will be applied to correspondents desiring to report on the utilization and distribution of UNRRA supplies.

I am also advised that accredited representatives of UNRRA have been given necessary facilities for observing and reporting on the distribution of UNRRA supplies in all receiving countries including Ukrainian and Byelorussia Soviet Socialist Republics and have submitted extensive and detailed reports.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

[Translation]

The Chargé d'Affaires of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and with reference to the note of the Acting Secretary of State of January 8, 1946, has the honor to communicate the following:

Inasmuch as special commissions of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration will be sent to the Ukrainian S. S. R. and the Byelorussian S. S. R., American official circles and the public will have the possibility of receiving information of interest to them concerning the utilization and distribution of the supplies and services of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration through these commissions.

With reference to the request of the State Department for granting representatives of the American press and radio the possibility for full and free execution of their functions in accordance with the desire expressed by the Congress of the United States, representatives of the American press and radio on the territories of the Ukrainian S. S. R. and the Byelorussian S. S. R. should be guided by the rules in effect on all the territory of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and for that reason the establishment of any special rules regulating the activities of representatives of the American press and radio on the territories of the Ukrainian S. S. R. and the Byelorussian S. S. R. is not contemplated.

EMBASSY OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS.

DEVELOPMENT OF GEORGE WASHINGTON MEMORIAL PARKWAY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act entitled "An act for the acquisition, establishment, and development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway along the Potomac from Mount Vernon and Fort Washington to the Great Falls, and to provide for the acquisition of lands in the District of Columbia and the States of Maryland and Virginia requisite to the comprehensive park, parkway, and playground system of the National Capital," approved May 29, 1930, which, with an accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were presented, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. WALSH:

Memorials of sundry physicians and other citizens of Worcester County, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1606) to provide for a national health program; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. BUSHFIELD:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 6

"Concurrent resolution memorializing, Congress of the United States of America to empower the Secretary of Agriculture to requistion certain material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the prosecution of the war and for the national defense and to use such material, equipment, and supplies in soil- and water-conservation work and distribute such material, equipment, and supplies by grant or loan to public bodies, and other purposes,

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota, the Senate concurring:

"Whereas there has been introduced in the House of Representatives, first session of the Seventy-ninth Congress, H. R. 538 by Mr. POAGE, which is in the following terms and language:

" 'SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to requisition any materials, equipment, or supplies which constitute surplus property under the Surplus Property Act of 1944 and are suitable for use in carrying out erosion control and soil- and water-conservation work and operations in furtherance of the act approved April 27, 1935, entitled "An act to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes." Upon receipt of such requisition from the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to any such property, the head of the Government agency having control of such property shall transfer such property to the Secretary of Agriculture without reimbursement.

" 'SEC. 2. Material, equipment, and supplies requisitioned by the Secretary of Agriculture under section 1 shall be distributed, through the Soil Conservation Service, by grant or loan, to soil conservation, drainage, irrigation, grazing, and other districts and public bodies organized under State laws with power to promote and carry out soil- and water-conservation operations and related public purposes. Such distribution shall be made in accordance with such standards, conditions, rules and regulations as to use and disposition as may be recommended by the Soil Conservation Service and may be established for such purpose by the Secretary of Agriculture.'

"Whereas South Dakota is extremely interested in such legislation and deems it wise and expedient that Congress enact such legislation: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring), That Congress be respectfully urged to enact H. R. 538, first session, Seventy-ninth Congress; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of the Senate, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, Hon. CHAN GURNEY, Hon. HARLAN J. BUSHFIELD, Hon. KARL E. MUNDT, Hon. FRANCIS H. CASE, all in Washington, D. C."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota; to the Committee on Finance:

"House Concurrent Resolution 5

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America not to increase the Federal gasoline tax and Federal lubricating oil tax and to discontinue the same as soon as possible and refuse to reenact such taxes

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the twenty-ninth legislative session of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring):

"Whereas the Congress of the United States did during the session of the Seventy-sixth Congress increase the Federal gasoline tax one-half cent per gallon making such tax now a total of 1½ cents per gallon despite the fact that every State in the Union now imposes a sales tax on gasoline averaging in excess of 4 cents per gallon; and

"Whereas such Federal gasoline tax during the past calendar year of 1944 has taken from the people of the State of South Dakota in excess of $1,875,000, which largely comes from the producers and from agriculture of South Dakota; and

"Whereas such tax at 1½ cents per gallon amounts to a 10-percent retail sales tax on such product which is a necessity of the residents of this State; and

"Whereas the Federal lubricating oil tax is 6 cents per gallon, and is likewise an enormous retail sales tax upon a product necessary to the production of food for the country, and is an unfair and unreasonable imposition upon such necessity; and

"Whereas it is the sense of this legislature that it is inequitable and unfair to impose such an enormous sales tax upon a single commodity of this type which is a necessity to persons engaged in agricultural and producing pursuits; and

"Whereas such gasoline tax is a revenue measure peculiarly adapted for the individual States for the purpose of construction and maintenance of adequate highway systems and means of transportation, and administrative machinery is well established in every State in the Union: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Congress of the United States should not increase such Federal gasoline tax or Federal lubricating oil tax or consider any increase in such taxes, and should discontinue the same at the earliest possible time, and should refuse to reenact the same upon their expiration, and should thus leave the field of revenue entirely to the individual States for use in construction and maintenance of the various States' highway systems; be it further

"Resolved, That the Members of the Congress of the United States from the State of South Dakota be, and they are hereby, urged by the legislature of this State to use their best efforts in opposing any suggested increase in the Federal gasoline or Federal lubricating oil tax, or the reenactment or continuance of said taxes; be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state to each Senator and Representative of the State of South Dakota in the Congress of the United States and to the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to be by them presented to the proper committee in Congress considering or determining such aforesaid legislation."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"House Concurrent Resolution 3

"Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America on the postwar military policy and Military Establishment and of the National Guard

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring):

"Whereas the experience of the United States in the two World Wars, and more particularly World War II, demonstrates that it is desirable that our Nation should adopt a definite military policy so patterned that it will meet the postwar needs of the country; and

"Whereas it is of vital importance to the Federal Government, and to the several States and Territories of the United States, as to what that policy shall be, and as to the character, size, and the composition of the Military Establishment; and

"Whereas the decisions of the Congress which will be reached in this matter will directly affect the Military Establishment of the Nation and of the several States and Territories, and the relationship between those forces; and

"Whereas the Congress now has before it plans and suggestions as to what the postwar policy and the future Military Establishments shall be; and it is believed that the basic principles of the military policy proposed by Gen. George Washington to the Continental Congress, and more recently approved by our present military authorities, then were and still are basically sound and should be given serious consideration by the Congress: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (and concurred in by the Senate) of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, That the Congress respectfully is urged to preserve in the postwar military policy the basic principles of the policy laid down by Gen. George Washington, the National Defense Act of 1916, as amended, and the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, insofar as they relate to the civilian components of the Army of the United States, and more particularly the National Guard, the Officers Reserve Corps, and the Organized Reserves; and "That we fully endorse and subscribe to the position taken by the Secretary of War relative to the place which the National Guard should have as announced by him on November 23, 1944, in which he stated:

" 'It would be the mission of this Reserve component (the National Guard), in the event of a national emergency, to furnish units fit for service anywhere in the world. * * *

" 'This conception of the mission of the National Guard of the United States would interfere in no way with the traditional mission of the National Guard of the States and Territories to provide sufficient organizations in each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia, so trained and equipped as to enable them to function efficiently at existing strength in the protection of life and property and the preservation of peace, order, and public safety, under competent orders of the State authorities.

" 'National Guard units have played a vital role in the mobilization of our present Army and they have made a brilliant record on every fighting front. We are counting on them as a bulwark of our future national security.'

"That we do endorse and fully approve the statement of Gen. George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff of the Army of the United States, as set forth in War Department Circular No. 347, August 25, 1944, to the effect that the Postwar Military Establishment should consist of a professional army in peace, large enough to meet the normal requirements of the Nation, to be reinforced in time of emergency by units drawn from the civilian components of the Army of the United States; be it further

"Resolved, That in the event a system of universal military training is included in the postwar plan for a Military Establishment, we favor that such training should be integrated with the civilian components of the Military Establishment, and more particularly with the National Guard, the Officers Reserve Corps, and the Organized Reserves; and

"That the personnel of all components of the Army, both officers and enlisted personnel, be given full opportunity to express their views relative to the postwar military policy of the United States, and the form of the Military Establishment which should be provided, to the end that the Congress adopt a sound military policy consistent with the traditions and experiences of our Nation, and which will afford the greatest security of the United States of America; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of the Senate, the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives, Hon. CHAN GURNEY, Hon. HARLAN J. BUSHFIELD, Hon. KARL E. MUNDT, and Hon. FRANCIS H. CASE, all in Washington, D. C."

GRAIN FOR LIQUOR MANUFACTURING AND EXEMPTION OF FARMERS FROM MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I received an interesting letter from Edith A. Fouse, of Manchester, Kans., registering her disapproval of the use of grain for liquor manufacturing, and urging the exemption and release of farmers from military service during the food famine. I ask unanimous consent to present the letter and that it be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

The being no objection, the letter was received, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MANCHESTER, KANS., June 17, 1946.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Because of my interest in the welfare of the American people and all peoples, I am writing you regarding things which I think should be done, and questions to which I would like to know the answer.

1. It is my belief that all drafted farm boys and men now in service should be released to aid in the present food situation.

2. By all means do away with these breweries and distilleries which are using grains and sugar for the destruction of people's health when they should be used for constructive and economic purposes. During the war and since those in service aren't receiving the best of food at all places. Even in our democratic country we have to use laws and a standard of morals so the liquor could be prohibited just as other things, I feel. Scientists have proved the ill results of drink so if we want our country to be a good country we can't let the younger generation, to whose hands the work will fall be down in the "rut."

3. Why can we and why do we have to tolerate strikes? If any service personnel had struck, no doubt, court martial would have been the answer and many would think they were against their country. Even during the war our people safe at home would strike for higher wages while those in the service received lower wages, than those at home, and many were at the front working. This is entirely wrong. Therefore, I say that the strike leaders and others who think of the almighty dollar and their political standing in place of public welfare should be removed from office and some method of punishment used. We can readily see that strikes are working against food production and preservation. The manufacture of farm equipment has been withheld; also farmers cannot get repairs for what machinery they do have.

Can we, as honest Americans, let those that were killed die in vain?

May God guide you in your work.

Sincerely,

EDITH A. FOUSE.

ADMISSION INTO THE UNITED STATES OF ALIEN FIANCÉES OR FIANCES OF MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2122) to facilitate the admission into the United States of the alien fiancées or fiancés of members of the armed forces of the United States, which were on page 2, line 24, after "1917", to insert a comma and "as amended (39 Stat. 889–890; 54 Stat. 671–673; 56 Stat. 1044; 8 U. S. C. 155; 39 Stat. 890–891; 57 Stat. 511; 8 U. S. C. 156)"; on page 2, strike out all after line 24, over to and including line 5, on page 3; and on page 3, after line 5, insert:

SEC. 4. The Secretary of State shall have authority to prescribe regulations for the administration of the provisions of this act which relate to the performance of functions by diplomatic or consular officers of the United States and he shall include in such regulations a requirement that the parties to a proposed marriage shall furnish satisfactory evidence to the American consular officer concerned, including sworn statements corroborated by other appropriate evidence showing that the parties have entered into a valid agreement to marry and are legally able and actually willing to conclude a valid marriage in the United States within a period of 3 months after the alien's arrival, or within such period as may be extended by the Attorney General.

SEC. 5. The Attorney General shall have authority to prescribe regulations for the administration by the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the provisions of this act in connection with the arrival of the aliens concerned at ports of entry in the United States, and he shall include in such regulations a requirement that the prospective American citizen spouse of an alien covered by the provisions of this act shall furnish to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization a suitable bond, which shall be in an amount sufficient to cover the cost of the deportation of the alien concerned, and which shall be forfeited to the United States if and when the alien becomes deportable, or shall be canceled by the Commissioner upon receipt of satisfactory evidence that a valid marriage has been concluded, or that the alien has left the United States without expense to the said United States.

SEC. 6. For the purposes of this act the period of World War II shall be considered as having started on September 1, 1939, and to have ended upon the formal conclusion thereof by a treaty of peace, or by the passage of a joint resolution of Congress, or by a proclamation by the President declaring an end to hostilities.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the first House amendment merely provides that the consular office shall have evidence of the good faith of the parties in their engagements to contract marriage. The other amendment provides that the person in this country who is to marry the alien shall give a bond for the passage home of the alien in case the marriage is not consummated. I therefore move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

A WAY TO CHECK DEPRESSIONS—ARTICLE BY SECRETARY WALLACE

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, the June issue of the American Magazine contains an article written by Secretary Wallace entitled "A Way to Check Depressions." This article gives an extended exposition of the ways in which the Federal Government, operating entirely within the scope of the free-enterprise system, can aid the businessmen of America, particularly the small businessmen, so that their chances of success will be increased and their danger of failure will be lessened.

The article makes it clear that it is not hand-outs in the form of money that the small businessman needs from his Government, any more than it is directives telling him how he must run his business. To use a war-time expression, the need is for technical know-how. A tremendous amount of this is actually available and much of it is being given to small businessmen through the Department of Commerce. The article in the American Magazine explains how this is being done, and describes the way in which Government can work for businessmen. I took the trouble to inquire about the response from businessmen to this article and found that the Department of Commerce had received a heavy flow of highly favorable mail from businessmen in all parts of the country.

I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A WAY TO CHECK DEPRESSIONS

(By Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Commerce)

If we profit from the lessons of history, we realize that it is dangerous for a nation to sit back complacently when times are good and not to prepare for the threat of hard times that heretofore have followed every war. We must mobilize, completely, all the elements of our economy, now.

One of the important steps is to strengthen the 2,750,000 small businesses of our Nation. This can be done in a great part through the furnishing of scientific information and the personal assistance of trained experts.

Small business is a vital part of our economy, employing about 9,000,000 persons. It operates, even in good times, under constant threat of failure. Four out of five small businesses don't last 5 years.

The small businessman is in a far more precarious position than the big businessman or the farmer. He is more likely to collapse under the first wave of a slump. In an enormous number of cases, if the small businessman had technical aid comparable to that possessed by big business and agriculture, he would be able to pull through.

If we start right now to help the small businessman to anchor himself firmly to resist the coming storm, we can reduce the number of failures. Small business is a weak spot in our defense. We must strengthen it to resist any attack of economic adversity.

The Department of Agriculture, through research and personal service by farm agents, has raised tremendously the profits and standards of living of the small farmer. Expert agriculturists show him anything he wants to know, from how to keep his turkeys from dying to how to keep his topsoil from washing into the creek. He learns how to expand in good times and how to economize when things begin to go badly. The Department of Agriculture has saved hundreds of thousands of small farmers from poverty.

The Department of Commerce must give as adequate a service to small business. The crossroads grocer and the off-the-highway sawmill operator are just as entitled to competent advice as are the tobacco farmer and the poultryman. Now, we have 52 field offices, and I foresee the day when we shall have offices in every major community. Every business, no matter how small or isolated, should have the opportunity of getting scientific aid in solving its problems.

Few understanding persons, I believe, oppose the expenditures of the Department of Agriculture which have done so much to educate the small farmer. In the 10 years from 1932 to 1941 it spent an average of $9.20 a year to help the farmer make $100. And the farmer has been aided enormously, also, by agencies other than the Department of Agriculture.

No comparable figure is available for business, but obviously the cost of government aid to business is a great deal less. Because we have failed to give proper assistance, the average small businessman is much worse off than the small farmer.

The failure of a grocery store, restaurant, machine shop, or factory in your town not only is a set-back for its owner and his employees, the bank that lent him money, and the owner of the vacated property. It affects the prosperity of the entire community. If such failures multiply alarmingly it will be a catastrophe for all of us.

The Department of Commerce is under way now, giving subsidies to small businessmen—not subsidies in money, but subsidies in knowledge and services that will help them make more profit. We must give much more aid to these men and women, to all who are eager and able to work their way to success but who are handicapped by the lack of some of the know-how.

Often, when a small business fails, it is through no fault of its owner. Too often it is the fault of his government, which, for the good of all, should help him to become a more skillful manager.

Take two men, equally industrious, capable, ambitious, equally entitled to success. One owns a small business, the other is president of a large corporation. It is important that both weather any depression that may come. We don't have to worry so much about the big businessman. He has at hand scientists and technologists, marketing analysts, top-notch salesmen, advertising men, and accountants to help him make the proper decisions.

The small businessman has no army of experts to guide him to more profit now, to help him avoid bankruptcy in a slump. He reads trade papers, he may get advice from wholesalers who want to keep their customers in business, but usually he has no definite, personal assistance from first-rate advisers. Sometimes a few small changes in his sales methods, or accounting, or delivery system, or inventory, or advertising would turn loss into profit, but he doesn't know how to make such changes. So he makes guesses or, bewildered and hopeless, just drifts. His profits vanish; he is forced to give up.

Ahead of the people of the United States is a crucial test. What economic system will best weather a depression? Will a planned economy prove to be superior? Or will the United States, the leading exponent of free private enterprise, prove that its system is best?

In the boom that followed World War I we so bungled our economy that, although we were the richest nation in the world, we found ourselves in the depression of the 1930's That failure gave strength to the arguments of the enemies of free enterprise.

If we repeat our mistakes of the 1920's, if peoples under competing economies find that their system is superior for the common man in hard times, how can we defend the cause of democracy and free enterprise? The people of other countries all over the world, who are uncertain as to which kind of government to support, observing our failure, will swing too far to the left or too far to the right, and our own system will be attacked by our own hungry people. Democracy will be desperately in danger.

If its resources are properly mobilized, democracy and free enterprise can triumph over any threat of depression. We can prove to all the world that our system can continue high production and high employment in any emergency. But only through a sincere, wise, and unselfish effort of the entire Nation. Men and women who grab all they can get, who break laws and trample weaker citizens underfoot must change their ways and cooperate. Individuals and government must work together. The Department of Commerce is only one agency that will contribute, and only one of its contributions—but perhaps the most important one—will be information and services to help business help itself.

In our files in Washington we have an enormous amount of material that is being used mostly by representatives of big business. Small businessmen cannot afford to come to Washington, and whatever they need should be put into their hands. Facts filed away are not worth much.

Two years ago the Department of Commerce distributed a booklet outlining its services, and included a case history on a job that had been done in Washington for a small wholesale grocer who was losing money, who didn't know how to cut his expenses and increase his net income, and who came to Washington with all his data and asked for aid. Specialists revised his out-of-date systems, from bookkeeping to warehouse layout, and put him back on his feet.

As a result of this booklet, requests for assistance from thousands of small businessmen poured in. The main and field offices were swamped. There weren't enough men to handle all the requests promptly, and the Department did not have enough money to enlarge the staff. I regret to state that, for that reason, the Department stopped the distribution of the booklet which brought in so many worthy and proper requests.

Thousands of men and women are eager for expert counsel on starting or maintaining a small business. We are helping them now; we are extending our staffs to establish for business the best information and consulting services in the world.

Of enormous importance now is our distribution of German industrial and scientific secrets. In the past, in many important categories, German scientists advanced further than any others in the world. Their discoveries, in some instances, were the foundations of cartels, agreements on pricing, production, and distribution, between great corporations in various countries who shared and controlled the scientific and technological knowledge.

Today, through the activities of the United States Army and the Department of Commerce, practically all the secrets of the Germans are available to American business, big and little. Information from Germany that will be worth millions, perhaps billions, of dollars in profit to American management and labor is being distributed to all who can use it.

When our armies went into Germany, along with them—sometimes ahead of them—went American teams of scientists and industrialists to find and photograph documents and unique machinery. At first we wanted information that could be used against Japan, and we gathered data on V weapons, jet propulsion, submarines, and armored vehicles. After this was sent to the United States, the technical industrial intelligence committee's investigators, 380 in all, went into other fields. They gathered facts on ideas, on processes, and on details of success and failures. They interviewed leaders in German science and industry, gathering information not found in documents.

To date, more than 15,000 preliminary reports have been made, and 1,600 final technical reports are ready for American science and industry. These are sold as photostats or on microfilm at reproduction cost, from a few cents to a few dollars.

When an American manufacturer saw a complete report on the German synthetic-fiber industry, giving in detail all secrets of production of such textiles as rayon, he said, "This report would be worth $20,000,000 to my company—if we could have it exclusively." Anybody can buy it for a few dollars.

The most valuable haul was a complete record of the work of all the scientists in the great German I. G. Farbenindustrie. Thus far, 36,000 pages of documents, indexed, are ready. Never before, scientists say, has such a storehouse of secret information been assembled. It is secret no longer. Included are complete reports, up to the end of the war, on projects discussed, accepted, and rejected, on experiments authorized, with results analyzed and evaluated. Here is an exhaustive record of the work of German scientists on such things as liquid and solid fuels, metallurgy, textiles, synthetic rubber, plastics and drugs and chemicals of all kinds.

The I. G. Farben chemists had performed unique research in the manufacture of acetylene, which is used in plastics and many other chemical products. American chemists say similar research would cost us millions of dollars.

While many German secret patent records were destroyed, tons of them remained. The Krupp collection of patents on the making of munitions is substantially intact and is in the hands of Army and Navy scientists.

There is almost no end to the list of reports now available, and thousands more from hundreds of German companies are to come. In cases in which the Germans were ahead of us, we can use their new methods. When we find we were superior, we have the satisfaction of knowing that. Records of German experiments that failed are not worthless, because in many instances, they will save time and expense for our scientists, pointing out the wrong roads.

This information will help big and little business. Small chemical companies, for instance, may find much of value in the reports. Shops that do sheet-metal stamping will be interested in a new German process for shaping cold steel. This process increases production tenfold and can be used to shape cold in a press thousands of parts now made as castings, drop forgings, or in malleable iron.

Dairy farmers and milk distributors may be able to use a German cold-ray process that fortifies milk with vitamin D and pasteurizes without the use of heat. The Germans made new discoveries—how valuable they are only tests will show—in rat killers and insecticides. They produced a synthetic blood plasma. The Robert Bosch Co. had a machine that made more than 50,000,000 condensers out of paper, coated with vaporized zinc. Condensers are used in enormous quantities in the electric, electronic, and communications industries, and this machine, which can be built for about $25,000, appears to make better and cheaper condensers. It is being brought to the United States for examination by American manufacturers.

The Germans had a new process for making colored motion pictures, one for dry development of photographic film, and new optical glass formulas. They made synthetic sapphires for watch and instrument bearings and had a unique evaporator for converting salt water into fresh. They had new methods for making steel and chlorine and commercial fertilizers. They had a unique Diesel engine, and propellers to be used on mine sweepers that could stop and turn a fast-moving boat in its own length. We have reports on plastic coatings to preserve bread and cheese, on a drug that is said to rival penicillin, on new ways of treating malaria, and on new ways of making dyes.

Available to us, in addition to all this, are the documents taken by the British—230 tons of technical information. We can now afford only a dozen specialists in Germany gathering material. The British have about 300. The Russians and French also are rounding up the same sort of information.

A casual examination of the German collection of documents brought suggestions that 23 types of businesses, with a capital of less than $100,000, could be started through the use of this information. They ran from the making of artificial leather to a new kind of machine that the Germans used for wrapping ration tablets in cellophane. It can be used by manufacturers for the rapid and economical wrapping of drugs, soap, cigarettes, and other small objects.

Included in the reports are German methods of manufacturing procedure, plant layout, transportation, prevention of waste, promotion of efficiency.

The Department of Commerce will make an exhaustive study of all the German material, to evaluate it for such special purposes as the establishment of new industries, reductions in costs of established businesses, use of new processes, reduction of production time, and the creation of new jobs.

At the end of World War I, Germany kept nearly all its secrets. This time, we are taking them—a form of reparations that will be more valuable to American management and labor than millions upon millions of dollars in cash.

Adding to new science and technology, the Army and the Navy are gradually releasing secrets of American discoveries during the war. Much that can be used by small business will be offered.

All of this contributes to the Department's plan to further the work of science in industry. The National Bureau of Standards, with its high-powered staff, for years has solved many general problems for business. It gave enormous service in war and should extend its activities in peace.

If a large manufacturer has a difficult scientific problem, usually he has a research laboratory that will solve it. He may be having trouble with a particular welding job, he may need a special kind of glue or chemical, assistance in making soup or catsup. He may want to make a new type of vacuum cleaner and must have a special metal and a special die, or he may want to test scientifically the wearing quality of a product. He has the money and the men to get the answers.

The small businessman, with problems that are just as vital to him, has no research laboratory. Perhaps his difficulty is one that can be cleared up if he gets a certain report on scientific and technological research, or it may be one that a scientist could clear up in a few hours. But he doesn't know where to go for help, he can't compete with the big fellow, he fails.

I believe the small businessman should be able to go to the Department of Commerce with his specific problems. The Department, in turn, should serve as a clearinghouse for the exchange of scientific and technical information and direct the small businessman to the commercial research laboratories and scientific experts in his field, to help him solve his problem. A bill is now before Congress which would provide for expansion of scientific facilities for the use of business.

The independent inventor sometimes fails to exploit his invention profitably because he lacks funds, advice, and encouragement. We hope to help this man. During the war the National Inventors Council performed useful services for the inventor with a device of potiential military value. Now under Congressional consideration is a bill to extend this same sort of service for inventions of peacetime value. In addition, we are seeking funds to clear up the backlog of patent applications and will help the inventor get his patent in a hurry.

Many small businessmen and women are now using our services. We have prepared comprehensive booklets that aid some categories. If our information on a particular business is sketchy we can tell an applicant exactly where he can get what he seeks. This service is for veterans who want to start a business of their own, for men and women now in business who want to increase their profits—for everybody.

Our aid, through booklets, has helped many a man take his shoe-repair shop out of a basement and convert it into an up-to-date profitable concern. We give complete information on such things as making concrete blocks, a sawmill business, real-estate and insurance brokerage, a metal-working shop, and various kinds of stores. We are preparing manuals for women who want to open beauty parlors, lending libraries, and notion stores.

For other small businesses, such as diaper services, florist shops, restaurants, and dry-cleaning services, at present we can give only basic information and suggestions as to where facts can be found.

We distribute ideas on handling employees in a small business, information on leaseholds and on credit sources. Our most recent and according to some businessmen, our most important contribution is a 15-cent booklet on distribution cost analysis, produced after 20 years of research in retailing, wholesaling, and manufacturing. In this booklet the businessman finds detailed methods for eliminating unprofitable items, checking his inventory, pricing, and selling costs. It will furnish many a businessman information that will stop losses and increase profits.

We assist communities that seek expert advice on development of their areas. Chambers of commerce want to know what kinds of business can be developed that will increase employment. Our statisticians and market analysts advise them.

Our foreign department aids the small businessman who wants to buy trinkets in Mexico or China, or sell hammers and saws in South America. We furnish names of firms with whom he can do business, we tell him about transportation, tariffs, taxes, packing requirements, and exchange rates.

Everyone of these services must be expanded. Today, the small businessman who lives near a Department of Commerce regional office, or who can afford to come to Washington, gets the service. We should have more field offices, more men who can give individual service. In many cases, a booklet isn't enough.

We must give the small businessman facts about the outlook for his particular business, how and where to develop markets. We must furnish him quick and complete scientific and technological service that will enable him to compete with the big fellow. We must give him answers to his particular questions about his products, about the most efficient specifications, materials, and processing techniques. We must furnish complete answers to all of his questions as to his relations with Government agencies, such as taxation, finance, unfair competition, foreign trade, and all the problems of regulation and control.

If a grocer wants to know whether he could convert to self-service, if a laundry wants to know what kind of new machinery it should buy and where to get it, if a small plant needs a unique metal for a special part and can't find it, if a florist seeks a plan for making over his shop, if a druggist has display problems, if a bakery seeks a new and more profitable location, if a clothing store needs financing, if a hardware man is bogged down with goods he can't sell—everyone of them should be able to get individual service quickly at a nearby office of the Department of Commerce.

In a year or so an era of intense competition will begin. Following that will come our critical war against the threat of depression—the battle for the survival of free business enterprise. It is as essential to train thoroughly an army of businessmen to fight a war against want as it is to train an army of warriors to fight an aggressor.

It won't do to put it off for a year or so. The time to act is now.

PARTY RESPONSIBILITY—ARTICLE BY SECRETARY WALLACE

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that another article by Secretary Wallace in the current issue of Collier's magazine on the subject of Party Responsibility be printed in the RECORD. I do this because there has been considerable misinterpretation of Secretary Wallace's position on this subject.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PARTY RESPONSIBILITY

(By Henry A. Wallace)

"Looking at government from a practical and businesslike, rather than from a theoretical and abstractly ethical point of view—treating the business of government as a business—it seems to be unquestionably and in a high degree desirable that all legislation should distinctly represent the action of parties as parties. * * * It should be desired that parties should act in distinct organizations, in accordance with avowed principles, under easily recognized leaders, in order that the voters might be able to declare by their ballots not only their condemnation of any past policy, by withdrawing all support from the party responsible for it; but also and particularly their will as to the future administration of the government, by bringing into power a party pledged to the adoption of an acceptable policy." (Woodrow Wilson, Congressional Government: A Study in American Politics (1885).)

We Americans are supposed to be an easy-going and patient people. At least, foreign observers think so. They say, and with a great deal of undeniable truth, that every 4 years we enjoy the most dramatic political spectacle to be found anywhere on earth; that we become as excited about the verbal pugilistics of a Presidential campaign as we do about a world's heavyweight championship or the world series. And I can only hope that this is true.

But these foreign observers also say that just as soon as the votes are tallied, we relax politically for the next 4 years and forget all about the platform promises—even though we can hardly wait for the next championship bout or the opening of the next baseball season.

This view of American politics is entertaining—but only for outsiders. Unfortunately, the description contains too much truth for comfort. It is undoubtedly true that we have become somewhat cynical about party platforms and that, all too often, we have been complacent when our Representatives and Senators failed to support even the major policies of their party. Moreover, I have heard more than one man prominent in public life remark that only a politically naive person would expect a Congressman to support the promises in his party's platform.

I do not believe, however, that the American people are as completely cynical as this. I am certain that today the people are showing more concern over the actions of their elected representatives than at any time since the formative years of our Republic. I believe that most citizens agree that we must find a way to make the people's representatives responsible for their action—responsible to those who listen to their promises and elect them on the basis of those promises.

I have always been concerned with the problem of party responsibility, and in recent weeks I have felt it was time for some plain and blunt words on the subject. Why? Because this past fall and winter—and on into spring—I have seen bill after bill in President Truman's legislative program killed, shelved, or emasculated by Democratic Congressmen who were elected by a majority that believed in carrying on the progressive policies of Franklin Roosevelt, as reaffirmed in the Democratic platform of 1944.

Those back home who voted for Democratic Congressmen have been dismayed at finding too many of them voting against Democratic legislation. Republicans have been equally dismayed to find Republicans voting for Democratic legislation. Senator WHERRY, of Nebraska, the Republican whip in the Senate, recently expressed deep concern over the confusion in voting among Republican Congressmen. He said that to elect New Dealers as Republican Congressmen would "only confound the present confusion and * * * betray those who entrust the future to Republican leadership."

Thus, it is not only the Democratic side that is concerned over party responsibility. Indeed, this is a problem that must concern everyone, since it involves our most cherished institution—representative government.

Believing as strongly as I do about all this, I first outlined my views informally and extemporaneously last March at a luncheon meeting of the Women's National Democratic Club in Washington. Long ago I came to the belief that when those in public life speak extemporaneously they must suffer the consequences, if any; also, I have no sympathy with those in public life who say, afterward, that they were misquoted in the newspapers—simply for the sake of covering up any "off the cuff" indiscretions they may have committed.

But still it was somewhat of a surprise to me to learn from a newspaper story the next day that I had called for a purge of Democratic recalcitrants in Congress—when what I did was to call for a system of discipline within the party organization. There is considerable difference.

Quite a bit of public furor was created on Capitol Hill and elsewhere in Washington by those brief luncheon remarks, yet, privately, I found much sympathy with my ideas.

MISQUOTED ON PURGE SPEECH

Since that luncheon in March I have tested out my ideas on a speaking trip across much of the country. I have found that the people do believe in thrashing out this question—here and now. And I had hoped that I had made it plain that I am not talking about a purge, but about party discipline. Yet a story on the front page of the New York Times about a speech I made in San Francisco in late April still led off by saying that I "called for a second time for a purge of Democrats"—even though the speech itself clearly made no mention of a purge in any sense of the word.

I am writing this article not only to expand my own views, but also in the hope that it will bring forth the ideas of others so that the Nation can have a beneficial debate on this vital subject. And I am dealing specifically with what should be done by the elected party. To this end, I want to present the following beliefs:

I believe that delegates should determine at a party's national convention certain major policies their candidates will go all out to support for the next 4 years. This platform should be drawn up—with all seriousness and after full democratic deliberation—in the knowledge that the citizens of the United States will hold the party accountable for its platform promises.

When the new Congress is organized, the leaders of the majority party in both Houses—in consultation with the President and his Cabinet—should immediately select from the platform several planks that, in their opinion, concern the most important problems facing the Nation. These planks would then become the test issues for determining party responsibility and party loyalty.

To amplify this point, let us select from the Democratic platform of 1944 some of the planks that could serve as test issues.

One of these test policies could be the party's pledge to promote international trade through reciprocal trade agreements. This was the policy of the Democratic Party during Franklin Roosevelt's first three terms, and the 1944 platform pledged the party to continue that policy.

Another Democratic policy that could be used as a test issue is the stated belief of the party that the Federal Government is responsible for using its powers to prevent economic catastrophes—such as serious inflation or deflation, and mass unemployment.

This has been the consistent policy of the party since 1933, and the coordination of our economy by the Federal Government has become firmly a fixed principle of the Democratic New Deal.

A third policy that could serve as a test of party responsibility is the party's belief in Federal development and conservation of the Nation's resources, through flood control, conservation of soil fertility, and the building of power projects. This policy also includes the party's belief that the Nation's human resources should be equally conserved and improved by the encouragement of adequate housing, health, and educational programs.

FAVORS MORE FREQUENT CAUCUSES

I suggest these issues as typical. In making the selections, the majority party leaders of the House and Senate should discuss party policy thoroughly with the party's Representatives and Senators before deciding on the test issues. For this purpose, I believe most strongly that party caucuses should be held more often.

In this connection, I believe that recommendations of the La Follette-Monroney Committee on the Organization of Congress should be put into effect promptly—particularly the recommendation that formal policy committees for both parties be established in the House and Senate, with funds appropriated to make the work of the committees available in usable form by our Congressmen. Such policy committees would augment the good accomplished by more frequent party caucuses. I heartily endorse the committee's recommendation that the majority policy committee in each House should hold frequent meetings to consider its role in expediting consideration and passage of matters pledged to the people by their party.

Once the basic test policies of the majority party have been selected, the Congressmen of that party would be required to vote with the party on bills designed to put these policies into action. But they would not have to vote with the party leadership on other party measures.

But who and what will require them to vote with the party? And what is to prevent the people from returning them to Congress in spite of their failure to live up to the party's platform promises? Here are some of the answers:

The party organization in Congress could deprive a dissident Congressman of his most valuable privileges. The first result of disloyalty to party principles could be the loss of membership in congressional committees. The dissenting Congressman would still have his democratic right to speak and vote, on the floor, but he could not participate in the highly important legislative decisions that are made in committee before bills reach the floor.

The constituents of a Congressman without committee privileges would not long return him to Congress.

Dissident Representatives or Senators could also be deprived of their privilege of influencing appointments to Federal offices. These appointments usually are subject to review by the national committee of the party in power, which could discipline a Congressman by completely ignoring his recommendations.

On first thought, this may seem like harsh discipline. But the demands of our time—the demands upon our democratic system—also are harsh. And we shall never have a healthy two-party system as long as a recalcitrant minority of the party in power fattens itself on party patronage and committee seniority and still flouts the party leadership that seeks to carry out a people's mandate.

Even if a Congressman had shown himself a party man in name but not in deed, he would still be free to seek renomination under the party label in his own State primary or convention. If such a dissident Congressman were reelected and then followed the party leadership on the test issues, party privileges would be restored to him.

I do not advocate, nor do I believe in, the direct use of the national party machinery against a dissident Congressman in his own State. I was opposed to the so-called purge of 1938—and I told President Roosevelt so on three different occasions. However, I do believe that the President and other party leaders have the obligation to make their views known about dissident Congressmen so that the voters can be fully informed. But the direct use of the national party machinery against dissidents in their own States would be an undemocratic act interfering with the people's right to choose their own representatives in free elections.

These, then, are the main points in my proposal for making parties responsbile for carrying out their promises to the people. But until some such plan is put into practice, anyone should feel free on occasion to support people who do not belong to their party, but who hold to the expressed national principles of that party. It was in this spirit, for example, that, with the sanction of President Roosevelt, I spoke for the reelection of young BOB LA FOLLETTE in 1940.

In outlining my proposal, I have not attempted to answer all possible objections as I went along. I well know, however, that all manner of sincere questions will arise and I shall try to anticipate some of them.

Someone is sure to ask: "With this kind of party discipline, wouldn't a Senator or Representative be merely a rubber stamp?" The answer is that no Congressman, as I have said, would be asked to follow the party leadership on every measure. He would be required to vote with the party only on those few basic issues that party leaders, after full consultation, decided were vital to the general welfare, from the party's own point of view.

Suppose a Congressman followed the party leadership on some measure against his own better judgment. He would be at perfect liberty to go back to the voters at home and tell them frankly that he voted against his own wishes; that he personally was opposed to the party policy on this particular measure, and that he would work unceasingly to change this party policy. Such activities should not be cause for imposing disciplinary action.

THE PROBLEM OF THE ISSUES

Others will ask, "If issues develop after the platforms have been voted on by the people, will the new issues be made a test of party loyalty?" The answer is "Yes; if they are basic to the party's position. For example, no one could have predicted, in the summer of 1944, that the control and utilization of atomic energy would become one of the most important issues before the present Congress. Certainly the peacetime development of atomic energy should be a basic issue for testing party loyalty and party responsibility. Then there is the British loan, which, in view of the Democratic position on the promotion of multilateral foreign trade, clearly should be included as a test issue.

Another question that may be asked is, "What can the people do about party platforms besides voting for or against the platforms presented to them at election time?" The people can have a great deal to say about the platforms of their parties if they become active in politics at the precinct level, and keep active.

All too often in the past we have become excited along about the end of October, only to become complacent again after the first week in November. The challenge to democracy today cannot be met by this kind of dabbling in politics.

The national interest demands that the people constantly exercise their privileges of citizenship right down to the precinct level.

If they do this, they will find that they have a powerful voice in the selection of delegates to party conventions and, through these delegates, in making party platforms.

If the present confusion should continue, all of the people will be the losers. Suppose, for instance, that the Republicans should run a plausible facsimile of a Progressive for President in 1948, on a plausible Progressive platform. And suppose the people, believing in the platform promises, should elect him and a Republican Congress.

Most of the Republican Congressmen elected on this platform, I am sure, would not support a progressive program. Legislation would be blocked. Nothing would be accomplished—unless the progressive Republicans could form a coalition with progressive Democrats to support a progressive Republican President. But this would be a practical impossibility, because the overwhelming majority of Republican Congressmen would be conservative or outright reactionary, and they could easily form a coalition with their kind on the Democratic side to defeat progressive legislation. We know from the bitter experience of recent months what harm this coalition can do to national progress.

DISILLUSIONED WITH G. O. P.

Up to now, I have tried to make this discussion as nonpartisan as possible. I was a Republican once—as my father and grandfather had been. I shared the same disillusionments they shared. I changed my party allegiance because I found that time and again the Republican Party failed to live up to its platform promises. I first actively campaigned for the Democratic ticket in 1928 because I believed in the sincerity of its "equality for agriculture" plank—and I had had enough opportunity to know that the Republican promises to the farmer, for years, had been only empty words. Ever since then, I have been fighting for the progressive principles proclaimed in the Democratic platform.

But having had a Republican background, I think I understand the Republican position. And I know, too, that many Republican leaders feel just as I do about party responsibility.

The following editorial I found quite pertinent:

"If Democrats and Republicans are to have legal standing as such, then Democrats should not make Republican decisions and Republicans should not make Democratic decisions. To permit this is to commit a fraud against the citizens who are trying to make their organization and their decisions according to the prevailing theory of political action and party responsibility."

This editorial is from the Chicago Tribune of April 23, 1938.

It was quite a surprise to find that Colonel McCormick and I were in agreement on even one thing. But this editorial does point to the heart of today's biggest political problem.

In the decisive days ahead, the American people have definite alternatives ahead of them.

They can make an effective and intelligent choice only if our political parties stand openly and honestly for clearly defined principles—and can be counted upon to put those principles into action when the people have made their decision.

WORLD GOVERNMENT—LETTER BY GRENVILLE CLARK

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter addressed by Mr. Grenville Clark, of Dublin, N. H., to the editor of the New York Times, which appeared in the Times of yesterday. Mr. Clark is a well-known lawyer of New York City, and he was one of the sponsors of the Dublin (N. H.) Conference, and was counsel for the Dublin Conference committee in preparing the petition to the General Assembly. The letter deals with the report made by Mr. Baruch, but particularly it deals with world government, and I wish to read a paragraph from the letter:

We should not be misled by the fact that the field of Federal jurisdiction is at the start to be restricted to atomic energy only. It remains true that within that field the plan calls for government in its true sense and with all its implications.

The announcement of this plan is heartening to those who have long perceived that unmodified sovereignty is incompatible with peace and that freedom from fear can be bought at no cheaper price than the acceptance of world government.

The letter is an illuminating one and is well worth the reading by all Members of the Senate.

I rose to say, Mr. President, that if Mr. Clark's evaluation of the proposal made by Mr. Baruch is accurate, and it seems to me to be an accurate and fair appraisal, then this proposal is one on which the American people are entitled to a referendum, and I may add that I have no doubt the American people will in time take a referendum upon the proposal if it should be accomplished without submission to the people in advance.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORLD GOVERNMENT—A BEGINNING IS SEEN IN BARUCH PROPOSALS ON ATOMIC CONTROL

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

Will the effort to create a limited world government succeed in time to forestall World War III? Will the recent proposals of the United States for an International Atomic Development Authority, the first great official plan for limited world government, become a reality? These are the great questions of our time. They transcend all other questions, foreign or domestic.

Let there be no mistake as to the effect of the proposals presented by Mr. Baruch in his forceful and eloquent speech on June 14. That plan calls for nothing less than a considerable beginning in Federal world government.

The essence of government is law—law in the sense of rules binding upon individuals and enforceable by sanctions imposed by the law-making authority. The American plan contains these essentials. Thus, when Mr. Baruch calls for a world agreement for renunciation of the bomb with "condign punishments set up for violations of the rules of control which are to be stigmatized as international crimes," he is speaking of nothing less than binding and enforceable world law. In a word, he is speaking of limited world government.

Thus also when he says that "national authorities for the control and development of atomic energy should to the extent necessary" be "subordinate" to the new authority, and that there must be a "clear demarcation of the scope of duties and responsibilities of such national authorities," he is speaking of world government with a federal character. He is discussing the old problem, familiar to all Americans, of the proper division between the delegated powers of a federal government and the powers reserved to the constituent units of the federation.

START OF JURISDICTION

We should not be misled by the fact that the field of federal jurisdiction is at the start to be restricted to atomic energy only. It remains true that within that field the plan calls for government in its true sense and with all its implications.

The announcement of this plan is heartening to those who have long perceived that unmodified sovereignty is incompatible with peace and that freedom from fear can be bought at no cheaper price than the acceptance of world government. The encouragement is the greater in that the proposals mark a complete reversal of American policy.

As James B. Reston has often pointed out in the Times, our own Government originally proposed that the permanent members of the Security Council, now the Big Five, should have a veto in the Council on substantive issues. At San Francisco, our delegation upheld this veto. Yet, Mr. Baruch, speaking officially for our administration, says "There must be no veto to protect those who violate their solemn agreements not to develop or use atomic energy for destructive purposes."

The implications of this statement can hardly be overstressed, since the principle cannot and will not be limited to atomic energy. If the veto will not do and if government must prevail in respect of the atom bomb, must not the same conclusion follow as to blockbusters and incendiaries, as to bacteriological and chemical warfare, and as to all heavy armament and means of mass destruction?

Is it not clear that once sovereignty is modified in one field, it will merely be a matter of time before modification occurs in other fields where the preservation of civilization plainly requires an extension of world law? As Mr. Baruch said, why should not the abolition of the veto apply to "the elimination of war" itself? Thus, this revolution in American policy implies much more than the control of atomic energy. It is no less than the entering wedge whereby world government will be gradually developed.

INCOMPLETENESS NOTED

Nevertheless, this recognition of the immense significance of the proposals should be accompanied by a realization of their incompleteness in at least two vital respects. Thus, on the question as to whether the new authority shall be independent of the United Nations or shall function under its direction, Mr. Baruch was indefinite. Here a dilemma is presented. On the one hand, it would be conceivable only as a last resort that the authority should function otherwise than under United Nations' control. If left independent, the authority, with its great mission and extensive powers exercisable without nullification by veto, would surely overshadow the United Nations, which would probably lapse into innocuous desuetude.

Moreover, it would be inefficient and confusing to have two world authorities functioning in closely related fields under different forms of organization and different voting procedures. On the other hand, to subject the authority to the control of the United Nations in its present form would be even more inadmissible, since the present defective structure of the United Nations would subject the authority to paralysis.

The other major omission is the absence of any definite proposal to solve the interrelated problems of balanced representation and voting procedure. Few will deny Mr. Baruch's proposition that a veto rule is wholly incompatible with the workable control of atomic energy. But unless this conclusion is supplemented by a well-devised new system of representation and voting, the mere condemnation of the veto will accomplish nothing.

To resolve these problems, the remedy is the early and necessarily radical amendment of the United Nations Charter, so as to make the United Nations itself a limited world government, with the authority as one of its agencies. The framing and adoption of such amendments would seem, indeed, to be absolutely indispensable, if the drastic alternative of entirely by-passing the United Nations is to be avoided. The next step, therefore, must be a discussion as to the kind of amendments required. And it would seem essential that all those having the responsibility, namely, the Atomic Energy Commission, the Security Council, and the General Assembly, should join in this discussion.

The most vital amendment must reconstitute the General Assembly on a fair basis of balanced representation that will take into account not only population but other relevant factors. This is the key problem because, until solved, it would be found impossible to deal with the companion issue of voting procedure or to determine the legislative authority to be conferred upon the Assembly.

In considering the amendments necessary to harmonize the new authority with the United Nations, Mr. Baruch and his associates are dealing with questions that have already had long consideration.

BALANCED REPRESENTATION

What factors besides population should be considered in the apportionment of representation in the Assembly, and what is the fairest and most acceptable plan of balanced representation? Should representatives vote in blocs for their countries or as individuals; and should all decisions be by majority or sometimes by a larger vote? What are the minimum legislative powers that the Assembly must have in order to prevent war?

It is possible that a recent detailed petition to the General Assembly for amendment of the Charter may be of use at this juncture. This petition resulted from the conference on world government at Dublin, N. H., in October 1945. The Dublin conference called for transforming the United Nations into a federal world government with "limited but adequate power to prevent war," this result to be achieved, if possible, by amendment of the Charter.

This petition called for discarding the obsolete conception of one vote for each country in the Assembly, whereby Liberia has an equal vote with the United States and Luxemburg with the United Kingdom. Instead, it proposed a concrete formula for weighting the representation of the member countries. Thus, to illustrate, the United States, the British Commonwealth and Empire, as a whole, and the Soviet Union, as a whole, would be allotted equal voting power, each with 65 representatives. China and France would each have 25 representatives, Belgium 9, Argentina 8, Norway 4, and so on, in view not merely of relative populations but of such factors as natural and industrial resources.

SPECIFIC POWERS

Assuming this basic change, the petition then proposed that all decisions be by majority vote with each representative voting as an individual. Finally, it set forth the specific legislative powers to be given to the reconstituted Assembly. These would permit the outlawing of war itself, the control of the atomic bomb and other major weapons, and the punishment of individuals for violation of the restricted class of laws that could be enacted.

It is of interest that, with the change of only a few phrases, these proposed amendments would include all the powers envisaged by Mr. Baruch for the Atomic Energy Authority. Perhaps these proposals, while far from perfect, can throw light upon the reconcilement of the authority with the United Nations and upon a plan of representation and voting which would make the elimination of the veto acceptable even to two-thirds of the American Senate and the Soviet Union.

Looking back even 1 year, immense progress has been made in the fight for world government. Where a few months ago those who insisted upon the inadequacy of the present Charter were called perfectionists, such disparagement is no longer heard. Instead of the veto being defended as essential, it is now admitted to be a fatal obstacle. By Mr. Baruch's great speech, the way has been opened for amendments of the Charter which, while confined at first to the control of atomic energy, can readily furnish a guaranty, in Mr. Baruch's phrase "against war itself."

OBSTACLES STILL

It would be folly to ignore, however, the formidable obstacles still to be overcome. Cynicism and defeatism still persist. Vestiges of isolationism survive. There remains a chasm of suspicion and misunderstanding between Russia and ourselves, for which we are equally at fault, and which must be bridged by mutual forbearance.

There may be some to say that the necessity for world government is so plain that its coming is inevitable. It is probably true that world government is on its way. But the question remains whether it will come soon or only after mankind has been still further chastened by another and yet more frightful war.

It is only a combination of clear political thought and of persistent work that can prevail in time. There was never a better moment to recall the famous saying of Mr. Justice Holmes: "The mode in which the inevitable comes to pass is through effort."

RENEWAL OF LEASE TO CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, ST. PAUL & PACIFIC R. R. CO.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the House of Representatives has just sent to the Senate the bill (H. R. 5876) authorizing the Department of Agriculture to renew a lease on some gravel beds in Montana. The office of the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] asked me to watch for the bill and request that the Senate consider it on its arrival in the Senate. The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has considered a similar bill, which provides word for word what is provided by the House bill, and the Senate bill is on the calendar at this time.

My request is that the Senate now take up the House bill and pass it. There is no objection to it from any source.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill coming over from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 5876) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to extend and renew to Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co. for the term of 10 years a lease to Henry A. Scandrett, Walter J. Cummings, and George I. Haight, trustees of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co., of a tract of land in the United States Department of Agriculture Range Livestock Experiment Station, in the State of Montana, and for a right-of-way to said tract, for the removal of gravel and ballast material, executed under the authority of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1936, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I understand this bill in its substance provides for a renewal of a previous lease given to the trustees of the Milwaukee road, permitting them to enter upon land of the Department of Agriculture and take gravel therefrom at a fixed figure agreed upon in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator is correct. The present lease will expire at the end of this month, which is only 5 or 6 days hence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5876) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2014, now on the calendar, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Swanson, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 2218. An act to amend the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934, as amended; and

S. 2219. An act to extend for the period of 1 year the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, approved December 2, 1941, as amended.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3565) to authorize the charging of tolls for the passage or transit of Government traffic over the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5716) to amend the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. HOBBS, and Mr. HANCOCK were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

EXTENSION OF SECOND WAR POWERS ACT OF 1942

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5716) to amend the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCARRAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. HUFFMAN, and Mr. FERGUSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

RETURN OF PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT OFFICES TO STATE OPERATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 4437) to provide for the return of public employment offices to State operation, to amend the act of Congress approved June 6, 1933 (48 Stat. 113), and for other purposes.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, on Friday last House bill 4437, providing for the return to State operation of public employment offices, was made the unfinished business. I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Albert D. Misler, attorney in the Solicitor's Office of the Department of Labor, be permitted to sit beside me during the discussion of this bill in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I believe at the very outset it should be made clear to the Members of the Senate that House bill 4437 provides for the return of the Employment Service to State operation. I might say also at the outset that it is throughout a compromise bill. It probably does not represent exactly what either majority or minority Members would have written. It does represent what was worked out as the best solution of the situation which we could agree upon and which I think practically all the members of the committee thought it desirable to pass. I personally, like some of the other members of the committee, favor the establishment of a permanent single system of public employment offices, rather than 48 separate State systems.

We believe that a national public employment service is necessary to meet the employment problems which will confront the Nation in the foreseeable future. We who advocate permanent federalization are firmly convinced—and we believe our convictions are borne out by the record—that a nationally directed system of public employment offices, not jurisdictionally limited by geographical and political boundaries, can more adequately and more effectively carry out a program designed to effectuate maximum employment and eliminate wasteful turn-over of workers in industry. However, there seems to be in the committee—and I think perhaps in Congress—a belief that these services should be returned to the States, and I shall support this bill on that theory.

In full recognition of the President's agreement that the employment service will be returned to State operation as soon as the unified service is no longer needed to meet the demobilization, reconversion, and other problems growing out of the war, and in view of the position recently taken by the Congress with respect to this subject, the committee undertook to formulate an agreed-upon bill which would return the United States Employment Service to the States under conditions which will best safeguard the public interests. To that end we have held hearings which extended intermittently over a period of 4½ months. I believe that it should be clearly pointed out that this bill is the first measure considered by the Congress on this subject, on which hearings have been held during which witnesses representing all sections of our economy were invited to present their views. All previous legislation on this subject considered by the Congress since VJ-day has been in the form of riders attached to other legislation.

From these hearings we have developed the practical and legal problems which must be solved in connection with the transfer. After careful study of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives, we concluded that the House bill was grossly inadequate to the solution of those problems. We are therefore reporting to the Senate an amended bill. In this bill we have provided sound solutions to the problems of transferring our public employment offices to State operation and providing a sound basis for their efficient operation after the transfer. We have achieved a compromise bill; every provision of the bill has the acceptance of almost the entire committee. Through close analysis, we have met, to the maximum extent practicable, objections raised to provisions which were proposed for incorporation in this bill.

Perhaps the most difficult issue which arose in connection with this legislation was the determination of the date for the return of the employment service to State operation. The views presented to the committee varied between recommendations for permanent Federal operation of the employment service, the President's recommendation for return of the employment service to State operation on June 30, 1947, and the request of the State unemployment compensation administrators for the return of the employment service to the States on June 30, 1946. So there were three well-known suggestions.

The compromise date agreed upon and provided for in this bill requires the return of the employment service to State operation not later than December 31, 1946.

This date was agreed upon as the earliest date that the transfer could be effected without disastrous disruption to the employment service programs. Disruption at a time when an effective employment service is most imperative and most vital must be avoided at all costs. Those who for obvious reasons have agitated for the immediate return of the employment service to State operation, at whatever cost to the public interest, have urged that it is the moral obligation of the Federal Government to do so. We are told that the moral obligation to return the employment service to State operation immediately stems from the fact that the emergency for which the employment service was loaned to the Federal Government is now over. Current economic conditions, involving prices and wage stabilizations, might be argued as an answer to this suggestion. However, since the bill provides for a return at a specific time—and, as we believe, the earliest date at which it could be returned without a disruption of the service—the date is not only a compromise, but I think a reasonable compromise.

There are two basic reasons why it is imperative to defer the dismantling of the nationally directed, unified system of public employment offices we now have. First, present labor market conditions and manpower problems are peculiarly national in scope. Our problems are now more numerous than at any time in the history of the Nation because of the return of soldiers and sailors to this country. Our present system, which operates on a national basis without regard to State boundaries, can most effectively meet and solve these problems. Secondly, the transfer of the employment service to State operation, the dispersion of a single system into 48 separate systems, at a time when the work load of the local offices is at an all-time high, will entail serious disruption to their services, will inevitably result in their inability to render maximum assistance to the groups most urgently in need of assistance now, the veterans, displaced war workers, women, youths, and the handicapped.

I strongly urge, Mr. President, that any decision we make with respect to the date for the return of the public employment offices to State operation should be made in light of its effect upon both these problems.

The veterans' problem, for example, is in every sense a national problem requiring action on a national basis. Millions of discharged veterans and hundreds of thousands who are yet to be released must still be adjusted into the civilian economy. Many veterans who have returned to their former positions are still seeking better employment opportunities, in order to utilize the skills acquired in the armed services. Many veterans are entering the labor market for the first time; many acquired skills in the armed services for which there is no direct civilian counterpart. All these need and ask for employment counseling. All these are seeking jobs without regard to State lines. More difficult problems are presented by the disabled veterans who are now entering the labor market on an unprecedented scale. To these who were disabled in the service of their country we owe a special duty, a duty to assist them in their readjustment to civilian employment through rehabilitation and selective placement programs. The Congress itself foresaw and made provision for these problems. In June of 1944 it enacted title IV of the GI bill of rights, to require the expansion of veterans' placement facilities and to emphasize the responsibility of the Federal Government to maintain veterans' placement and counseling services.

Even apart from the veteran, we are now confronting the greatest movement in our peacetime history of workers and employers across State lines. The war worker who must convert his wartime skill to peacetime use is in no sense restricted by State lines. The displacement of wartime civilians, particularly women and older workers, by returning veterans, makes high labor turn-over the order of the day. In some areas acute labor shortages still exist, but the solution of the problem is impeded by the lack of adequate housing for immigrants. To these problems we must add those arising from the new manpower demands for the housing program, the food-production program, and plants whose reconversion has been impeded by industrial strife. The veterans and displaced workers who are swelling the stream of interstate migration, seeking employment opportunities wherever their skills can best be utilized, represent only a part of the national placement problem which demands unified, rather than divided, attention.

This Nation is now being called upon to assist in alleviating the famine which threatens the major portion of the globe. This task requires the maximum utilization of all our agricultural and food-processing resources. Our agricultural and food-processing industries are particularly dependent upon the recruitment of workers across State lines.

Probably one of the most serious, if not the most serious, of all the problems with which this country is confronted is the extreme housing shortage. It is estimated that the veterans' emergency housing program will require the recruitment of one and one-half million workers, many of whom must be recruited across State lines. In addition, we are dependent upon our Nation-wide system of public employment offices to supply the workers required to avoid bottlenecks in the production of building supplies.

This argument is advanced in order that the Senate may have before it the situation showing the necessity of considering well before requiring a hasty return of these facilities, and in support of the proposition that at least until December 31, 1946, the date set out in the bill, the employment services should not be disturbed.

To our committee, Mr. President, it was self-evident that a system of public employment offices in which every local office is a part of a unified Nation-wide system can most effectively meet these complex placement problems. To our committee, Mr. President, it was self-evident that our country is now facing, and will be facing, these placement problems for the balance of this year.

The natural result of these chaotic labor-market conditions is the tremendous work load which today is being carried by our local employment offices. More than 14,000,000 reception contacts a month are currently being handled by our local employment offices. This shows the tremendous demand for aid for employment purposes. This is a staggering work load. Not only does it surpass all wartime figures but it is the largest in the history of our public employment-office system. The most conservative predictions forecast no appreciable decline in this work load before the end of this year.

It has been urged by representatives of the State unemployment compensation agencies—and I may add that they have not been conversant with the details of the administration of the employment service during the past 4 years—that the transfer of our public employment offices from Federal to State operation can be effected within 30 days without disruption to the service. Such a contention is patently absurd. The transfer and division of a single, unified, Nation-wide system to 51 separate and independent jurisdictions, even under normal circumstances, will result in substantial disruption to the service. How, then, can virtually disastrous disruption be avoided if such a transfer is undertaken at a time when the local office staffs are already burdened with a staggering work load? At the very time when the time and energies of the employees would most be needed to meet this work load their time and energies would be diverted to reorganization and administrative problems. The drafting of policies and procedures to meet the needs of State-operated programs, the preparation and review of organizational and operating plans, and the multitude of negotiations and problems incident to the transfer of personnel, renegotiation of leases, and reorientation of personnel to revised programs, policies, and procedures are only some of the time-consuming problems which would divert the energies of the local office personnel.

The President in his memorandum disapproving the rescission bill cautioned against such action during the peak-load period of our public employment offices. General Bradley appeared before both the House Committee on Labor and our committee to voice his fear that the return of the Employment Service to State operation during this peak-load period will seriously disrupt the servicemen's readjustment allowance and veterans' placement programs. He was supported in his views by some of the major veterans' organizations, whose representatives appeared before our committee to urge that the transfer be deferred. Mr. President, because of these factors, I cannot urge too strongly that we defer the transfer of our public employment offices to State operation until at least the end of this calendar year which is the date set out in the bill now before us.

Apart from the date of the transfer, our committee found two groups of problems that require careful legislative action to assure a sound and orderly transition from Federal to State operation of our public employment office system. The first involves the transfer of the offices as going concerns. The second involves the financial and other provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act, which would apply to the States' operation of the offices after the transfer.

Our committee found that there was unanimity of opinion that our public employment office system should be transferred from Federal to State operation as a going concern. Obviously, the greatest danger to such a transfer is undue turn-over of personnel. To avoid such turn-over, the trained and experienced employees now employed in local public-employment offices must be transferred to State employment.

Mr. CARVILLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. CARVILLE. Does what the Senator is now saying apply to the director of the unemployment compensation division?

Mr. TUNNELL. No. It does not apply to the national director who, it is provided in this bill, shall be appointed by the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. CARVILLE. Would it apply to the State director?

Mr. TUNNELL. I believe that there would have to be a qualification of the State director.

Mr. CARVILLE. In my State, according to the original act, the State director was not under civil service. He was selected by the governor to handle the employment section.

Mr. TUNNELL. Under this bill it is not provided that the State director shall be under national civil service, but that there shall be established a system of qualification under the State organization.

Mr. CARVILLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. CARVILLE. What I am particularly interested in is whether the director, who would be appointed by the State authority, would be under the merit system so far as that system itself is concerned?

Mr. TUNNELL. There is no exception to be made so far as the director is concerned.

Mr. President, to assure continuity of service and at the same time, maintain sound personnel and merit-system practices, the employees must be entitled to permanent appointment in the State service if they become eligible, after qualifying or competitive examinations, for such appointments. Some disagreement was manifested before our committee as to whether the present employees of our local public employment office system should be given qualifying or competitive examinations under the State merit systems. The bill recommended by our committee leaves that choice to each State.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUFFMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I am told that in many of the States, including Ohio and Massachusetts, laws have already been enacted providing expressly for the return of employees to State service, and that the provisions in the State laws and in the bill now before the Senate are in conflict with regard to the terms under which the employees should be returned. Has the Senator any information on that subject?

Mr. TUNNELL. I have not heard that statement made before. However, I do not believe there will be any difficulty if the merit system is operated on a good-faith basis in the particular State concerned. I think that was the intention of the committee.

Mr. President, since June 6, 1933, our public employment office system has been operated, except during the war emergency period, under a Federal-State cooperative arrangement as provided for in the Wagner-Peyser Act.

When the States resume the operation of our local public employment office system, the provisions of that act will again become applicable. Actual operating experience since June 1933 as well as other developments, have demonstrated the need for several amendments to the act. In order to provide a sound and up-to-date foundation for the resumption by the States of the operation of public employment offices, those amendments should be adopted now, as a part of the legislation providing for the transfer. The bill reported by our committee includes such amendments.

The need for amendments to the Wagner-Peyser Act, the basic employment service act enacted 13 years ago, has manifested itself time and again. I may add that title II of this bill is, in substance, the present Wagner-Peyser Act with proposed amendments. When the Wagner-Peyser Act was passed, there were no Federal or State unemployment insurance laws on the statute books. Since that date, however, the Social Security Act has been passed, requiring the payment of unemployment insurance through public employment offices. At the State and local levels, unemployment insurance and public employment office programs have been closely coordinated. However, as of today, at the Federal level there exists no legislative foundation for the coordination of our employment service and unemployment insurance activities. Such a requirement has been included in this bill.

Similarly, some of the present provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act impose unnecessarily cumbersome procedures. Others have proved inadequate.

With your permission, Mr. President, I should like, briefly, to discuss the most significant amendments to the Wagner-Peyser Act, recommended by our committee, and in connection with each, to review the objections interposed. But first let me say that representatives of the State employment security agencies voiced vigorous objections to any amendments to the Wagner-Peyser Act. They urged the return of the employment service to the States on the same basis as it had been operated prior to the federalization. It is significant, however, that none of the bills which the State agencies supported and urged upon our committee would return the employment service to the States on the same basis as it had been operated before the federalization. The House bill, supported by the State agencies, eliminated the dollar-for-dollar matching provisions of the present act and substituted instead, 100-percent financing by the Federal Government. This constituted a major substantive change in the present act. Similar provisions are contained in the bill reported by our committee and were contained in the rescission bill previously passed by the Senate. Our committee found no difference of opinion on this point. So far as I remember, no objection was voiced by any member of the committee to the payment of the full amount of the cost by the Federal Government. There certainly was no objection registered on the part of representatives of the States.

Another amendment to the Wagner-Peyser Act, recommended by our committee, requires the States to establish and maintain personnel standards on a merit basis. This provision is virtually identical to a similar provision in title III of the Social Security Act. It was opposed by the State agencies on the ground that employment-service employees, after the return of the service to the States, should be covered by the Social Security Act standards which apply to State unemployment-insurance employees. It was contended by representatives of the State agencies that authority vested in two separate administrative agencies to promulgate merit standards covering the same employees could potentially result in conflicting standards. This contention is without merit. The Social Security Act merit standards apply only to State employees who are engaged in unemployment-insurance functions, and paid from funds granted under that act. The great majority of employment-service employees will have no unemployment-insurance functions and would therefore not be subject to the Social Security Act merit-system standards. Our committee recommends the incorporation of this provision in the Wagner-Peyser Act, in order to incorporate in that act well-established policies of the Congress under similar grant-in-aid statutes. To the extent that State employees are used interchangeably between the State unemployment insurance and employment service programs, it is reasonable to assume that the merit-system standards will be coordinated.

Another amendment to the Wagner-Peyser Act, recommended by our committee, would incorporate in the act, long-established and commonly accepted minimum principles governing the referral of workers by public employment agencies, that is, that workers should not be referred to jobs below their highest skill unless a reasonable effort has been made to place them in jobs which to utilize their highest skill, and that workers should not be referred to jobs in which the wages, hours, or other conditions are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality. The first principle is so self-evident that it requires no explanation. The second principle has long been recognized by the Congress and is now incorporated in Federal legislation governing our unemployment-insurance program. It is likewise incorporated in every State unemployment-insurance law in the United States. Our basic enabling legislation for our Nation-wide system of public employment offices would be incomplete without these principles.

Our committee was urged to include in the Wagner-Peyser Act, a provision which would authorize the Secretary of Labor to maintain and operate a State-wide system of public employment offices in any State which became ineligible for grants under the act. It was contended by those who opposed this provision that this was a device to permit continued Federal operation of the public employment offices. On the other hand, representatives of the Department of Labor, as well as other affected public officials, strongly urged, and, as this body will recall, the President likewise urged in his memorandum disapproving the rescission bill, that the national interest in the continued operation of our local public employment offices in each State requires such a safeguard in the event any State, for a variety of possible reasons, ceases to operate such offices.

Under title IV of the GI bill of rights, the Congress recognized and provided for the primary responsibility of the national Government to assure adequate and effective placement and counseling service for some 15,000,000 veterans. Under the Wagner-Peyser Act Federal grants in aid are available on condition that the States provide the essential services through their public employment offices, and operate such offices with reasonable efficiency. Hence, under the present provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act, if a State fails to maintain essential services with reasonable efficiency, Federal funds must be withdrawn. In practical effect the withdrawal of Federal funds would mean the closing of the public employment offices in the State.

Obviously, in such a situation, those whom the Congress seeks to assist under this legislation; that is, veterans, workers, and employers, are most seriously penalized. If the Federal Government is to carry out its obligations to veterans under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, if the Federal Government is to carry out its obligation to maintain a system for clearing labor between the States, if the Federal Government is to avoid penalizing the beneficiaries of a program for the deficiencies of State officials, the Wagner-Peyser Act must include a provision authorizing the continued operation of public employment offices in States which cease to operate their own offices. Our committee weighed carefully the views expressed by those who advocated and those who opposed such a provision. We concluded that the contingencies feared by both opponents and proponents could and should be guarded against. We believe that has been accomplished in the bill as reported by our committee.

The compromise which this bill contains removes the threat of continued Federal operation and at the same time provides reasonable assurance that public employment offices will be maintained in all States. Under the provisions drafted by our committee, if a State ceases to be eligible for funds, the Federal Government will be authorized to operate public employment offices in the State for a limited period of 3 months and may expend in any fiscal year for such purposes not more than $1,000,000 unless the governor of the State specifically requests the Federal Government to continue its operation for more than 3 months, or unless funds are specifically appropriated by the Congress for that purpose. These time and monetary limitations will prevent the Federal agency from using this authorization as a cloak for continuing direct Federal operations, and at the same time will permit the continued maintenance of the service for those whom the Congress seeks to assist. It will also provide a reasonable time within which a State which has failed to qualify for Federal grants can take the measures necessary to correct its deficiencies.

Mr. President, I have discussed the significant amendments to the Wagner-Peyser Act which our committee recommends after careful and extended study of the entire subject matter. I cannot close without one further comment. It has been repeatedly charged, in vague and general terms, that this bill contains broad grants of authority which would permit detailed domination of the States' administration by the Secretary of Labor. Several of the amendments I have described, are cited as a basis for such charges. In addition, the Secretary's authority to promulgate rules, regulations, and standards of efficiency is cited as a basis for such charges. I say flatly that such charges are absolutely without foundation in this bill. Authority to promulgate rules and regulations necessary to administer a program is so common a provision in Federal and State statutes as not to warrant taking the time of this body to discuss the provision. But apart from the common character of the provision that authorization was included in the Wagner-Peyser Act as enacted by the Congress in 1933. That authorization is not a new amendment, recommended by our committee. Incidentally, a similar authorization was included in the rescission bill—which was passed by both Houses of Congress, but was vetoed by the President—relating to the return of the Employment Service to the States.

It has also been claimed that the amendments to the Wagner-Peyser Act, recommended by our committee, constitute such substantial changes that the States would not be able to resume the maintenance of State public employment offices without further State legislation. In truth and in fact, the changes which we have recommended are already implicit in the present act and in no sense represent a departure from its fundamental principles. However, out of an excess of caution, our committee has included in this bill a clause which in effect suspends, until after the next session of the State's legislature, the operation of any provision of the Wagner-Peyser Act which requires additional legislation in a particular State. That clause has been added in section 4 of the act, and occurs in lines 5 to 14, inclusive, on page 7 of the bill.

Mr. President, I know that representatives of the State unemployment compensation agencies are seeking to defeat this bill, regardless of its reasonableness, in order that they may, through a rider in the appropriation measure for the United States Employment Service, secure the return of the public employment offices without the safeguards which our committee recommends, and which are incorporated in the bill. I submit that the major portion of the subject matter covered in the bill will be permanently applicable. I submit that the importance of this subject matter renders it inappropriate for disposition through an appropriation measure. The importance of the subjects covered in the bill requires enactment at the earliest possible date of legislation making permanent provision for the problems I have discussed.

In conclusion, I again wish to stress the fact that the bill which is now before the Senate was agreed upon by almost the entire committee after long and arduous hearings and executive sessions, after all the witnesses were heard, and all the objections carefully weighed and considered. No one who had a legitimate interest in this legislation was denied an opportunity to present his views.

The bill is a reasonable compromise measure. It gives no one any wide and unrestricted authority. It brings up-to-date the basic legislation under which our Federal-State cooperative employment service program is to be administered. Its proposed changes reflect 13 years of development and operating experience. It provides adequate standards to guide both the Secretary and the States in carrying out their respective responsibilities in administering an effective Federal-State cooperative employment service program.

I recommend the bill to the Senate.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, the able Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL] has just presented the reasons why the measure now before the Senate should be acted upon immediately in the form in which it has been reported to the Senate.

I should like to say that, in my opinion, the pending bill, H. R. 4437, represents legislative action at its best. Members of the subcommittee, under the able chairmanship of the Senator from Delaware, who had major responsibility for preparing the bill, gave unsparingly of their time to a full consideration of all the angles of every problem, economic, legal, or practical, which it could be foreseen the proposed legislation might raise. The subcommittee secured assistance toward full and fair consideration through welcoming to its hearings all interested parties, whether individuals or representatives of organizations, whether private citizens or public officials. In addition, the subcommittee has participated with the full committee in executive sessions for exhaustive consideration of any alternative bills dealing with the subject of the return of the United States Employment Service to the States. No previously proposed legislation on this subject has received such adequate attention as this bill.

Only a singularly unreasonable person would maintain that the bill does not cover all its objectives. The report of the very able chairman of the subcommittee states these objectives as: First, to fix the date for the transfer from Federal to State operation of the local and State employment offices; second, to provide for the transfer to State agencies of properties and records used and personnel employed in State and local employment offices in order to assure that the transition from Federal to State operation is effected without confusion and disruption to the service; and third, to amend the Wagner-Peyser Act to provide, out of the knowledge gained by almost 13 years of operating experience, a sound and permanent basis for Federal-State cooperation in the maintenance of a national system of public employment offices which will meet the needs of veterans, employers, workers, and the public of the Nation.

With respect to the first objective, H. R. 4437 provides for retention of the United States Employment Service in that governmental department which should have primary concern with activities involing the labor force, namely, the Department of Labor. It requires the transfer of operating offices of the Employment Service to State administration not later than December 31, 1946. This date is sufficiently imminent to encourage immediate preparation for the transfer, but sufficiently in the future to allow such preparation to be made in an orderly fashion.

To meet the second objective, the bill requires that the States shall transfer the Federal personnel engaged in State and local employment office functions to State employment on the date of the transfer of the Employment Service to the States; and that they shall afford such employees a reasonable opportunity to acquire eligibility for continued employment in the State employment service. This provision will prevent any substantial loss of experienced Employment Service personnel which might hinder full and efficient operation of employment offices in the period immediately following transfer. The bill further provides for the transfer of property and records of State and local employment offices to the States.

With respect to the third objective, H. R. 4437 amends the Wagner-Peyser Act to eliminate certain provisions of the original legislation which have proved to be impractical; to amplify other provisions in accordance with requirements for growth and development in the Employment Service; and to add new provisions which will assure continuous operation of a superior service by a high caliber of personnel.

It seems obvious to me that this bill represents the best possible compromise at this time between the views of those who, like myself, believe that we should have a federally operated employment service, and of those who as sincerely believe that the service can be most efficiently operated by the States. For this reason, I am more than willing personally to support the recommendation of the committee that the bill be passed.

FACTS OF LEGISLATION TO RETURN THE UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE TO THE STATES

In December 1945, as the Senator from Delaware has pointed out, the President pocket vetoed an appropriation rescission bill containing a rider which would have dismantled the USES and turned it over to State operation in 120 days. In his veto message the President indicated that this action was being taken at a time and under conditions which he could not approve.

In January the House passed a bill sponsored by Representative DIRKSEN, of Illinois, which is substantially similar to the one which the President vetoed. Meanwhile, the Senate Committee on Education and Labor was holding hearings on several bills relating to the USES, including S. 1510, a bill which embodied the President's recommendations. After extensive hearings, the committee reported a bill on April 30 which contains substantially the President's recommendations, modified to meet all reasonable objections which witnesses raised to specific provisions. In an effort to reach agreement within the committee on a bill, the date for the transfer was set at December 31, 1946.

The issue in this legislation focuses on the date of the transfer. President Truman's request for continued Federal operation of the USES until June 30, 1947, is based on a number of aspects of the heavy responsibilities of the administration for guiding the Nation successfully through the reconversion period.

To transfer the employment offices to new management at this time would inevitably disrupt the services provided to veterans and others seeking employment. The USES is confronted with the greatest work load in the Nation's history, with over 14,000,000 individuals per month calling at the employment offices for service. In no previous time in the country's history have labor market conditions been so chaotic and unstable. The rate of demobilization is not synchronized with the rate of reconversion to peacetime production. Thus the Nation is experiencing the contradictory trends of increased employment accompanied by increasing unemployment.

Widespread occupational and industrial shifts are occurring, and they are accompanied by extensive migration and job changing. Today we have in the labor market more maladjusted or totally unadjusted workers than ever before in our history. The veteran whose only work experience was as a heavy gunner; the paratroop captain who left off operating a mimeograph to go to war; the farm laborer who doubled his previous income as a riveter in an aircraft factory; the 17-year-old boy who dropped out of school to go to work; and the machinist who lost his right hand in the Battle of the Bulge. These workers, veterans in particular, are visiting local employment offices asking assistance and guidance in their readjustment to peacetime employment.

Even when the peak load of the reconversion period has passed, the transfer of the employment service from Federal to State administration will be a difficult and complex task. To undertake such a transfer at a time when the Employment Service is burdened with a staggering work load can result only in a substantial impairment of the services at a time when they are most urgently needed.

A transfer at this time would divert the energies of the Employment Service staff from the problems of servicing returning veterans and displaced war workers and would direct these energies instead to problems involved in dealing with reorganization, the drafting of policies and procedures to meet the needs of State-operated programs, discussions with State officials for the purpose of developing operating procedures, the transfer of personnel from Federal to State employment, the preparation of civil-service examinations, and morale problems of State and local office personnel created by job uncertainty and prospective salary reductions. This diversion of energies during the peak-loan period should be avoided at all costs.

There are additional reasons why Federal operation is important during the reconversion and demobilization period. Among these reasons is the necessity for breaking manpower bottlenecks that involve a coordination of activities on a national basis. The Nation is now called upon to assist in alleviating a world-wide food crisis. This task requires the maximum utilization of all of our agricultural and food-processing resources. The food-processing industry is particularly dependent upon the recruitment of workers across State lines, and their prewar experience does not dispose them favorably to State operation of the interstate clearance machinery.

The housing industry also requires assistance from the United States Employment Service in the form of intensive interstate recruitment of labor. It is estimated that the veterans' emergency housing program will require the recruitment of a million and a half workers. To prevent the development of bottlenecks in the production of building supplies will require a substantial effort on the part of the USES similar to that which was exerted to staff war production.

While exact figures are not available for the number of workers who must be recruited for the food-processing and other rural industries, such as timber and pulpwood, in the next year, it is estimated that it will total several hundred thousand.

The opponents of the administration's position—primarily the State unemployment compensation administrators and most of the State governors—argue that the Employment Service was borrowed from the States by the President for the emergency, that the emergency is now over, and the Federal Government has a moral obligation to return the Employment Service to the States, and that in any case the States can handle the problems of the reconversion period more efficiently than can the Federal Government because they are closer to the local communities and the people. They further argue that it is impossible to administer efficiently the unemployment-compensation programs for which they are responsible without having control over the Employment Service.

The administration believes that the emergency is not yet over, as has been recognized by Congress itself in the continuation of the War Powers Act and other legislation. As against the majority of the governors who are demanding the return of the USES to State operation, a substantial number of mayors and other municipal officials have requested continued Federal operation of the USES during the reconversion and demobilization period so as to avoid a disruption of services. The unemployment-compensation program is being administered in an efficient manner at the present time under Federal operation of the USES, and General Bradley—who is responsible for the payment of servicemen's readjustment allowances to veterans through the State unemployment-compensation agencies—has requested continued Federal operation of the USES and has expressed the fear that a return of the USES to State operation at this time might endanger the present efficient administration of the veterans' readjustment-allowance program.

SUMMARY OF EDITORIAL COMMENT ON RETURN OF USES TO STATES

In the discussions on this subject last winter, when we passed H. R. 4407, the measure that later was vetoed, it was asserted that there was a widespread demand in the so-called grass roots of the country for the immediate return of the USES to the States.

At that time I did not feel that those assertions were entirely true, but I did not know. So in the interim I caused to be made a review of the editorial comment of newspapers on the subject from every section of the country. Some of these editorials were published in our greatest metropolitan centers. Others appeared in newspapers published in communities so small they are barely able to support a daily newspaper. Still others were published in communities of varying size between those two extremes.

I would like to read excerpts from some of these editorials. The first of these editorials is as follows:

The logic of President Truman's demand that the United States Employment Service remain intact for a year from next July has always seemed to us unassailable.

The problem of finding employment for millions of returning veterans and other millions of displaced war workers surely requires for solution a centralized agency with national jurisdiction, to say nothing of the valuable experience acquired by the USES in guiding the vast migration of labor essential to war production. And it needs time. Yet, the House, by an overwhelming majority, has voted that the facilities and personnel of the Service be returned not later than June 30 of this year to the States from which they were borrowed.

One asks why and gets no coherent explanation.

That quotation is from the New York Herald Tribune.

From New York let us journey to the Midwest, and I take Senators to Cincinnati. I quote from the Enquirer, a distinguished journal of that city:

The United States Employment Service has handled the job all during the war and handled it well with an experienced civil-service staff. There certainly should be no rush about detaching it from duty, particularly in view of the fact that the USES is working so closely with the returning veterans and has facilities for handling their needs. * * * Ultimately, of course, the service should be a State or local function. But very definitely there should be no hurry about transferring it.

In the great State of California to which, during the war period, more than 1,000,000 war workers migrated from every section of the country there is another of the Nation's great newspapers. It is the San Francisco Chronicle. I quote now from Chester Rowell, one of the Chronicle's distinguished editors. He says:

President Truman favors (as does Governor Warren) this return (of the USES to the States) as rapidly as practical. But to hurry it like this would disrupt the whole operation, defer reconstruction, and increase unemployment.

Now let us return to the Midwest and I quote the sentiment of a leading newspaper of northern Ohio, the Cleveland Plain Dealer. It says, in part:

From time to time this newspaper has viewed with alarm the tendency of the Federal Government to encroach on prerogatives of the States. * * * This philosophy applies to the States' employment service which the Federal Government took over during the war. The Plain Dealer agrees with President Truman, however, that it is too early to return the employment offices to the States. As far as the services which these offices were set up to perform are concerned, the emergency has not yet ended. It will not be ended until the industrial reconversion program is much further advanced than it is at the present time.

The next quotation is from an editorial in the Elk City, Okla., News, a city with a total population of 5,021 persons:

President Truman, by pocket veto, has refused to permit the transfer of the employment service back to the States and thus has blocked the breaking up of the United States Employment Service into 48 separate units. We believe this action was wise. * * * We can see no reason for destroying this system as this time when hundreds are seeking work and employers are crying for particular skills. And above all else, veterans must be found jobs. Who can be so naive as to say this problem would be tackled by States on the same basis and with equal vigor as it will as a national service?

From Mississippi comes the next editorial, published in the Oxford Eagle. This small city has a population of 3,433. This editorial says:

President Truman's veto of a bill that would have returned control of employment offices to the States has at least temporarily halted a change that would be disastrous during a period where much shifting of workers is certain.

The Chicago Daily News makes this editorial comment:

It is true * * * that the United States Employment Service is at the peak of its activity and that a change in its administration would undoubtedly interrupt its work at an inconvenient time. It is also true labor is extremely mobile at this time. Hundreds of thousands of families are on the move from one State to another. This is inevitable during the period of reconversion. There never has been a time when the problems of employment and unemployment were more national in character. Even those who in general are eager to see the States and local communities regain a larger share of governmental responsibility must question the haste of Congress to put this particular function back into their hands.

I believe that, should a poll be taken, the sentiment of this body would unanimously affirm the declaration that South Carolina, of all the States, has given tangible support to the theory of States' rights. I quote now from the editorial page of the Spartanburg Journal:

President Truman's veto of the congressional bill to return the United States Employment Service to the jurisdiction of the States within the next 100 days was a courageous and intelligent action. * * * The USES was first taken over by the Federal Government because there was a very pressing need for coordinated effort on a national scale to find men for many new war jobs. Few denied the necessity at that time. Today the situation is equally urgent, though conditions are reversed. Today there is urgent need to find jobs for hundreds of thousands of people who previously had crossed State lines to get war jobs. There is still need for coordinated effort on a national scale. * * * The Journal believes in States' rights when States are right. This time we think they and Congress are wrong in urging an early return of the USES to State control.

The Evening Bulletin of Philadelphia, of which Robert McLean is president and publisher, and also president of that great news-gathering cooperative, the Associated Press, makes this comment:

The issue is one on which the public has not had much illumination, but, for the present, at least, a continuation of Federal administration has much to recommend it. The problem of reemploying displaced persons in industrial reconversion is obviously national in scope, and greater coordination could be achieved through unified control than through a multitude of State agencies operating independently.

Let us move to the Midwest again and see what the St. Louis Post-Dispatch has to say on the subject:

Soon after the war effort began job placement was centralized under Federal auspices. Workers were more effectively mobilized in this war for war production than if 48 agencies had been attempting the job. The necessity for effective placement of workers has not ended. The task of finding suitable employment for the millions of released veterans and displaced war workers is a formidable one.

The editorial opinion of the Louisville Courier-Journal likewise appeals for reasonable delay in this matter:

It would be the sheerest folly to restore the Employment Service offices to the States within 100 days, as Congress has decreed. * * * Employment ebbs and flows without any regard to State lines, and this is especially so in the reconversion period. * * * Mr. Truman was wise and courageous in repeating his advice that the transfer be postponed until June 1947 and that needed permanent changes in the whole employment system be effected meanwhile Valley City, N. Dak., is a city of 5,917 population. It is deep in the grass-roots section. Its daily newspaper, the Times-Record, entitles its editorial on this subject "Well Done, Mr. Truman," and declares:

While President Truman probably would not win a popularity contest among Congressmen for his pocket veto of the return of the United States Employment Service to State control, he should receive the support of the country at large for his action.

Like price control and other controls over the economy during the period of reconversion, the Employment Service, as it has been operating since 1942, is an essential part of the program. He has asked Congress to leave USES under Federal supervision until the transition from war to peace has been completed. * * *

The USES certainly has operated with efficiency and a minimum of red tape under Federal regulations. It has been able to transcend State lines and to do an all-out job of placement of workers. It is not ridden with politics. Those of us who have had anything to do with USES know these things.

The Grand Rapids (Minn.) Herald-Review is published in a community of less than 5,000 people—4,875 to be exact. And here is its editorial comment on this subject, under the title "Too Broad for States." The editorial declares:

There are no State lines in the general problem of employment. That was recognized by the Federal Government when the Service was established. Men in Minnesota could find out that there was need for their work in Kansas, Detroit, or Washington. The great industries that needed men might learn of available help in Minnesota.

Return this function to the States and it will be seriously limited at a time when it may be sorely needed. Some States might do a good job, or try to. Others will do nothing. A well-coordinated effort will be impossible.

From the far Northwest—Prosser, in the Yakima Valley of the great State of Washington—population, 1,719—comes another voice, that of the editor of the Record-Bulletin. He says:

President Truman acted wisely and courageously when he vetoed the bill transferring the Federal employment offices to the States. If anything is needed in this group of 48 States, it is some organization that is Nation-wide. To cut this agency up into 48 parts would be to destroy its real effectiveness. Proponents of States' rights chose a poor place to start in their efforts to reduce the power of the Federal Government.

The Lewistown (Idaho) Morning Tribune, published in a city of 10,548, has something to say on the same subject, and it is this:

President Truman showed real spunk in vetoing a bill to rescind $51,800,000 of wartime appropriations because it contained a wholly unrelated rider providing for return of Government employment offices to the States. * * *

While we normally favor State and local control of anything that can be so controlled effectively, we are inclined to favor Federal control of the Employment Service, which we think is now doing a good job and which we think ought to function on a national basis as a coordinated agency.

Almost the breadth of the continent from the two papers from which I have just quoted is published the Watertown (N. Y.) Daily Times. Though this metropolis of up-State New York, at the gate to the Adirondack Mountains and New England, has a population of 33,885, the circulation of the Times, according to the Ayers Newspaper Directory, is 39,838. What does it have to say on this subject? Again I quote:

Our own judgment is that it is not the time now to do away with the United States Employment Service. We are in the middle of the reconversion period. Tens of thousands of workers are returning home after wartime employment in large centers of population, often to other States. The USES cuts across State lines. It can supply workers anywhere. Industry has become so big that State agencies are able to render only a limited service. Before the USES is abolished, State employment services should be better correlated.

In the city of Boston is the headquarters of a great religious organization which publishes a newspaper universally recognized for its integrity as well as its sound judgment. I refer to the Christian Science Monitor, and I quote from an editorial it published on this subject under the title "Too Soon to Change." In part the editorial reads:

Mr. Truman displayed sound judgment both in his veto and the accompanying message. The arguments in favor of State-operated employment services are many and valid, but the time for change is not now. The employment forecast is not clear. * * * For this very reason of uncertainty the USES should not be forced to undertake the difficult task of decentralization and reorganization while carrying a very heavy load of work and an even heavier load hanging over it.

Mr. President, the editorials from which I have quoted are from the grass roots of the Nation—North, East, South, Midwest, and far West. I believe the newspapers which published them represent the sentiment of the people on this subject. I think the attitude they express is the attitude of the vast majority of our citizens.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARVILLE in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I have a communication which states that the House bill differs from the Senate bill in that the House bill contains a different standard in the matter of work allotments than the Senate bill. The safeguards in the House bill relate to the requirement for jobs; they require that jobs be allocated on the basis of qualification, and that jobs thus allocated shall call for no less wage than the prevailing wage for similar work in the locality.

The Senate bill refers to the criterion of suitability, that is, the suitability of the applicant to the particular job. The author of this letter indicates that this opens the door to discriminatory practices, and suggests that the Senate bill conform to section 10, as it appears in the House bill. I do not know whether the distinguished chairman of the committee would care to accept an amendment on that score, or whether it would be his desire, now that there is a difference between the House bill and the Senate bill, to take the matter to conference, or whether there is some other reason why the Senate bill contains the suitability provision as against the prevailing rate, and so forth, in the House bill.

Mr. MURRAY. It is my impression that the Senate subcommittee gave that question very careful study at the time the bill was before it for hearing. I am sure that if the subcommittee thought it should be made to conform to the provisions to which the Senator refers, it would have so reported to the full committee. I believe that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL], who served on the subcommittee, would be better able to answer that question than I.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. BALL. The House bill contained no provisions at all for referral standards, and we wrote them into the Senate committee amendment in section 10.

Mr. MEAD. Then this statement in the letter is incorrect. Let me read the entire statement:

We note that H. R. 4437 (S. 1510), dealing with the return of USES to the States, has been amended by the Senate Education and Labor Committee to withdraw from section 10 the two safeguards against discriminatory job-referral practices which the House committee had placed in the bill. These two safeguards, in essence, are the requirement that jobs be allocated on the basis of qualifications and that jobs thus allocated would call for no less a prevailing wage than similar work in the locality.

Mr. BALL. That is not correct. There were no standards at all in the bill as it came over from the House. We wrote into it three standards, in section 10, which reads as follows:

SEC. 10. In carrying out the provisions of this act, no person shall be referred to a position (a) without due notice to the applicant, if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lock-out, or other labor dispute; (b) if the wages, hours, or other conditions of the work offered are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality, except upon request of the applicant; or (c) if as determined by the State agency the position is one which does not utilize the person's highest skill, until and unless a reasonable effort has been made to place him in a position that does utilize his highest skill.

There were no standards in the House bill.

Mr. MEAD. It is quite possible that the amendment which the Senator has read may have been adopted by the Senate committee after my informant received his original information. At any rate, the question can be considered in conference, and I shall refer this letter to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, the provisions to which the Senator from New York has referred may have been discussed during the time the bill was before the committee in the House, but my recollection is that when the bill came to us it had no such provisions in it.

Mr. BALL. There was nothing of the kind in the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. MEAD. Apparently there is a misunderstanding on the part of the author of the letter. I shall refer the letter to the chairman of the committee, and he can refer it to the conferees.

There is one other matter which I feel should be considered before this bill is finally passed by the Senate. It is pointed out in this letter in the following language:

It will be of interest to you to know that the language in the appropriation bill affecting the USES which has been recommended by the House Appropriations Committee is regarded as most unfortunate. In addition to the fact that no provision is made for USES employees who will be returned to the States, there is language in the bill which indicates that H. R. 4437 would be ineffective, even though it may be enacted into law. I refer to the language in section "Grants to States" which reads, "For payment to the several States beginning October 1, 1946, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 6, 1933, as amended to January 1, 1942." This langauge in effect nullifies for the fiscal year 1947 any other legislation which the Congress might enact because such other legislation must necessarily be an amendment to the Wagner-Peyser act enacted after January 1, 1942.

Why is that limitation included in the bill, limiting the authority to January 1, 1942?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I think the Senator from New York is a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which will consider that language in the bill. It was inserted because the date of January 1, 1942, which was the date on which the Federal Government took over these offices, was the date which was used. The theory was that the offices were to be returned in exactly the same status legislatively as that in which they were transferred to the Federal Government. I do not think it is a workable or practicable provision, but it is up to our Committee on Appropriations to do something about it.

Mr. MEAD. I appreciate the Senator's suggestion, and I have such an amendment ready for the Appropriations Committee. But why would it not be appropriate also to offer an amendment to the legislative bill, providing that funds appropriated to USES for the fiscal year 1947 shall be available to carry out the purposes of this act? That would reach the problem just as well as would an amendment to the appropriation act which would run counter to an amendment already adopted by the House committee.

Mr. BALL. I doubt if that would change the date from January 1, 1942. I think the only place to amend that bill is in the bill itself.

Mr. MURRAY. It seems to me that that would be the appropriate place for such action to be taken.

Mr. MEAD. I am sure it will be taken; but it also occurs to me that we might make it doubly certain if we were to provide that the appropriations required under this act should apply to the fiscal year 1947.

Mr. MURRAY. I see no objection.

Mr. MEAD. I shall offer that amendment for consideration later, if it is agreeable to the chairman.

Mr. MURRAY. I can see no objection to taking it to conference. If, in the meantime, it is determined that it would be of benefit, it can be adopted. If not, it can be rejected in conference.

Mr. MEAD. It would offer additional opportunity to discuss the question.

Mr. MURRAY. We will accept it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment if it is in order at this time. I send it to the desk and ask that it be read.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the pending bill open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the committee amendments have not yet been acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MEAD. I ask that my amendment be deferred until after the committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his suggestion for a moment?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee.

In section 3, line 18, after the semicolon, there is a clause reading "to maintain a farm placement service." Does the Department of Labor now have such a service?

Mr. MURRAY. I understand that that language is already in the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Mr. WHERRY. Then there is no change from existing law. I should like to know whether this bill represents an attempt to bring farm labor under the Department of Labor, rather than to leave it under the Department of Agriculture, where it is now.

Mr. MURRAY. My understanding is that the bill would not do that.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. I understand that the Secretary of Agriculture has requested the Secretary of Labor to take over this function. That is the information which came to me.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator from New York mean that the Secretary of Agriculture has asked the Department of Labor to take over the placement of farm labor?

Mr. MEAD. That is the information which I have received.

Mr. WHERRY. Is not that something new? Has the Secretary of Labor done this work before?

Mr. MEAD. I do not know. I think the matter is covered in the bill now.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have some little familiarity with the farm labor item. It is true, as has been stated by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], that the original Wagner-Peyser Act, which I believe was enacted in 1933, shortly after I came to the Congress, did contain this language. However, if the Department of Labor ever did function as a placement agency for farm labor, I never heard of it. I never heard of a single farmer or farm laborer who was helped in that way by the Department of Labor.

Mr. WHERRY. Neither did I.

Mr. RUSSELL. When the farm labor situation became acute in 1940 or 1941, the Congress passed the additional legislation which set up a farm labor bureau in the Department of Agriculture. Of course, that had the effect of repealing the provision of the original Wagner-Peyser Act.

Congress had subsequently taken action to keep the farm labor bureau in the Department of Agriculture. The Congress has extended the resolution on that subject from time to time. It is my understanding that the appropriation and the legislation for the handling of farm labor in the Department of Agriculture will expire on the first day of January 1947. I think I am correct in making that statement. I have had some apprehension, I may say to the Senator from Nebraska, that the effect of this language would be to annul the prior action of the Congress when it passed a specific act setting up a farm labor bureau in the Department of Agriculture. It could very readily have that result, and that might have the effect of calling for the transfer to the Department of Labor of the unexpended appropriation, which would be several million dollars, and the functions.

I think this provision of the pending bill should be clarified. I do not think the function should be left in this position, which might result in a situation in which neither department would know which one was to handle it. I have heard that the Secretary of Agriculture is anxious to get rid of this function. I should like very much to have someone place in the RECORD the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture which states that he is not desirous of handling the farm labor function. I know that many farmers are very apprehensive about having it put back into the Department of Labor, for the reason that they were not able to get much assistance from the Department of Labor prior to the time when the Congress passed the legislation placing the function under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Georgia for his observation. Let me inquire whether there was any testimony on that particular item in the hearings. I do not believe there was. I should like to have the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture, if it is a statement, or any other information on the matter placed in the RECORD, at least, as a basis on which to work. If the Secretary of Agriculture is not asking to have the Department of Labor take over this function, I would ask those in charge of the bill to modify it by deleting that phrase, so that there will be no doubt that this work is again to be handled by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. BALL. It is my understanding that there is no permanent legislation authorizing the Department of Agriculture to carry on a placement or employment service for farm labor.

Mr. MURRAY. The provision was a temporary one which was included in an appropriation bill. When the appropriation bill expires, the provision ceases to exist, unless it is renewed in another appropriation bill.

Mr. BALL. I think what has happened is that the Department of Agriculture, knowing that its authority under the resolution would expire on January 1, has been trying to get some agency to continue the work, and that would logically be the United States Employment Service. I understand that agreement has been reached whereby a joint resolution extending the appropriation until July 1, 1947, will be introduced.

The bill now pending in the Appropriations Committee does not contain any funds to enable the United States Employment Service to carry on this service. The funds are in the hands of the Department of Agriculture. If we continue its authority by means of a joint resolution, I do not think there will be any change in the present situation. At the same time, I do not like to have removed from this act the basic legislative authority for carrying on a farm-labor placement service, until we have permanent legislation placing the authority somewhere else.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, what I was apprehensive about—and I think my fears are well-founded—was that this language could be construed as annulling the resolution which now is the present law. Of course, we all know that the authority granted to the Department of Agriculture was temporary in character because of the gravity of the emergency. There had not been any shortage of farm labor until about 1940. Before that time it probably did not matter whether the Department of Labor functioned in this connection.

But I think we should be careful not to repeal the existing law, and I am afraid this language would have that effect. I think the President would be justified, under his powers under the reorganization bill, to say that the Congress had demonstrated that it wanted this function placed under the Department of Labor, and thus he would transfer the service and all its functions from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Labor.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, does the Senator believe that would be the situation if we provided that the Service should remain where it is until June 30, 1947?

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no. But we would be dependent upon having the House of Representatives send us a resolution to cover the situation; and if the House did not send such a resolution to us we would be helpless.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, do I now have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana still has the floor.

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. For the moment I shall pass over the amendment, but I think before we finally act on the bill this matter should definitely be clarified, because I think the views expressed by the Senator from Georgia have a great deal of merit. If we leave the provision in this bill as substantive law, will it not nullify what already has been done? If that happens now, is it not true that we shall have no assurance that when the resolution comes up we shall be able to obtain the appropriation?

Mr. MURRAY. I understand that if this provision is left in the bill it will not nullify what already has been done.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask the Senator if that is not merely an opinion. If we pass the pending bill containing this provision it certainly would be the basic law under which the placement of farm labor would be carried on. If we are going to use the appropriations for the next year shall we not have to wait until they become available before we shall be able to carry on the work? Is not that the Senator's opinion?

Mr. MURRAY. My information is that, otherwise, funds for performing this function would not be available. I am informed that so long as the Congress continues to furnish funds to the Department of Agriculture to carry out this program it will be able to carry it out, and this language will have no effect whatever upon it.

Mr. WHERRY. I assume that the Senator feels reasonably certain that the provision in question will not in any way nullify or jeopardize the appropriations which will necessarily be made in order later to carry on the work.

Mr. MURRAY. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. With that explanation, I shall not now ask that the language be modified by an amendment. I should still like to know whether the Secretary of Agriculture requested that a transfer be made from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Labor. There is no record of it.

Mr. MURRAY. There is no record of it. I assume that the Department of Agriculture was seeking to find out what would necessarily have to be done.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I now renew my suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, before we start considering committee amendments, I should like to make a brief statement about the bill.

I was on the subcommittee which worked out the bill. It is not so much of a change from the bill passed by the House as might appear, because the House bill amended the Wagner-Peyser Act considerably, but did it by striking out here, there, and all through the bill. To eliminate the confusion, we merely struck out the House amendments, and amended the bill to read as it is now at the desk.

Most of the language in the present Wagner-Peyser Act we picked up, and made such changes as seemed to us necessary to bring it up to date. Actually, there has been quite a bit of confusion in operating employment offices under title III of the Social Security Act and under the Wagner-Peyser Act. We merely tried to make a coherent basic statute out of the Wagner-Peyser Act.

We had three purposes in the amendments recommended. One was to fix the date of transfer. The House had decided on fixing June 30 of this year, which I think obviously now is impossible, because it will take at least from 60 to 90 days to work out the mechanics of the measure. We decided on December 31, 1946. One idea we had in mind was that it might be a good plan to put this transfer off until after the elections next fall, that that would be better all around.

The second purpose was to provide for the transfer of personnel. Since the Federal Government took over the employment offices, in January 1942, more than half the personnel taken over with them have left the service, and now approximately 14,000 out of the 23,000 employees are individuals who have been added to the rolls since the Federal Government took over. As a result, most of them have no status under the various State civil-service systems.

We picked up most of the language of the bill which passed the House, which in turn was taken from the rescission bill which Congress passed last fall, and which was vetoed, simply in order to give the individuals who have no State civil-service status a reasonable opportunity to acquire such status before they are separated.

Then we had to make some provision to take care of transfer of property, leases, and all that sort of thing. Finally we had to make provision to take care of the civil-service retirement payments of the State employees who for nearly 5 years have been Federal employees, and have been paying into a Federal retirement system. When they go back to the State employment, in order that they may become eligible again for retirement, under most State retirement systems they must pay up contributions for all the back years when they have been out of the State service. If they are to do that, they will need a refund of the payments they made to the Federal system, and if they should happen to have been in Federal employment more than 5 years, they cannot draw out in a lump sum what they have paid into the civil-service retirement system. We provide that if an employee elects to do that, he may take that course, and get all his retirement benefits under the State law by making back payments.

The third purpose was to bring the Wagner-Peyser Act up to date, and make it a more workable statute for the operation of the Employment Service.

The first committee amendment, on page 1, deals with the date, and I do not think there is any need to expound that. We felt that December 31 was a fair compromise between the June 30 proposed by the House, which obviously now is impossible, and the June 30 of next year which the administration wanted.

Section 102 is a new section, and, in effect, is a substitute for title IV on the House bill, on page 20, which we struck out. As Senators know, the United States Employment Service was originally, under the Wagner-Peyser Act, in the Department of Labor and under the Secretary of Labor. In 1939, after the Social Security Act was passed, which provided in title III that there must be an employment service operated in connection with the unemployment-compensation payments, the President, under the authority of the Reorganization Act, transferred the United States Employment Service to the Social Security Board. It remained there, with the States getting a part of their funds under title III of the Social Security Act, in the way of grants, and a part under the old Wagner-Peyser Act.

After the war began, in 1941, the President, under the War Powers Act, transferred the employment service to the old War Manpower Commission, where it was one of the operating agencies in control of the distribution of manpower in the war effort. After the War Manpower Commission was abolished, it was kept with the Secretary of Labor.

The subcommittee and the full committee felt that, rather than enact the House provision, which leaves the status of the agency up in the air, so long as it is in the Department of Labor these funds should go through the Secretary of Labor; but when the War Powers Act expires it will go back under the Social Security Board, and we felt that this particular service logically belongs in the Department of Labor, and we provided for a permanent transfer. As I have said, title II contains the amendments to the basic law, the Wagner-Peyser Act.

There is quite an argument made by the State directors, who, I know, have been contacting Senators, to the effect that the Federal Government took this service over rather suddenly and peremptorily on January 1, 1942, and that the services should be returned to the States in exactly the same status in which they were when they were taken over. In theory, that sounds all right, but in actual fact it cannot work out, because in the first place there must be provision for the transfer of about 14,000 employees who have been added to the rolls to replace former State employees who left the service; it is necessary to provide somehow for the transfer of property, and probably we should make some provision to avoid the necessity of the termination of leases which the Federal Government held and now holds, because if those leases are terminated and the States have to rent the property again, they are very likely to find their rents heightened considerably.

Furthermore, on January 1, 1942, the States were contributing about 5 percent of the cost of State services, under the Wagner-Peyser Act. The other 95 percent was a Federal grant, as I have said, partly under the Wagner-Peyser Act, and partly under title III of the Social Security Act. The provision in the rescission bill which Congress passed last fall amended that section of the Wagner-Peyser act to provide for a hundred percent Federal contribution, just as the unemployment compensation divisions of the States are operated on a hundred percent grant for administrative expenses. So that amendment was required.

The old Wagner-Peyser Act provided for grants to States solely on the basis of population. That today would be an extremely unrealistic basis for the grants, because of tremendous population shifts during the war, plus the fact that the farm placement service was transferred during the war to the Department of Agriculture, and the plan now is to keep it there, certainly until June 30, 1947, and probably there will be legislation in the next session of Congress placing it there permanently. So the basis for making grants had to be changed.

The other major changes which we made in the Wagner-Peyser Act concerned the requirement in that act, as it now stands, that the States submit each year a plan of operation to the Secretary before they are eligible for a grant. Under that act they still must conform to the rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary. I talked to the director of this service in my own State, who said that he felt that the plan merely involved a lot of paper work which could and should be eliminated. We originally eliminated it, and then later in the committee we added a provision that, if the State agency desires to operate under a plan, it can submit a plan and operate under it.

We also in amending section 5 of the old law provided for a commingling of funds granted under this act, at the request of the State agency, by the Social Security Board for the administration of unemployment compensation, and granted by the Secretary of Labor for the operation of the employment offices. In most States the unemployment compensation and the employment offices are operated by the same agency, and the commingling of funds is provided for, so that there does not have to be an accounting for every single penny on the basis that the employee spent 50 percent of his time in the employment office and the other half in the unemployment compensation service. That kind of accounting does not have to be made. So the provision is that the Secretary shall certify to the Social Security Board the amounts to be granted for operating the employment offices, and then the Social Security Board makes the total grants to the States, and the States administer the combined fund for both unemployment benefits and for the employment offices as one fund.

One new provision is the so-called recapture clause, which is subsection (b) of section 9, on page 12. The bill as introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the chairman of the committee, provided for a flat recapture; that the Secretary at any time could take over and operate a State service. We provide in subsection (b) that the Secretary may use funds to operate a State service if the State is not eligible for funds under this act, or if no employment offices exist in that State, but it is limited to operation only if the Governor of the State requests it in writing, or with funds specifically appropriated by Congress for that purpose, except that the expenditure in any 1 year may not be more than $1,000,000, and the operation of the State system may continue for not more than 3 months.

What that means is that if the Secretary and the State agency get into a controversy over whether the State agency is specifically complying with the law or not, and they cannot work it out, as they will in 100 percent of the cases, I am convinced the Secretary could take over the service and operate it, expending not more than $1,000,000, and operating it for not more than 3 months. Both limitations apply. In order to continue operating it he would have to come to the Appropriations Committees of both Houses and justify a specific appropriation to continue such operation. In my estimation the Secretary would never make that attempt unless conditions in a State became so flagrant that he was confident he could win his argument with the State agency in the two committees and on the floor of both Houses.

I am not too convinced that it is necessary, but it was a compromise of the views of different Senators in the committee, and I think a compromise that is all in the direction of maintaining State authority, and not giving the Secretary any broad grant of power to withhold funds and operate his own service.

The other new provision which we put in the bill, which has aroused some controversy, I think largely due to misunderstanding, is section 10, on page 12, which reads as follows:

> In carrying out the provisions of this act, no person shall be referred to a position—

This is an applicant seeking employment—

> (a) without due notice to the applicant, if the position offered is vacant due to a strike, lockout, or other labor dispute;

That provision is contained in the Federal Social Security Act, as it applies to unemployment compensation, and we simply put it into this law. It is nothing new.

> (b) if the wages, hours, or other conditions of the work offered are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality, except upon request of the applicant;

If the individual wants to take a lower-paying job he can do so, but he must be told that it is a lower-paying job, that it is not paying the prevailing rate of pay for that work.

> Or (c) if as determined by the State agency—

And this was the provision over which most of the controversy arose; so we left it up to the State agency—

> if as determined by the State agency the position is one which does not utilize the person's highest skill, until and unless a reasonable effort has been made to place him in a position that does utilize his highest skill.

The reason for that referral and standard in the bill was that there have been numerous charges that in a few States, during the reconversion period, the law was being administered so as to force applicants for work to accept jobs which did not utilize their highest skill. For instance, if a man was a skilled building mechanic, and no skilled mechanic jobs were open on that date, he either had to accept a job as an unskilled laborer or lose his rights to unemployment compensation. All this says is that if he is a carpenter, he shall be given a reasonable time—and it is again determined by the State agency—to find a job as a carpenter before he is obliged to take a job as a laborer, and if he does not take that job he loses his right to unemployment compensation benefits. That is about all the provision amounts to.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I ask the Senator if he will be so kind as to give his answer to this question. Subdivision (c) of section 10, which the Senator has read, is as follows:

If as determined by the State agency the position is one which does not utilize the person's highest skill, until and unless a reasonable effort has been made to place him in a position that does utilize his highest skill.

I observe that the determination as to whether or not the position does utilize the person's highest skill is left to the State agency. The question to which I ask the Senator's attention is, Who is it that makes the determination as to whether or not a reasonable effort has been made to place the person in a position that does utilize his highest skill? Is that determined by the State agency or by the Federal authority.

Mr. BALL. In my opinion "as determined by the State agency" modifies the whole clause, and I think that would also be determined by the State agency.

Mr. DONNELL. That is the Senator's intention at least?

Mr. BALL. Yes. That was our intention in writing in that language in committee as the Senator will recall.

Mr. DONNELL. I respectfully submit that the language as worded does not clearly carry out that intent. In fact, as I see it, it indicates that the determination of whether or not a position utilizes a person's highest skill is left to the State agency, but that the further determination of whether or not a reasonable effort has been made to place him in such position is not left to the State agency.

Mr. BALL. That is not the intention. I think, if the legislative intention has anything to do with the interpretation of the act, it certainly was the intention of the committee, and it is the intention of the sponsors of the bill, that the determination "by the State agency" modifies the whole standard in subsection (c).

Mr. President, these are the main amendments of the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Would the Senator from Minnesota have any objection to inserting in line 5, on page 13, after the word "unless" the words "the State agency determines that"?

Mr. BALL. No, I would have no objection. When the committee amendment is before the Senate, if the Senator offers that amendment I certainly would have no objection, because, as I said, that was the intent of the committee.

Mr. President, title III deals with the immediate transfer provision and the language is largely that which was in the rescission bill as passed by Congress. The changes we made were largely in the interest of clarity, with this exception, that as it came over from the House the requirement merely was that the Federal employees so transferred, who had no State civil-service status, should be retained, and given a reasonable opportunity to qualify to become eligible for appointment to other positions under the State civil-service law. After they had been given that opportunity, they could then be terminated.

We rewrote that to say that they may be separated——

(A) if they have failed to acquire eligibility for continued employment in the State-wide system of public employment offices under the State merit system in the positions occupied by them under the Federal service or in reasonably comparable positions, after having been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire such eligibility.

The House provision simply gave them no status. Once they had been given the opportunity to acquire eligibility, whether they acquired it or not, the State was then perfectly free, under the House language, to keep them on or dismiss them, as it saw fit. Under the language of the bill as it is reported to the Senate, if they acquire eligibility for appointment through a civil-service examination, it will not be simply a qualifying examination. It will be a competitive examination. If they pass it high enough so that they are among those certified for appointment—usually the top three or the top five—then under this language I think they would be entitled to retain their jobs. If a person then not working in the service were also among the first three, the appointing officer would have no discretion under this language, and would be required to appoint the present holder of the job. That is the substantive change.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. That, I understand, is the respect in which the State laws conflict. Because of the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] was absent from the city, I was talking with the Massachusetts director. He raised a question in connection with the Massachusetts act, which provides various terms on which a person who has served may continue to the service, the kind of an examination he may take, and how he must conform to certain civil-service laws of the State of Massachusetts. The claim is made that if this bill is passed the service will be under two different directions. The Federal law assumes to prescribe who shall be employed in the State service, when possibly a person cannot qualify under the rules which the State has laid down, which it considers generous, but along somewhat different lines from those of the Federal bill.

Mr. BALL. I do not see how there could possibly be any conflict with the State law. To go back to the beginning clause——

SEC. 301. In order to assure the continuance of efficient public employment office services in all States during the transition from Federal to State operation of such services, the Secretary of Labor shall withhold or deny certifications of funds for payment to a State under the act of June 6, 1933, as amended, unless he finds that such State—

(1) (a) has made provision for the transfer to and retention in the State-wide system of public employment offices of employees of the Federal Government who (on the day preceding the effective date of the transfer of the employment offices to the State under this act) had been employed in State and local employment service functions in such State, in the positions occupied by them under the Federal service or in reasonably comparable positions, except that individuals so transferred may be separated or terminated for good cause as determined in individual cases under the applicable State merit system, or separated or terminated under the applicable State merit system by reason of reductions in force found necessary in the interests of efficient operations, and may be separated (A) if they have failed to acquire eligibility for continued employment in the State-wide system of public employment offices under the State merit system in the positions occupied by them under the Federal service or in reasonably comparable positions, after having been given a reasonable opportunity to acquire such eligibility.

I assume that in the case of Massachusetts, eligibility to continue, would mean that they must take a competitive examination and pass the examination high enough to be among those certified for appointment.

Mr. TAFT. But why should we say anything about Federal employees? If we are to turn these offices back to the States, why should not the States say whom they choose to employ, provided they have a proper merit system? Why should we say, "You must take X, who happens to have been employed temporarily by the Federal service"? Do we turn the offices back to the States, or do we retain them as Federal offices, in effect, telling the States whom they must employ and what they must do?

Mr. BALL. I do not think we are telling them whom they must employ. We say that if the present incumbents in the jobs can pass a civil-service examination with a high enough score so that they are among the top three or four certified for appointment, they should receive the appointment. I do not think it is a vital point. I do not believe that any State is going to clean house if the employees are qualified. If they are not qualified, they cannot pass a competitive examination high enough to be appointed.

Mr. TAFT. However, as I understand, if the State agencies do not conform, the Director so notifies them, and under the theory of this bill the moment he notifies them he can take away their funds if they do not comply, or he can even take over the services if he wishes to invoke such an extreme remedy.

Mr. BALL. He cannot take over the services in many States with a $1,000,000 limitation on his funds for that purpose.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. As a matter of fact, is not the present personnel largely the personnel which was employed by the States before the Federal Government borrowed the agencies?

Mr. BALL. That is true of less than half of the personnel.

Mr. AIKEN. There would have been a normal turn-over anyway.

Mr. BALL. That is correct.

Mr. AIKEN. But so far as any employees who were employed by the State when the agency was taken over are concerned, those who wanted to continue have continued.

Mr. BALL. That is correct.

Mr. AIKEN. At least that is true in my State. I do not know about other States.

Mr. BALL. Many of them have gone into the military service or left for war jobs. I think most of the employees now in the State offices have joined the Service since it was taken over by the Federal Government. So more than half of those employees have no State employment status whatever. That is the reason why this whole question is a little difficult.

Mr. President, in my opinion the Congress will have to meet this issue in one way or another. The labor-Federal security appropriation bill which is now before the committee provides for the transfer of these offices on October 30, I believe. The provision in the appropriation bill is very deficient. It does not do anything about the transfer of employees or the transfer of property, which is essential even if we do not do anything about the employees. It does not do anything about changing the basis on which the funds are allocated to the States under the Wagner-Peyser Act. We can either provide the basic legislation for the transfer and bring the Wagner-Peyser Act up to date in this bill, or we shall have to write some rather extensive legislation into the pending appropriation bill. It seems to me to be a much sounder procedure to legislate in this bill. Then all we shall have to do in the appropriation bill will be to appropriate the funds.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not overly familiar with this bill as it has been written by the Committee on Education and Labor, but under the first section it is provided that the Secretary of Labor shall return to State operation not later than December 31, 1946, or such earlier date as he may deem feasible, all public employment offices in an orderly and expeditious manner. What jurisdiction, if any does the Federal Government retain over any of the facilities which have been operating public employment offices, or over the employees, after December 31, 1946?

Mr. BALL. It would retain none under this bill, except general supervision, which it has under the Wagner-Peyser Act. The Federal Government has always promulgated over-all rules and regulations to govern the service, and has certified the States to receive grants of funds. That would be the only jurisdiction.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I to understand from the answer of the able Senator that once a public employment office is turned back to a State, aside from the regulations laid down in the Wagner-Peyser Act the Federal Government would retain no jurisdiction over any employee, and would have no right to tell the State whether it might or might not employ a particular individual?

Mr. BALL. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand, if this bill were enacted into law, there would be no duplication of jurisdiction and no duplication of responsibility. In other words, after the enactment of the bill the States would assume full responsibility for the proper or improper administration of the act.

Mr. BALL. That is correct.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. That is exactly what I completely question, because while the States administer the act, they are subject in every detail to the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor. He defines every feature of the question of referral. By rule and regulation he can govern the administration of these bureaus, and if they fail to conform to his rules and regulations he can take over the service. So I question the answer which the Senator from Minnesota has given to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. BALL. I specified that he could make the general rules and regulations. He has no control over who is appointed, once the transfer is made. Under title III the Secretary is to satisfy himself, before he transfers an office, that the plan for the transfer of employees will accomplish the results specified. Once he transfers it, I think he loses all jurisdiction so far as individual employees are concerned. He still must be satisfied that the merit system governs appointments in the service, but that is all.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. As a result of this legislation, is the State Employment Service to be in any different position than it was when the Federal Government took it over 3 or 4 years ago?

Mr. BALL. I do not think so, measurably. It is in a different position because it has undertaken many different functions since then. For example, the entire veterans' service under the GI bill of rights has been added since it was taken over.

Mr. LUCAS. I understand; but what I am trying to ascertain is this: Will the States have the same authority and jurisdiction over employment offices they had previous to the time that the Federal Government took them over?

Mr. BALL. Yes; there will be no difference at all.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. The copy of the bill which I hold in my hand consists of approximately 20 pages. I appreciate the fact that portions of the House bill have been stricken out. Title I provides that the Secretary of Labor shall, on or before December 31, 1946, return to the States the State employment agencies which the Federal Government borrowed in 1942. What further is in these 20 pages? Why do we not simply provide, in four or five lines, for the return of the services in the same condition in which they were when we took them away from the States? What is contained in the twenty-odd pages? If we are not adding something, then why have 20 pages to say nothing?

Mr. BALL. I tried to explain the situation, but the Senator from Indiana was not then on the floor.

Mr. CAPEHART. I appreciate that the able Senator from Minnesota was not the author of the bill.

Mr. BALL. No; but I had considerable to do with writing it.

The House tried to handle the matter in the rescission bill which was passed last fall. When we considered the matter in the Appropriations Committee we decided that we had to add several pages of legislation to the bill, so as to take care of the employees. Title III of this bill is largely language taken from the rescission bill; that is all it is.

We had to do other things; for instance, we had to provide a basis for the allocation of funds. Under the Wagner-Peyser Act they are to be allocated on the basis of population, but that does not make sense any more. Moreover, the Wagner-Peyser Act contains a matching requirement, and the States and the Federal agency and all the Members who considered it seemed to agree that that should be doue away with. It amounted to only about 5 percent, anyway. So that had to be changed. Upon going over the Wagner-Peyser Act, we decided that it was rather out of date. It had not been squared with title III of the Social Security Act. So all we did was to try to amend it so as to bring it up to date. The bill is a little long, because we amended the whole act. Much of the language of the bill is in the law and does not represent a change.

Mr. CAPEHART. Then, is it the Senator's thought that the provisions for the changes and the descriptive matter contained in the twenty-odd pages should be added, and is it also his thought that those provisions will take no authority away from the States, but, rather, will clarify the bill and will add some new provisions, such as provisions with reference to veterans' affairs, which should be added?

Mr. BALL. I do not think the bill will take any authority from the States. I think in several cases the provisions of the bill clarify the intent of the Congress in setting up the employment offices.

Mr. CAPEHART. I am opposed to having the Congress pass any law which will permit the Federal Government to conduct the affairs of the States. I am opposed to having that done, and I think other Senators are opposed to it, and I know that the States are opposed to it.

Mr. BALL. I am in complete accord with the Senator in regard to that matter.

Mr. CAPEHART. I wish to see passed a law, and I trust that the pending measure will be such a law, by which the States will have complete freedom of action in employment matters. I believe I have the assurance of the able Senator from Minnesota that that is what the pending bill provides. If that be true, I shall support it.

But if the bill contains provisions giving the Federal Government more power over the States, then I am opposed to it.

No such provisions were contained in the old bill or the old act.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BALL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to develop further the point I raised a moment ago. I call attention to this language on page 6 of the bill, in section 3:

> The Secretary shall also assist in coordinating the public employment offices throughout the country, and in increasing their usefulness by developing and prescribing minimum standards of efficiency, assisting them in meeting problems peculiar to their localities, promoting uniformity in their administrative and statistical procedure, furnishing and publishing information as to opportunities for employment and other information of value in the operation of the system, and maintaining a system for clearing labor between the several States and facilitating the free movement of workers seeking employment and employers seeking workers.

My question is this: Under this bill will it be mandatory for the States to accept, for instance, the minimum standards of efficiency laid down by the Secretary? Will it be mandatory for the States to accept, for instance, the decisions made by the Secretary in regard to promoting uniformity in administrative and statistical procedure? Will it be mandatory for the States to cooperate in furnishing and publishing information as to opportunities for employment, and so forth? Or is that to be merely a general position to be taken by the Federal Government, in the hope that the States will cooperate?

Mr. BALL. I think for the most part the Secretary has authority to develop and prescribe minimum standards of efficiency which the States shall meet in order to be eligible to receive the grants. Other than that, I think the whole purpose of the section is that the Secretary of Labor shall assist in developing and maintaining a system in the several States. That provision does not carry any authority for him to compel any State to do anything. Obviously there must be some cooperation between the States in order to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the interpretation which the able Senator from Minnesota puts on the bill, it is that if the States desire to accept the information and cooperation furnished by the Federal Government, they may do so; or they may go their own way.

Mr. BALL. That is correct for the most part, except, as I have said, in regard to prescribing minimum standards of efficiency. I think the Secretary can make such standards apply because of his power to make rules and regulations.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes. But that authority already exists under the act or under other measures.

Mr. BALL. Yes. Most of that language is already in the act.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this bill has been before the Senate at least two or three times during the past year. On each occasion the Senate has simply voted to return the employment offices to the States. The Senate has not always provided adequately for transition periods, and that subject is the one now before the Senate.

The House has also passed a bill, which is in the form of the bill now before us, returning the employment offices to the States, but doing only that. The House has already done that in the appropriation bill which now is before the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The only purpose of the pending bill is to give the Federal Government more power than it had when these offices were taken over. There cannot be any other purpose. There are some transitional matters which should be taken care of. But the purpose of this measure, as well as the basic purpose of the Wagner-Peyser Act, is to give the Federal Government more power over State employment offices than it had when the offices were taken over in 1942.

As Senators know, after Pearl Harbor the President took advantage of the situation then existing to issue a proclamation demanding that the States turn over to the Federal Government the State employment offices. All the Governors did so, although most of them were reluctant to do it and most of them specified that when the emergency was over the offices should be returned to the States. In many cases they expressed doubt as to their authority to turn the offices over to the Federal Government.

Now we say "Oh, yes; we shall return the employment offices to the States, but we shall do it upon certain conditions. We are going to change the basis on which the States formerly operated those offices."

I do not think we should do that. I think we should do just what we have done before, namely, leave the Wagner-Peyser Act as it is, except as we add any particular transitional provisions to take care of the retransfer and to look after the employees.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I think the Senator is a little mistaken in his interpretation that the acceptance of the amendments to the Wagner-Peyser Act was conditioned upon the return of the services to the States. Title II can stand or fall by itself. It has nothing to do with the date of the transfer or whether the services are to be transferred. It is true that the provisions of title III do have.

Mr. TAFT. But we are asked by the committee to pass this bill. The provisions of the bill to which I am objecting were not contained in the House bill. They were inserted by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. Their only purpose, as I see it, is to increase the power of the Federal Government over the State employment services. When we are asked by the committee to pass the bill in its present form, we are asked to impose, as a condition of returning the services, additional powers under the Wagner-Peyser Act. I freely admit, Mr. President, that the Wagner-Peyser Act does contain carefully worked out powers over the State employment offices. But as a matter of fact, it was never carried out in that way, although it might have been. So the precedent which exists is somewhat less than the language actually contained in the Wagner-Peyser Act.

But under the pending bill the whole act would be changed, and the State offices would be placed more under the control and direction of the Secretary of Labor.

What is the purpose of doing that? It has nothing to do with the return of the employment offices to the States. It is an attempt to deal with the whole subject of Federal assistance to the State employment offices, and to impose requirements of that sort as a condition for the return of the offices to the States.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. Will the Senator point out some instances in which the Wagner-Peyser Act was changed so as to afford greater authority?

Mr. TAFT. I shall come to that point.

Mr. TUNNELL. The Senator made a statement with reference to the matter. I should like to have him particularize.

Mr. TAFT. In the first place, the original Wagner-Peyser Act lays much greater emphasis on a State plan being submitted and approved. Once that plan has been submitted and approved, it governs more or less the relations between the parties. In this case the bill originally took out the plan altogether and left remaining the power of the Secretary to issue rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act to prescribe standards of efficiency. The plan idea is entirely subordinated. Under the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, the State may submit a plan if it wishes to do so, but, according to the provisions of the bill, rules and regulations may be issued which do not have to conform to the plan.

Mr. President, I have taken a very great deal of interest in all the State-aid plans, but it has always seemed to me that the Congress should prescribe the standards, and if there are to be rules and regulations they should be prescribed permanently and not subjected to being changed at the whim of the Federal official.

Section 9 of the bill states the situation somewhat more strongly than does the Wagner-Peyser Act. The language is, in part, as follows:

> It shall be the duty of the Secretary to ascertain whether the system of public employment offices maintained in each State is conducted in accordance with the rules and regulations and the standards of efficiency prescribed by the Secretary in accordance with the provisions of this act and to make such studies and investigations as may be necessary in connection therewith. The Secretary may revoke any existing certificate or withhold any further certificate provided for in section 5, whenever he shall determine, as to any State, that the cooperating State agency has not properly expended the moneys paid to it or there has been a substantial failure of compliance by such State agency with the provisions of this act or the rules, regulations, or standards of efficiency prescribed thereunder.

Those are rules which the Secretary may change on any day. He may completely change the rules and thereby change the whole administration of the act by the State employment officers.

As I see it, Mr. President, under this bill the State officers are nominally under the State, but, as a practical matter, their policies are prescribed by the Secretary of Labor in every respect.

There has been inserted in the bill section 10, containing so-called referral provisions. I read it:

SEC. 10. In carrying out the provisions of this act, no person shall be referred to a position (a) without due notice to the applicant, if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lock-out, or other labor dispute; (b) if the wages, hours, or other conditions of the work offered are substantially less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality, except upon request of the applicant; or (c) if as determined by the State agency the position is one which does not utilize the person's highest skill, until and unless a reasonable effort has been made to place him in a position that does utilize his highest skill.

Those general principles are not so bad, but when we add to them the power of the Secretary to make rules and regulations defining what the language means, and changing the definitions of the act, we are going far afield. I believe that the Secretary may even write the general rules which determine what kind of positions utilize a person's highest skill, and affect the rules governing the question of whether a reasonable effort has been made to place a person in a position. How much time must be consumed in trying to find a position which will utilize the person's highest skill? Shall it be 3 months, 6 months, or a year?

I may say further, Mr. President, that the bill contains a provision to the effect that the Secretary may take over and operate any State employment office. Such a provision is contained in the Wagner-Peyser Act, but it is not nearly so expensive as is the provision which is contained in the pending bill. In the Wagner-Peyser Act it is provided that the Secretary may operate a State employment office only when there is no State system of public employment, or in any State where there is a system but the State has not complied with the provisions of section 4. All section 4 requires is that a State agency must be set up to cooperate with the State employment service. But under the pending bill the Secretary is authorized to take over those services whenever they do not comply with any of the rules and regulations which may be issued by the Secretary of Labor.

Paragraph (b) of section 9 reads, in part, as follows:

(b) The Secretary is authorized to expend in any State so much of the funds appropriated and made available under section 5 of this act as may be necessary to operate a State-wide system of public employment offices under the control of the Secretary if no State system of public employment offices exists in such State or if, and for as long as, the State is not eligible for funds in accordance with provisions of this act.

The State is not eligible for funds under section 9 unless its system is conducted in accordance with the rules and regulations, and standards of efficiency prescribed by the Secretary, and all the rules and regulations which may relate to any of the activities of the State office.

I continue reading from paragraph (b):

Except to the extent that a system of employment offices under the control of the Secretary is operated within a State either (1) pursuant to the specific request of the Governor of such State or (2) with funds specifically appropriated by the Congress for the operation of such system under the control of the Secretary, the Secretary shall not expend more than $1,000,000 in any fiscal year pursuant to this subsection or operate a system of employment offices in any State pursuant to this subsection for more than three months in any fiscal year.

If there happens to be a governor of a State who believes that the Federal Government should operate the entire State employment system, all he needs to do to nullify the action of Congress is to announce that he is satisfied with the Federal Government continuing to operate the State employment service. In that case, he may use all the funds which may be appropriated to his office for that purpose.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I wish to propound a question to the Senater from Minnesota. How many States have approved the Senate version of the pending bill?

Mr. BALL. I have no idea. We did not send the bill to the various States and ask them for approval.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Were not the States consulted?

Mr. BALL. Oh, yes; the States were consulted and some of them sent representatives who testified before the subcommittee during one whole afternoon.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Did they approve of the bill?

Mr. BALL. No. Mr. Stanley Rector opposed the bill. However, I went over the bill with my own State administrator, and he believes it to be a good workable bill, and one which is better than the old Wagner-Peyser Act.

Mr. MILLIKIN. What is the position of Mr. Rector in connection with this matter?

Mr. BALL. He wants the transfer to be made by a simple provision in an appropriation bill.

Mr. MILLIKIN. What is his official position?

Mr. BALL. I believe he is chairman of an organization of State administrators of unemployment compensation.

Mr. TAFT. Is he not the director of the State employment system of Wisconsin?

Mr. BALL. He is counsel for the Wisconsin agency.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Aside from Mr. Rector's position, did any group of States send representatives, or a representative, to appear before the committee and either approve or disapprove of the bill?

Mr. BALL. The bill was rewritten by the subcommittee after it had held hearings. Mr. Rector testified at the hearings, and I believe two or three other State administrators also testified. The Council of State Governments was invited to send a representative to testify. It did not do so. Subsequently, however, the Council of State Governments and Mr. Rector testified before the full committee.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Would it be fair to say that the States do not approve the committee's version of the bill?

Mr. BALL. I think it would be fair to say that most of the State administrators do not like it. They would prefer to have the provision incorporated in an appropriation bill.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. In connection with the inquiry which was made by the distinguished Senator from Colorado, I should like to read a very short resolution adopted by the Conference of Governors at its thirty-eighth annual meeting which was held in Oklahoma City on May 30 of this year. It reads as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States, both Houses of Congress and the Governors' Conference are all in agreement that the employment service should be returned to the States, the only question being the date of such return: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we commend the Congress for the favorable action that has been taken designed to return the employment service to the States at the earliest possible time, and we further urge the Senate to consider in the immediate future House bill 4437 without amendments, in order that this measure may be enacted prior to the adjournment of Congress; be it further

Resolved, That inasmuch as the employment compensation funds are accumulated through moneys derived from the citizens of the respective States, we urge the Congress to adopt legislation authorizing the use of such funds by the States to administer the service when it is returned.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will yield a moment longer, I may say that the title of Mr. Rector, in addition to his official position with the State of Wisconsin, is chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies. From a conference which I had this morning with Mr. Rector, it is my understanding that he is opposed very strongly to the committee amendments to the bill.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. I want to ask a question of the Senator from Minnesota. If this bill shall not be passed, and the appropriation bill for the Department of Labor shall be passed, will there not be a section in it turning the Employment Service back to the States?

Mr. BALL. Yes, there is a section in the bill to that effect. However, the subcommittee considering the bill, after hearing the testimony, has directed the drafting counsel to prepare a suitable provision. We will have to do substantially what we did in the rescission bill. There were several pages of legislation in the appropriation bill. We will have to take care of what is in titles I and III, and some of the provisions of title II.

Mr. BUCK. The Senator is preparing to amend this bill then, and have the amendment agreed to?

Mr. BALL. Yes.

Mr. BUCK. My State is opposed to the bill we are now considering, and has been urging that the matter be taken care of in the appropriation bill for the Department of Labor.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield that I may ask a question of the able Senator from Missouri?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. Did the Senator from Missouri say that the governors at their meeting unanimously approved H. R. 4437 as passed by the House of Representatives?

Mr. DONNELL. I am unable to state whether or not it was a unanimous vote, but that was the action of the Governors' Conference, as I understand, and as I read it a few minutes ago.

Mr. CAPEHART. They adopted a resolution approving H. R. 4437, did they not?

Mr. DONNELL. Yes; without amendments.

Mr. CAPEHART. That means as written by the House?

Mr. DONNELL. That is my interpretation of it.

Mr. CAPEHART. At that time they knew nothing about the amendments which have been added to the bill by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor?

Mr. DONNELL. I am not informed as to their knowledge, but evidently, by the expression "without amendments," I take it the bill as it passed the House is what is favored by the Governors' Conference.

Mr. TAFT. The amendments had not been decided on at that time, but were under consideration.

Mr. CAPEHART. I wanted the RECORD to show that the governors did not approve H. R. 4437 as reported by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, and did not approve the bill we are considering at the moment, and the bill I have in my hand, but rather the bill as it was passed by the House.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I wish to state that when the Senator from Ohio shall have completed his remarks I should like then, if possible, to have the privilege of reading to the Senate a number of telegrams sent during the month of April by governors of various States.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should not greatly object to the Senate passing the House bill, and I am in some doubt as to what to do, whether to move to reject the committee amendments, leaving the House bill as it is, or whether to move to postpone the consideration of the bill for 10 days until the matter is disposed of in the appropriation bill, and then, if there are any further matters to be cleaned up, come back to the pending bill at that time.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I may state to the Senator that I have drafted a proposed amendment, very short, which I should like to read at this time for the consideration of the Senator while he is addressing the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I propose to substitute in lieu of titles I and II of the committee amendment the following:

The Secretary of Labor shall provide for the return to State operation not later than December 31, 1946, or such earlier date as he may deem feasible of public employment offices in an orderly and expeditious manner which offices shall thereafter be operated under and in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 6, 1933, as amended to January 1, 1942 (29 U. S. C. 49 to 491): Provided, That no State shall be required to make any appropriation as provided in section 5 (a) of said act of June 6, 1933, as amended to January 1, 1942, prior to July 1, 1948.

In due time I shall offer that as an amendment. I thought it proper to read it at this moment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I think I should be glad to support the Senator's amendment, and it seems to me that perhaps it is the best method of reaching the question we are now considering.

Mr. DONNELL. Of course, this amendment would not dispose of title III. I think we might well consider whether to adopt it, or whether to adopt title III of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives, in view of the transitional situation to which the Senator from Ohio referred. That is a matter which can be considered after the proposed amendment I shall offer shall have been acted upon.

Mr. TAFT. I do not know what date the Senator put in his amendment.

Mr. DONNELL. December 31, 1946. I may say, however, that as to that date I am not necessarily adamant. That is the date which is in the committee amendment, and I thought there was good reason for it, though from some information I have had it would seem that it is possible to make effective a retransfer to the States prior to that date.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the House bill made the date June 30. The House passed an appropriation bill that would make it October 31, and the pending bill proposes December 31. I myself cannot see why, if the offices are to be returned, they cannot be returned in 3 months. I realize it cannot be done today or tomorrow, but certainly 3 months will afford sufficient time to bring about that result.

I see nothing significant in the other dates. The House appropriation bill provides for the State offices from the 1st day of October. I thought it was September 30, and my previous reference was to September 30.

Merely to sum up what I have to say, there are many places in the bill in which more and more emphasis is laid on the power of the Secretary to issue rules and regulations to govern the operation of the State offices. That appears on page 6, line 13. It appears again on page 7, line 19, where it is provided that he shall "certify for payment to each State which is in compliance with the provisions of section 4 of this act, and such rules, regulations, and standards of efficiency as may be prescribed under this act"—consider the discretion of the Secretary as to the amount he may give—"such amounts as the Secretary determines to be necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the State system of public employment offices."

He becomes in effect the appropriating authority for each State.

The Secretary's determination shall be based on (1) the population of the State and an estimate of the number of persons who will be served by the public employment office system in the State; (2) an estimate of the cost of proper and efficient administration of the State system of public employment offices; and (3) such other factors as the Secretary finds relevant.

So that besides prescribing detailed rules and regulations, he may prescribe the detailed amount each State is to receive for its employment office.

Certainly, with those conditions, and the history with which we are familiar of Federal interference with State bureaus, it means the Secretary would practically have the power of telling every State employment office exactly how it shall conduct the office, and almost what the employees shall be paid. There is one restriction, to the effect that he shall not interfere with the operation of the merit system, but he may determine how much an employee is to receive, because he is to determine how much money he will allocate to a particular State.

I refer to the power given him on page 11, line 12, and again in lines 21, 22, and 23, where it is provided it shall be his duty constantly to interfere to see that the States are operating the service in just the way he wants to have them conduct it. He may change the rules and regulations from day to day if he wishes to do so.

So far as I can see, there is no provision, and I do not know that the law would imply it, that the regulations must be uniform in all the States.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. TUNNELL. I merely wish to remind the Senator that the language he is now criticizing is not only in the bill as it passed the House, but in the Social Security Act.

Mr. TAFT. The language in which place?

Mr. TUNNELL. On page 8, at the top of the page.

Mr. TAFT. I was not immediately referring to that. I think the Social Security Act was loosely drawn, and if we are to have a bona fide system of aid to the States, we should prescribe a system which will require the Government to lay down a definite plan, and if the States conform to the plan, interfere no more with their administration, but give them the funds to which they are entitled.

We wrote a provision into the bill that if that were done and the funds were disallowed, the States could appeal, first to the Federal Hospital Board, and then finally to the courts, to determine whether in fact they had conformed to the plan, and get away from the arbitrary discretion of the bureaucrats in Washington, because I think that if we are to continue with the State-aid system, and constantly expand it, as we are doing, we must, unless we are to turn it into a Federal bureaucratic system, provide safeguards so that the States can operate their own plans.

When we add the power of the Secretary under section 10 to take over employment offices, as I have suggested if there happens to be a governor who believes in the Federal Government operating State employment offices under section 10 (b), it is perfectly possible for him to be somewhat delinquent and say, "Oh, well, take it over," and once it is taken over, there is no provision for returning it, so far as the governor personally is concerned, without authority from the State legislature.

Furthermore, when in section 10 rules are laid down respecting referral and as to who shall be entitled to the service, those rules in effect determine who obtains unemployment compensation. So that in that section we find an attempt to step into the unemployment compensation system and have a Federal authority determine who shall draw compensation when a job is offered to him and under what conditions he shall do so.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. In reply to a question which I propounded to the Senator from Minnesota earlier today I was advised that the States would be in practically the same condition, after this legislation is passed, as they were some 4 years ago when the Federal Government took the employment services over. Am I to understand that the same conditions obtained then with respect to mutuality between the States and the Federal Government, as found in section 10 which the Senator just read?

Mr. TAFT. No. There is one provision in section 10 which I think was in the original act, if I remember correctly. The provision in the original act reads:

> In carrying out the provisions of this Act, the Director is authorized and directed to provide for the giving of notice of strikes and lock-outs to applicants before they are referred to employment.

That provision is carried in subparagraph (a) in this measure. I think section 10 (a) is about the same as the existing law. Paragraph (b) is new, as is also paragraph (c).

Mr. LUCAS. Paragraph (c) is one in which I was particularly interested, and I was wondering if the Senator would care to elaborate upon that.

Mr. TAFT. Paragraph (c) originally provided, showing what the authors of the act intended, that—

> If the position is one which does not utilize the person's highest skill until and unless a reasonable effort has been made to place him in a position that does utilize his highest skill.

That would be subject to the issuance of and definitions of regulations issued by the Secretary of Labor. In an effort to modify that the distinguished Senator from Minnesota had inserted in the subcommittee the words "as determined by the State agency", and the question has arisen as to whether that is confined to the determination of the question whether a position utilizes a person's highest skill, or whether it extends to the question whether a reasonable effort has been made to place him in a position.

My impression is that regardless of what is said about the words "as determined by the State agency" on the question of application, the whole character of the procedure can be determined by the rules and regulations issued by the Secretary of Labor. He will have to leave to the State agency the application to a particular case, in view of the words now inserted.

Mr. LUCAS. The only comment I desire to make respecting paragraph (c) is that there should not be any question about the determination to be made on the question of the person's highest skill. In other words, if there is going to be any conflict between rules and regulations laid down by the Federal Government and those laid down by a State agency, we should, by legislation in the Congress, make it clear and unequivocal what we mean. That is what I fear about many provisions of this bill. I am afraid, from what I have heard here, and from a cursory examination of this measure, that we are going to continue to have confusion and double responsibility between the Federal Government and the State agency, a condition about which the Senator from Illinois has complained from the time we started discussing turning the Employment Service back to the States.

While I am on my feet I desire to call attention also to subsection (b) of section 9. I think I understand that subsection. The Senator from Ohio is a member of the Committee on Education and Labor. I should like to have his reaction to a question or two I desire to ask. If I understand correctly, that subsection is new. If I am wrong about that I want to be corrected. It provides:

> The Secretary is authorized to expend in any State so much of the funds appropriated and made available under section 5 of this Act as may be necessary to operate a State-wide system of public employment offices under the control of the Secretary if no State system of public employment offices exists in such State.

If I understand that correctly, if there is no public employment office in the State of Illinois, then under this measure the Federal Government has the right to go into the State and establish an office of that kind.

Mr. TAFT. I may say to the Senator from Illinois that that right existed under the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Mr. LUCAS. That is not the point I am making. I do not object to that if there is no employment agency in the State, or if the governor and the State legislature desire to invite the Federal Government to set up an employment agency in the State. But in the same subsection it is provided:

> Or if, and for as long as, the State is not eligible for funds in accordance with the provisions of this act.

There is where trouble is likely to arise. In other words, upon the rules and regulations laid down by the Federal Government will depend whether or not the State gets any funds. So, if my State of Illinois fails to comply with the rules and regulations laid down and is denied the funds, then the Federal Government can come into the State of Illinois and take over, for at least a period of 3 months, if I understand the language correctly.

Mr. TAFT. I think the Senator's understanding is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. That to me, Mr. President, is an unreasonable proposal. I do not believe that the Federal Government should have the right to take such action merely because the agency in the State of Illinois does not comply with the rules and regulations laid down by the Federal Government. It seems to me that there should not be placed in the bill a provision which would permit the Government to come into a State and operate the service for a period of 3 months at least. Once the Federal Government is there, we may find some difficulty in dislodging its officials. So far as I am concerned that idea is wrong, and it certainly was not contained in the original act.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. The Federal Government did not have that power under the original act.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. Under the original act the right was to withhold the funds.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. TUNNELL. The original act did not prescribe any method for the Federal employment office to continue in operation until the State should comply. It simply left the unemployed without any assistance.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct. But the Senator will now agree with me, will he not, that if the Federal Government wants to move in and take control it would not be very difficult for the Federal Government, through the Secretary, to lay down rules and regulations with which the people of the State of Illinois could not comply, and thereby, within a short space of time, move in and set up its own employment office and continue it in operation at least for 3 months?

Mr. TAFT. I wanted to point out that while the 3 months is a limitation, under some circumstances I take it it is not a limitation, if the Governor of the State, without legislative authority, says "I am willing to have you go on indefinitely so far as I am concerned." So, if there happens to be a Governor who believes in a public Federal employment system only, it can be kept in operation indefinitely, as I view it, under the terms of the measure.

Mr. LUCAS. I think the Senator is correct. I was referring primarily to paragraph (2).

Mr. TAFT. Yes. I agree with the Senator fully that once the Federal Government gets possession of the situation it is going to be difficult to shake it loose again. It will start a system which it seems to me is likely to develop into another Federal system.

Mr. LUCAS. In conclusion, Mr. President, I wish merely to say that my position from the beginning, on the question of public employment service, has been that the dual responsibility between the Federal Government and the State governments should be eliminated. I appreciate that while we were operating under wartime conditions undoubtedly the system was all right, but I seriously doubt, now that we have gone back to peacetime, the wisdom of continuing the dual system. It seems to me we should turn the employment service back to the States, with just as few restrictions, from the standpoint of the Federal Government, as can possibly be imposed and still maintain the cooperation and the mutual understanding between the Federal Government and the States which we must have. I dislike to see a provision in the bill which permits the Federal Government to go into a State and remain in the State indefinitely, simply because the State refuses to comply with some regulation which has been laid down by the Federal Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Inasmuch as the Federal Government is assuming the financial responsibility in regard to this unemployment situation, or the major part of it, does the Senator think that the Congress should authorize the Government of the United States to turn over to the States, to be administered as they please, money collected by the Federal Government in the form of taxes without regulation and even without restriction, which would in some way or other keep the hand of the United States Government on the expenditure of the money? It seems to me unthinkable to ask the Congress to turn over to the States the administration of this law, and then furnish all the money, or practically all the money with which it is to be done, without any restraint or restriction as to how it shall be spent. That is what bothers me about the suggestion for turning the Service bodily back to the States, although the Government of the United States will put up most of the money, and in some cases practically all of it.

Mr. LUCAS. What proportion of the money did we put up previous to the time the Federal Government took over the activity?

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot recall from memory.

Mr. LUCAS. Can any member of the committee tell me?

Mr. BARKLEY. In my judgment that would not make any difference. If we are to put up most of it now, we should have some supervision over it. If we put up most of it then, that would not cover the situation now.

In the matter of highways, when we started on the Federal system of highways most of the States had no highway departments. My own State had none. In order to encourage the building of highways we passed the Federal Road Act, under which we proposed to put up dollar for dollar. But even when we put up dollar for dollar, and when the Federal Government furnished only half of the money, the Federal Bureau of Roads retained control. It issued specifications and regulations. It cooperated with the State highway departments. The Federal Government insists upon certain standards which must be complied with in order that the States may get the amount of money which the Federal Government puts up as its share. In connection with that activity we put up only half of the money. In this case, when it is proposed practically to underwrite the whole program financially, it seems to me that the States have no right to complain if the Federal Government wishes to retain some supervision. The Federal Government must very largely finance this operation. Without the Federal Government many of the States would not even have a State employment service. The States have no right to complain if the Federal Government wishes to supervise the expenditure of the money. It would be a mistake, in my judgment, for the Federal Government to turn the money over to the States and permit the State administrations, without any oversight on the part of the Federal Government, to spend the money as they please. That is the thing that bothers me.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate what the Senator from Kentucky says. If the Senator from Ohio will pardon me for a further observation, in the beginning, when we started an unemployment fund in this country, as I recall, we turned it over to the States. What has troubled me from the beginning has been the divided responsibitly which existed, even during the war, between Federal officials and State officials, as the system was operating during wartime and as it is operating at the present time. I have received any number of letters asking me to do something about a particular individual who might be drawing unemployment compensation in the State of Illinois. I have received letters to the effect that in a particular town a number of persons who are absolutely not entitled to it are drawing unemployment compensation. The writers of these letters say that that is one of the New Deal measures that has been put over. They say, "The responsibility is yours, Senator LUCAS. See if you cannot take unemployment compensation away from those people, because they are not entitled to it." Obviously I have no time or opportunity to investigate such cases. But the truth of the matter is that under the present law responsibility for giving John Doe unemployment compensation in my home town of Urbana, or in any town in any other State, lies with the State at the present time, but the average individual does not understand that to be so.

My position is that I should like to see the responsibility of the Federal Government divorced, so far as possible, from the responsibility of the States. In taking that position I think I am on sound ground so far as the elimination of confusion and duplication of effort is concerned, and so far as concerns the further grant of Federal authority over a subject of this kind. That is my position.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio further yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am one of those who believe that unemployment in the United States is a Federal responsibility. It is a national problem. It cannot be divided into 48 airtight compartments when it is a national problem. I feel the same way about old-age pensions. If I had my way, I would provide old-age pensions for all the aged people in the United States, to be paid for and administered by the Government of the United States. The States have plenty of other uses for their money. I would handle the unemployment problem in the same way. I do not believe that one standard should be applied in Colorado and another in Kentucky, Illinois, or some other State. Frankly, I have no patience with the insistence of State governments that they be allowed to control this program. They make no objection when Uncle Sam puts up the money with which to administer the program, but they wish to retain authority to appoint all the officers. I agree that my theory with respect to old-age pensions and unemployment compensation is not the theory of the majority of the Senate, but it is my theory, and if I had my way, that is what I would do.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me so that I may answer the Senator from Kentucky? Then I shall subside.

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator from Kentucky will offer an amendment of the kind to which he refers, placing the administration of all unemployment compensation in the hands of the Federal Government, I will support such an amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes that it is not easy offhand to offer such an amendment. It must be drafted in the proper technical form. I would not attempt to clutter up this bill by offering such an amendment. I am simply giving an expression of my views.

Mr. LUCAS. I feel the same way about it; but that is not the issue here. We started on an entirely different theory so far as unemployment compensation is concerned. So long as we are operating under the theory that the States shall control and spend this money, it seems to me that the States ought to have the right to lay down rules and regulations in regard to unemployment compensation in the respective States. When the time comes, if any Senator desires to offer an amendment to enable the Federal Government to take over the administration of unemployment compensation and administer it as should have been done in the beginning, in my opinion, in view of what the Senator from Kentucky has said, the Senator from Illinois will support such an amendment. But so long as we are operating under the present system, the program ought to be conducted with the least possible confusion and duplication.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio further yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAGNUSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I rose to stress the point that under this system, inasmuch as the Federal Government is largely financing this enterprise, it is not unreasonable to expect that the Government, which is furnishing most of the money, ought to have something to say about how it is expended.

Mr. LUCAS. We did not do so in connection with WPA.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that case the Government of the United States put up all the money. There was a sort of voluntary arrangement in counties and cities by which certain funds were put up to help the Federal Government, but the Federal Government controlled the expenditure of WPA money. In any event, I am not certain that that is a very happy illustration.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, this system proceeds on the theory that it is a State-aid system, on the theory that the unemployment compensation offices are a part of a State system. Certainly it would be a violent assumption to hold that the Congress intended any other system.

The theory is merely to provide Federal aid for State employment offices. If we are not to operate a Federal employment system, if it is agreed that the offices should go back to the States regardless of how much money we put up, the only purpose of such a system is to give greater local initiative and discretion as to how the system shall be operated. Of course, if we are to provide Federal money, we shall have to prescribe certain standards, either in the act or in certain permanent regulations. What I object to is that the power is proposed to be so extended that the Director can practically tell every State employment office what it shall pay, and how it shall conduct every detail of its business. We might just as well have a Federal office. The theory is that the system is a State-aid system, with independence and discretion lodged in the States, but that is not what is proposed. When we are returning the offices to the States, I see no reason why we should not return them under the same conditions under which we took them over. There was no complaint about the system. It is true that it did not work perfectly. Some wanted a Federal system. It was not a Federal system. It was a State system, coordinated by the Federal Government. The Federal Government operated the exchange of information among the various offices, so that a man could find out what was available in other States, and be sent to other States. But fundamentally it was a State system, and the States operated it. If we are going back to that system, why change all the rules? Why try to build up a greater Federal control than we had before?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask the Senator if it is not true that under the original act, the Wagner-Peyser Act, there was a dollar-for-dollar matching provision?

Mr. TAFT. I cannot tell the Senator. The best information I have been able to obtain is that during the first 4 years of operation under the Wagner-Peyser Act the total cost of operating all employment service offices was $44,660,000, of which $30,546,000 came from the Federal Treasury. Throughout the period from the enactment of the Social Security Act until 1942, when the employment service was federalized, approximately 95 percent of the operating funds came from the Federal Government. I take it that that was a provision of the Social Security Act rather than of the Wagner-Peyser Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not read that act for some time, and I am speaking only from memory, which may be faulty. However, my recollection is that originally there was a dollar-for-dollar matching between the States and the Federal Government. However, what is now proposed is that the services be turned back to the States, and that the Federal Government shall put up all the money.

Mr. TAFT. I question that proposal. I think it is of doubtful validity.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Federal Government is to put up all the money, it ought to have at least as much control as it had when it put up only half of it.

Mr. TAFT. The proposed control is very much greater than it was under the original act.

Mr. BARKLEY. It ought to be at least 100 percent greater.

Mr. TAFT. If it is to be 100 percent, it ought to be a Federal system. The only purpose of a State system is to allow the States some discretion as to who shall be employed, and how the offices shall be conducted. Opportunity should be given for the development of new ideas in the various States. The States should not be bound by a uniform system of Federal regulation. If we are to have a State system, this is not the time to expand the authority of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. President, I believe that the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] should be adopted, and that we should return the offices to the States under substantially the same conditions as those which existed when the Federal Government arbitrarily took them over in 1942.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, in reply to what the Senator from Kentucky said, namely, that under the Wagner-Peyser Act there was an equal division between the States and the Federal Government, let me say that under the pending bill the control will be practically the same as it was when the employment offices were taken over. I have asked those who have stated to the contrary to say in what respects the pending bill provides greater power on the part of the Federal Government, but I have heard no explanation by them in that connection.

The fact of the matter is that the Secretary of Labor previously had authority to provide regulations. If a State did not comply, the Secretary of Labor could take away the money. Under the pending bill if a State refuses to comply, the Secretary of Labor will be authorized to operate the employment organization or service for 3 months, provided the total amount of money expended by the United States shall not exceed $1,000,000. That is practically the situation.

It is purely an exercise of the imagination to say that under the bill the power of the Secretary is expanded.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I ask the able Senator what will happen under the bill after the 3 months expire? Will the Federal Government then move out, assuming that it has reached no agreement with the States?

Mr. TUNNELL. In that event it cannot spend any more money.

Mr. LUCAS. In such a situation it will have to come back to the Congress for further appropriations, in order to continue operating, will it not?

Mr. TUNNELL. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TUNNELL. And the operation by the Federal Government during the 3 months' period will be entirely for the benefit of the unemployed in the State.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; I understand.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Delaware about a telegram which we were told was sent from a governors' conference. I understand that the governors approved of the bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives. I should like to have the Senator state briefly the changes between the bill with the amendments proposed by the Senator's subcommittee and the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. TUNNELL. I have a copy of the bill as it was passed by the House of Representatives, but it is rather long and I do not know that I can designate all the changes. The bill sets forth the amendments to the Wagner-Peyser Act and it brings the Wagner-Peyser Act, as amended, down to date. Under the pending bill the Federal Government will pay all the cost. Under the Wagner-Peyser Act the Government pays 50 percent of the cost.

One of the amendments, among others, is subdivision (c), on page 13. That was not contained in the bill as passed by the House.

There seems to be considerable fear that the Federal Government will obtain too much control. There is no disposition, and there was none on the part of the subcommittee which wrote the bill, to give the Federal Government too much control. In fact, it appeared to me, believing as I did in Federal control and a Federal system, that we were going clear over to the idea of lack of control. In almost every instance in which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] thought there would be too much Federal control, I think the majority of the committee accepted his idea. So under the bill the States will have absolute control, with the exception of the regulations as provided for by the Wagner-Peyser Act and the Social Security Act. In fact, the language of the bill is almost identical with the corresponding language of the Social Security Act.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Could it possibly be contended that the Federal Congress should appropriate money and turn it over to a State and then have absolutely nothing to say about the way in which the money is expended? There must be some way by which there will be a uniform standard among the States. As I understand the bill, it sets up such a standard, and it provides that so long as the States comply with that standard they will receive the money; but if they do not comply with it, the money will be cut-off.

Mr. TUNNELL. That is correct.

Mr. HAYDEN. Subsection (b) on page 12 is even more favorable to the States than the provision which previously was in the bill. The committee removed the other provision, and provided for a uniform handling of the problem.

Of course, when these agencies were taken over by the Federal Government, they had been State agencies. But at that time the Nation was at war and the President of the United States had authority under the War Powers Act to cover the agencies into the Federal service, and all of them came under our civil-service arrangement.

Now they are to be returned to the States. The governors of the States do not have such war powers. So there must be a uniform arrangement whereby some experienced personnel will be retained. The bill provides such an arrangement, but it is limited in its provisions. The bill provides that a State shall be judged to fail to act in this connection only if there is no specific request by the governor of the State that the Federal Government continue its control. Provision is made that the funds shall be specifically appropriated by the Congress, and that not more than $1,000,000 shall be appropriated, and that it shall be available for not more than 3 months. It seems to me that is a very reasonable arrangement by which to get the system back to the States as a going concern, because we cannot assume that in all 48 of the States everything will be exactly right at the moment of the transfer.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, to permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. Does the Senator from Arizona know why the Federal Government should pay all the expenses?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the way it was done before, as the Senator no doubt remembers. I protested about that when the original transfer measure was before the Senate, but the States insisted upon it. They said they would manage it, but they insisted that the Federal Government pay the bill.

The Senator may remember that it was a new conception of States rights that the Federal Government should levy the taxes and that the States should have the right to come to the Federal Government and get the money.

Mr. BUCK. I was under the impression that prior to the war the States paid the bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. They paid a part of it.

Mr. BUCK. When we take over a service, we should pay the bill. But now that we turn it back to the States, why should not the States pay for it?

Mr. HAYDEN. Because the States insist on that position, and the Congress took that view.

Mr. BUCK. What States insisted upon it?

Mr. HAYDEN. Was it not an organization of governors that asked us to handle the matter in this way?

Mr. TUNNELL. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. I do not think the States want to pay for any part of it.

Mr. HAYDEN. The question which is being asked is why should we make it possible for the Federal Government to pay a greater proportion of the cost of this service than the Federal Government paid before the war?

Mr. TUNNELL. As I understand, the Social Security System was paying a part of the cost, and under that arrangement the Federal Government paid 95 percent of the cost. Then, when the Federal Government took over the services, it paid all the cost.

Mr. BUCK. Is the Senator correct in his statement that 95 percent of the cost was paid by the Federal Government, prior to the war?

Mr. TUNNELL. That is correct, according to the information I have received from the clerk of the committee.

Mr. BUCK. I was under the impression that the arrangement was either on a 40–60 basis, or a 50–50 basis.

Mr. TUNNELL. Under the Wagner-Peyser Act it was a 50–50 basis. Then by some means 40 percent or 45 percent came from the Social Security System, under the Social Security Act.

Mr. BUCK. Regardless of whether the States paid any amount, I think they should be required to pay a part of the costs of administration.

Mr. TUNNELL. I agree with the Senator on that point.

Mr. BUCK. I do not see why they should expect the Federal Government to pay all the costs.

Mr. TUNNELL. But our committee went the whole way, with the idea of not antagonizing the States.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. What representatives of the governors or of the States appeared before the committee and so testified?

Mr. TUNNELL. I do not think any governors appeared. But there were those who represented themselves as representing the States.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me say that I refer to action taken at a governors' conference about a year ago, wherein they strongly urged that this system be returned to the States.

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes; but I think the Senator will find that at all times they have had in the back of their minds the idea of having the Federal Government continue to pay the expenses.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. As I recall, a representative of the Council of State Governors appeared before the full committee and asked to have the agency turned back as it was before, with the Federal Government simply putting up the money to carry it on. Then they said that if the law were to be amended in any way, as is proposed by the subcommittee of the Senate committee, they wished to offer several amendments which they would like to have incorporated in the measure. The committee agreed to do that.

As the bill now appears before us, it includes several amendments which were proposed by the representative of the States.

Mr. TUNNELL. I believe it was Mr. Rector who appeared for the States.

Mr. AIKEN. As I recall, we incorporated in the measure practically all the amendments which they proposed. As the bill is now written, I think it contains the amendments and the other provisions which the representatives of the State governments proposed.

Mr. TUNNELL. We thought we were giving the States what they proposed.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. TUNNELL. I wish to invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that, while the States have been desiring to take over this function, and the bill has been written with the idea of allowing the States to do so, there was in the original act, and there is also in the pending bill, a provision which gives power to the Secretary to make rules and regulations. I think the bill should contain such a provision.

Mr. BALL. The Federal contribution of 100 percent of the administrative cost in both cases is financed by the 10 percent of the unemployment compensation tax paid by employers which the Federal Government retains, and the remaining 90 percent which is received by the States and which goes into the reserve fund.

Mr. HAYDEN. Is it not true that because the money comes originally from the pay-roll tax collected within the State, it was not considered as being in the same class with the general revenues of the State?

Mr. BALL. The Senator is correct. I believe that if we are going to have Federal matching there is considerable merit to the contention that a detailed plan should be submitted, and that it be permanent once it has been adopted and agreed to. Where there is a 100-percent grant, I think the Federal Government must of necessity exercise supervision and have a great deal of authority.

Mr. HAYDEN. Is the Senator from Minnesota satisfied with the provision on page 12, in paragraph (b) concerning the interim activity in case the State cannot undertake the work immediately and the Federal Government continues to operate the system?

Mr. BALL. I think the provision to which the Senator has referred is satisfactory. The language there means that the Secretary may not operate a State system except at the written request of the governor of the State. The Secretary could not operate the New York system, for example, for 3 months on the amount of money which would be available.

Mr. HAYDEN. It seems to me that an adequate safeguard is provided in the bill.

Mr. BALL. Absolutely.

Mr. TUNNELL. I believe that the bill is many times more satisfactory than the original Wagner-Peyser Act. Some persons have expressed the belief that the State should advance a part of the funds. There was no disagreement in the committee, so far as I know, with respect to that point. There was no argument about it. We all agreed to it on the ground that the Government had taken over the offices, and an understanding had been reached that the offices would be returned. Now the Federal Government is paying 100 percent of the expense, and the offices are to be returned on the same basis as that on which they are now being operated.

Mr. BALL. I believe that the committee was guided by the fact that at least on two occasions both Houses of Congress had passed provisions in connection with 100 percent Federal funds.

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes.

Mr. BALL. A similar provision was inserted in the rescission bill.

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes. The matter can be approached from the point of view expressed by the majority leader, namely, that the States should pay if there is to be any return of the Service to the States, or that the Federal Government should take over the entire operation and pay all the expense. That point of view may be taken, or the point of view that the States should have all the control and the Federal Government should pay all the bills. That seems to be the argument which is being made on this floor. That is practically what we are agreeing to, except that the Secretary of Labor is authorized, as he was in the original Wagner-Peyser Act, to make the regulations. The only difference is in the power which he will have to enforce the regulations.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, according to my knowledge, the Governor of Idaho and the director of our employment service in that State are not greatly exercised about how soon the employment service shall be returned. They are not very anxious about having the responsibility which they will have in connection with the work, but they are very much worried about where the money will come from. I have received the following telegram from Governor Williams.

BOISE, IDAHO, April 13, 1946.

Hon. GLEN H. TAYLOR,
United States Senate:

House committee now considering appropriation for United States Employment Service. Necessary that Federal Government finance 100 percent operation of these offices in Idaho. War Manpower Commission funds being used to pay personnel in USES will not be available after June 30. Urge you to use your influence to have adequate fund appropriated to USES so that services will not be crippled in Idaho when turned over to State.

ARNOLD WILLIAMS,
Governor.

Governor Williams has also written me a letter endorsing the bill which was originally introduced by the Senator from Montana and which was much stronger than the pending bill in relation to protecting the rights of employees under the turn-back to the States. However, that bill is not now before us. Evidently the Governor is very much in favor of the present provisions in the bill to which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] referred a few moments ago as being extra verbiage.

Those provisions are merely for the protection of the rights of employees who have been employed by the Federal Government. When the service is turned back to the States those employees should be protected against being dismissed en masse and replaced by persons who might be members of a State political machine. Mr. President, I am convinced that something of that kind may happen to the employment service. If it is turned back to the States without the protection which has been suggested in connection with this bill, the various State services may be turned into political footballs.

I read from a paragraph of a letter addressed to me by Mr. S. D. Hayes, State director of the Department of Labor, United States Employment Service, at Boise, Idaho.

As Congress no doubt will return the Employment Service to the States during this next fiscal year, and as it is intended to return it with 100 percent Federal funding, then it is quite evident that the USES funds must be increased so that the Employment Service will not be returned with a handicap of shortage of funds.

He is very much worried about the matter.

I should now like to read into the RECORD one paragraph of the testimony of General Bradley given on January 17, 1946 before the House Committee in connection with the question of returning the Employment Service to the States. General Bradley said:

As head of the placement board I can state that we would like to see it go on as it is without change, at least until we are over this hump and where there are not so many veterans looking for employment. * * * That it is much easier to carry out the policies of the board and see that they are carried out by an employment service through a national organization rather than through so many seperate organizations of the States. * * * Whether it should be transferred beyond that, I should think would be for someone to determine whether or not it can be transferred when business is less and we still have an efficiently run program.

Mr. President, I should like to say, as a former worker, and one who has built up a social security account, that I cannot see the sense of having unemployment insurance and the proposed employment service operated by the States. A worker will go to one State and work there for a while, and during that time he will build up a social security account. Then he may go to another State and there build up another account. Finally, he may require the services of an expert bookkeeper in order to keep books on himself, or he will forget where his accounts are located, and he will lose all his benefits, or at least most of them, unless he remains in one particular place. If I should ever desire to draw from my social security account I would have to scratch my head and look for wage receipts, and one thing and another, whereas if the whole matter were administered federally I could write to the Government, give my social security number, and ask, "How much money do I have coming? I should like to get it because I am in bad financial shape."

Mr. President, I agree with the distinguished majority leader that the unemployment insurance, employment service and pension plans should be federally administered. Certainly, if we are going to return the employment service to the States, we should afford protection such as that which is embodied in the pending bill, and not return the service with no strings whatever attached.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a few minutes ago I referred to an amendment in the nature of a motion to substitute certain language for all of titles I and II of the committee amendment.

The gist of the proposed amendment is that the Secretary of Labor shall provide for the return to State operation, not later than December 31, 1946, or such earlier date as he may deem feasible, of public employment offices in an orderly and expeditious manner, which offices shall thereafter be operated under and in accordance with the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act as amended to January 1, 1942: Provided, That no State shall be required to make any appropriation as provided in section 5 (a) of the Wagner-Peyser Act, as amended to January 1, 1942, prior to July 1, 1948.

Mr. President, the basis of this amendment, which I shall offer shortly, is that the employment services should be turned back to the respective States in the condition in which they were taken over on January 1, 1942, subject only to such transitional requirements as obviously must be made in the course of the retransfer.

Before addressing myself to the fundamental principle underlying the amendment, Mr. President, let me refer to the point made by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] with reference to the absence of restraint on the States. I think his point is very well taken, that if the Federal Government shall finance the proposition, it should have some power of restriction and restraint with respect to the use of the funds appropriated.

Mr. President, let me call attention to the fact that the Wagner-Peyser Act, both as passed and as it went into effect on June 6, 1933, and as it had been amended to January 1, 1942, provided precisely the control and restraint which the Federal Government should have with respect to the operation of these services by the States.

It will be recalled that in the Wagner-Peyser Act it is provided that any State desiring to receive the benefits of the act shall submit to the Director of the Bureau in the Department of Labor detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of the act within such States; that if such plans are in conformity with the provisions of the act, and reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its provisions, they shall be approved by the Director, and due notice of such approval shall be given to the State agency.

Then, Mr. President, the next succeeding section of the act, section 9, requires, first, that each State agency cooperating with the United States Employment Service under the act shall make such reports concerning its operations and expenditures as shall be prescribed by the Director. Thus, obviously the Director is given a power of observation and a power of requiring such reports as he shall prescribe. Certainly there is some restriction, certainly some restraint, when the Director of the Bureau in the Department of Labor has the power, as he does under the Wagner-Peyser Act, of requiring the submission of such reports concerning the making of expenditures as he himself shall prescribe.

But the section does not stop there. It then provides that—

> It shall be the duty of the Director to ascertain whether the system of public employment offices maintained in each State is conducted in accordance with the rules and regulations and the standards of efficiency prescribed by the Director in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Not only is there this express provision giving him the duty to ascertain whether the system of public employment offices maintained in each State is conducted in accordance with those rules and regulations and standards of efficiency, but in the act there is a further precaution expressly given to the Director, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, the authority to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act. I cite section 12 as having that general effect.

Reverting again to section 9 after making it the obligation of each State agency to submit the reports concerning its operations and expenditures, which shall be prescribed by the Director, and after making it the duty of the Director to ascertain whether the system of offices maintained in each State is conducted in accordance with the rules and regulations and the standards of efficiency prescribed by the Director, there is a further very significant provision.

Before mentioning that, however, let me refer to another matter. The distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] a few minutes ago referred to some such language as "a political football." I undertake to say that under the provision of section 9 not only does the Director have the power of supervision as to rules and regulations, but also with respect to standards of efficiency. I take it that the provision as to standards of efficiency which the Director has the right to see are carried out impliedly gives to him clearly the power to prescribe a merit system, and such other systems as may be necessary to guarantee that the employees of State offices shall not be mere political footballs, or stool pigeons for some political leader, but shall be men and women chosen because of their ability and efficiency. If I am not mistaken, those merit systems existed prior to January 1, 1942, and were carried into effect and operation certainly in various States of the Union.

The point I make, in answer to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, is that the amendment which I propose will not leave us in an uncharted sea of nonregulation or nonrestriction by the Federal Government, but will put us back under the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act to which I have adverted.

Then I come to the further provision to which I was about to refer, namely, that—

> The Director may revoke any existing certificates—

The certificate was the means by which money was to be transferred to the respective agencies under the Wagner-Peyser Act—

> The Director may revoke any existing certificates or withhold any further certificate provided for in section 7, whenever he shall determine, as to any State, that the cooperating State agency has not properly expended the money paid to it or the moneys herein required to be appropriated by such State, in accordance with plans approved under this act.

Then there is a provision for the giving of notice in writing to the State agency on the part of the Director before any such certificate shall be revoked or withheld, and a provision for an appeal by the State agency to the Secretary of Labor from the action of the Director in any such case. The power is expressly granted to the Secretary of Labor either to affirm or reverse the action of the Director on such appeals, as he shall consider proper.

So, I respectfully submit that no Senator need have the slighest fear that if the amendment which I propose shall be adopted, it will mean that the Federal Government, which will be putting up 100 percent of the expenditures, will be without effective power of supervision and control, for such power is clearly and conclusively existent under the terms of the Wagner-Peyser Act as they existed both at the time of its passage and on January 1, 1942.

Mr. President, I stated, in substance, that the fundamental proposition upon which this amendment is based is that the Federal Government should return the facilities, in the condition in which it received them, to the respective States, subject only to such necessary incidental provisions as may be required in order to bring about the transmission over to the States of the particular facilities in question.

Why should they be turned back to the States? Is there any obligation on the part of the Federal Government so to do? I take it that no one, certainly no one who occupied the position of Governor of a State, can read the record with respect to the acquisition of these facilities from the various States and fail to realize that these facilities were taken over under the express provisions of the telegraphic message sent by President Roosevelt on December 19, 1941, to the State governors. That message reads as follows:

> Now that this country is actually at war, it is more than ever necessary that we utilize to the fullest possible extent all of the manpower and womanpower of this country to increase our production of war materials. This can be accomplished by centralizing recruiting work into one agency.
> At present, as you know, the United States Employment Service consists of 50 separate State and territorial employment services whose operations are loosely coordinated by the Federal Government. In order that there may be a complete responsiveness to the demands of national defense, and speedy, uniform, effective action to meet rapidly changing needs, it is essential that all of these separate employment services become a uniformly and of necessity nationally operated employment service.
> I have, therefore, given instructions to the proper Federal officials that the necessary steps be taken to accomplish this purpose at once. I ask that you—

He was referring to the governors of the States in the telegraphic message—

> I ask that you likewise instruct the proper officials of your State to transfer to the United States Employment Service all of the present personnel, records, and facilities required for this operation.
> Inasmuch as the Federal Government is already paying practically 100 percent of the cost of operation and the State personnel has been recruited on a merit basis—

I pause in my reading to call attention to that important and significant observation—that a merit basis prevails—as I indicated a few moments ago. Returning then to the President's message—

> there will be no difficulty in transferring State employees into the Federal service. These employment offices will continue to serve the unemployment compensation agency so that there will be no need to set up duplicate offices. I shall appreciate your advising me at once of your full cooperation so that the conversion of the present Employment Service into a truly national service may be accomplished without delay.

Mr. President, obviously, the needs and conditions of stress and strain and war were those under which the President made this extraordinary request of the governors of the States, and to a man the governors of the States responded. Every one of them complied with the request made by the President in this forceful language.

Now, what do those governors consider to have been the nature of that transaction? They have expressed themselves on several occasions as to the nature of the transaction—whether it was a gift which would give to the Federal Government an irrevocable right or whether it was in the nature of a loan. I call attention to the fact that at the 1944 Conference of Governors of the United States, held at Hershey, Pa., among other recitals in the resolutions relative to the employment offices, is this short paragraph:

> Whereas it was the stated assumption of the governors that the transfer was made as a temporary loan to be terminated with the passing of the emergency which prompted the President's request;

Mr. President, at the subsequent meeting of the governors' conference held in Mackinac, Mich., on July 4, 1945, occurs in the resolutions adopted on this same subject these various significant preambles:

Whereas the President of the United States more than 3 years ago requested the governors of the several States, as an emergency measure, to loan—

I call the Senate's attention to this significant expression of "loan"— to loan their employment offices to the National Government in order to facilitate the fullest use of all of our manpower for war; and

Whereas the governors of all the States agreed to this emergency measure, with the understanding that at the proper time the employment offices would be returned to the States—

And so forth. Then, Mr. President, the language which I have already read today from the governors' conference at Oklahoma City refers to the agreement of the President of the United States, both Houses of Congress, and the governors' conference, in which all bound themselves that the Employment Service should be returned to the States.

Mr. President, the governors of this country considered the transaction as a loan. But it may be said, "What did the Federal Government itself consider it to be?" This very Senate of the United States has passed at least three times expressly upon this proposition. I refer to Public Law 124, page 24, a bill which was approved by the President July 3, 1945. It contains this provision:

That the employment service facilities, property and personnel loaned by the States to the United States Employment Service, shall be returned to the States not later than 3 months after the termination of hostilities in the war with Japan as determined by Presidential proclamation or by concurrent resolution of Congress.

Obviously, Mr. President, by the use of the term "loan" the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives of the United States each recognized the transaction to have been a loan. Likewise the President of the United States, by the very fact that he approved the bill to which I have referred.

Then, Mr. President, I call attention also to the bill S. 1274, an act to amend the General Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944, and so forth, which was passed by the Senate on September 20, 1945. By that bill it is provided, among other things:

The employment service facilities, property, and personnel loaned by the States to the United States Employment Service, shall be returned to the States not later than 90 days after the enactment of this act. The Secretary of Labor is authorized and directed to take such action as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

So, again did this very body, the Senate of the United States, recognize the transaction as a loan.

Mr. President, I refer likewise to the rescission bill, which received what is known as a pocket veto by the President of the United States. I call to the attention of the Senate the fact that in the statement of the managers on the part of the House in the pamphlet entitled "Conference Report," with respect to that bill, namely H. R. 4407, occurs this significant language on the part of the managers:

No. 21, relating to the United States Employment Service: Accepts the Senate provision for returning to the States the employment services which were loaned to the Federal Government at the beginning of 1942, pursuant to the request of the President, but provides for an outside return date of 100 days after the enactment of the bill instead of 120 days, as the Senate amendment proposed.

So, Mr. President, it would seem to be clear that the transaction has been considered uniformly, both by the governors of the States and by the Congress of the United States, and, in the instance mentioned, by the President of the United States, as a loan.

A loan, as I understand it—and I have respectable authority for the statement—is anything loaned or given to another on condition of return or payment. I take it that it is not intended that when a service is loaned to the Government it shall be returned back to the States in a different condition or subject to different conditions than the condition or conditions, respectively, which existed at the time the loan was made.

The governors of the respective States are highly interested even yet with respect to this proposition. I have referred earlier, twice this afternoon, to the resolutions adopted by the conference of governors meeting in Oklahoma City on May 30 of this year. I also referred in passing to the fact that certain telegrams had been received with respect to the position taken by the various governors of the United States. I may say that these telegrams were received before the time the bill was placed in its present form, but they contain significant language, and indicate beyond peradventure of doubt that the governors of the various States who responded to inquiries made, or who volunteered their opinions, as the case may be, practically uniformly, so far as I know, took the view that there should be a return, and many of them stated that it should be under the conditions on which the services were turned over to the Government.

I hold in my hand the telegram received in Washington April 18, 1946, from the Honorable Earl Warren, Governor of the State of California, addressed to myself. In it he says:

This State favors return of employment service under terms of H. R. 4437, as it passed the House, with possible extension of return date to September 1, 1946.

I call attention to the fact that among these telegrams is likewise one which reached Washington on April 19 of this year from the Honorable John C. Vivian, Governor of the State of Colorado, which reads:

I regard Senate Education and Labor Committee version of H. R. 4437—

I may say that that was the earlier committee print; it is not the one now placed before us, but Senators will observe the view which the Governor takes nevertheless.

I regard Senate Education and Labor Committee version of H. R. 4437 detrimental and contrary to best interests of this State. It violates the present intent of Congress and obliterates States' rights. Would appreciate your help in retaining provision of Dirksen amendment as passed by the House.

Mr. President, the Dirksen amendment is H. R. 4437 as it passed the House and came to the Senate.

I hold in my hand two telegrams from Hon. Raymond E. Baldwin, Governor of Connecticut, the first one having been received in this city at 2:17 on the afternoon of April 18, the second one having been received on the same afternoon at 3:30. The first one reads:

Strongly favor House version of bill providing for return of employment services to the States over version now pending in the Senate. Hope that amendments can be made adopting form of House bill. Kindest regards.

Mr. President, again I say that the bill then before the Senate committee was the committee print and not the present bill, but the Governor indicates clearly his view with respect to the House version of the bill, and in this telegram advocates its passage.

This telegram was followed, as I have indicated, by the second telegram, which says:

Since sending telegram of this date have seen copy of letter written to you by Mr. Frank Bane—

I pause in reading, Mr. President, to say that Mr. Bane is the secretary of the governors' conference, and I think also is the secretary of the Council of State Governors.

Proceeding with the telegram:

I agree with the points suggested in that letter as possible improvements to the Senate bill.

I call attention to the fact that on April 20 there was received in Washington a further telegram from the Honorable Millard F. Caldwell, Governor of Florida, reading as follows:

Am advised your committee ready to release report approving bill returning unemployment service to States. Am advised the measure approved contains same objectionable features as original Ramspeck bill defeated in House and carries increased Federal controls and enforcement machinery. I disapprove such features and think it only fair and right that employment service be returned immediately to States in same form and substance as prevailed when service loaned to Federal Government at outbreak of war. This was the agreement on which transfer was made and a return of the service encumbered with controls and features not prevailing at time of transfer constitutes breach of same. Regards.

MILLARD F. CALDWELL,
Governor of Florida.

I hold in my hand a telegram received in Washington on April 20 from Hon. Ralph F. Gates, Governor of Indiana. The telegram reads as follows:

Am in receipt of copy of H. R. 4437 as Senate Education and Labor proposes reporting.

Again, at the risk of repetition, I invite attention to the fact that that was the earlier draft, and not the one now before us, but I think he indicates something of interest in his telegram nevertheless. He says:

This version contains same objectionable provisions stricken from Ramspeck bill by Dirksen amendment by House action. I urge that Senate adopt without amendment this bill as passed by House to prevent federalization of employment service and to give States authority to improve and develop employment service without obnoxious Federal restrictions. I reaffirm stand taken by governor's conference.

RALPH F. GATES,
Governor of Indiana.

I have a few further telegrams. Here is one from Gov. Robert D. Blue, of Iowa, received in Washington on April 18:

DES MOINES, IOWA, April 18, 1946.
Hon. FORREST DONNELL,
Senator from Missouri,
Senate Education and Labor Committee,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

It is imperative that the employment service be returned to State control immediately. This return is needed for the proper administration of State unemployment compensation laws and for proper service under the GI bill to veterans. I urge the passage of H. R. 4437 as amended and passed by the House.

ROBERT D. BLUE,
Governor of Iowa.

I have a telegram received on April 18 from Governor O'Conor, of Maryland, which reads as follows:

BALTIMORE, MD., April 18, 1946.
Senator FORREST DONNELL,
Senate Education and Labor Committee,
Washington, D. C.:

I strongly oppose H. R. 4437 as now being considered by your committee. This is substantially the same as the Ramspeck bill which was defeated in House. I am strongly in favor of the immediate return of the employment service to the States.

HERBERT R. O'CONOR,
Governor.

From the State of Montana, the State from which the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor comes, I have a telegram received in Washington on April 20.

HELENA, MONT., April 20, 1946.
Hon. FORREST C. DONNELL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Advised Senate Education and Labor Committee withholding final report version of employment service return measure in order governors may have opportunity to express views. Once again we in Montana would like employment service loaned at request of President during stress of war returned at once. We are opposed to increased and continual Federal controls and therefore we do not favor Ramspeck bill though it may be labeled 4437 and presented as improvement over Dirksen amendment as passed by House. The governors have so many, many times expressed their opinions and the Congress has so many, many times expressed intention to make good on implied promise of President to return this service, and Federal departments have so many, many times by their acts demonstrated they have no intention to follow wishes of Congress it now seems crystal clear unless Senate will act decisively there is no hope that Federal departments will ever be willing to return this service to local management. We appreciate what you are doing and extend our thanks. The service could be returned within 24 hours in Montana without confusion. If this were done it would give to our people a minor sign justifying renewed faith in democratic processes of government.

SAM C. FORD,
Governor of Montana.

The following telegram was received in Washington on April 19 from Governor Vail Pittman, of Nevada:

CARSON CITY, NEV., April 19, 1946.
Hon. Senator FORREST DONNELL,
Senate Education and Labor Committee,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Understand Senate Education and Labor Committee withholding final report of its version of employment service return measure until Monday at your request. I am not familiar with text Senate committee bill, but I am informed that it contains all the objectionable features of the Ramspeck bill that was defeated in the House. If this is the case, I am strongly opposed to new bill. Am heartily in favor of the bill as passed by the House of Representatives. Wish to thank you for courtesy that has been extended through your efforts. Kind regards.

VAIL PITTMAN,
Governor of Nevada.

The following telegram from the Governor of South Carolina, Hon. Ransome J. Williams, was received in Washington on April 18:

COLUMBIA, S. C., April 18, 1946.
Hon. FORREST DONNELL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.,

Am strongly opposed to Education and Labor Committee version of employment service return measure. It is in substance the objectionable Ramspeck bill which was overwhelmingly defeated in House. Earnestly urge adoption of the Dirsken amendment heretofore passed by House in its stead.

RANSOME J. WILLIAMS,
Governor.

For the benefit of Senators who have entered the Chamber since I began speaking, let me say that this telegram was received before the present bill had been drafted.

Here is a telegram from Hon. Coke Stevenson, Governor of Texas, received in Washington on April 19:

AUSTIN, TEX., April 19, 1946.
Senator FORREST DONNELL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Texas Unemployment Compensation Commission is prepared to take over and operate vigorously and efficiently employment service at any time the Congress may designate. The commissioners do protest, however, and I join with them against legislation that would put them in a strait-jacket of Federal control.

COKE STEVENSON.

The next is a telegram from the Governor of West Virginia, Hon. Clarence W. Meadows. The telegram was received in Washington on April 18, and reads as follows:

CHARLESTON, W. VA., April 18, 1946.
Hon. FORREST DONNELL,
United States Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

This is to advise that I am opposed to bill H. R. 4437 as amended by the Senate Education and Labor Committee as it gives the Secretary of Labor powers which rightfully belong to the States. In my opinion employment service should be returned to the States under the same condition as they were loaned to Federal Government.

CLARENCE W. MEADOWS,
Governor of West Virginia.

Finally—and perhaps appropriately—the following telegram comes from the oldest Governor in the United States, Hon. Walter S. Goodland, Governor of Wisconsin, who, notwithstanding his eighty-odd years, like our good friend Mr. Crockett in the Senate, is still vigorous and active, the telegram was received on April 19, and reads as follows:

MADISON, WIS., April 19, 1946.
Hon. FORREST C. DONNELL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Firmly believe that employment services should be returned to the States not later than June 30, 1946, and upon the same basis in which they were loaned.

WALTER S. GOODLAND,
Governor of Wisconsin.

So, Mr. President, in reply to the question asked by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART], I point out this expression which has been made by Governors over and over again, collectively and individually, with reference to this question.

The committee amendment does not return these facilities to the States in the condition in which they were received, and does not merely add to the bill such transitional requirements as would be obviously necessary to cover the situation of the increased personnel and different personnel, but it goes far beyond any such provisions. I shall not go into great detail in this respect. However, I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to a very few of the changes which are made by the committee amendment.

Reference has been made particularly to section 9 (b) on page 12 of the bill. This subsection reads as follows:

(b) The Secretary is authorized to expend in any State so much of the funds appropriated and made available under section 5 of this act as may be necessary to operate a State-wide system of public employment offices under the control of the Secretary if no State system of public employment offices exists in such State or if, and for as long as, the State is not eligible for funds in accordance with the provisions of this act. Except to the extent that a system of employment offices under the control of the Secretary is operated within a State either (1) pursuant to the specific request of the Governor of such State or (2) with funds specifically appropriated by the Congress for the operation of such system under the control of the Secretary, the Secretary shall not expend more than $1,000,000 in any fiscal year pursuant to this subsection or operate a system of employment offices in any State pursuant to this subsection for more than 3 months in any fiscal year.

Mr. President, obviously, Congress itself could, if it desired, perpetuate the control of the National Government in the States under the provision that if it shall appropriate funds specifically for the operation of the system, it may retain control. As I read the section, the Secretary would then be privileged to continue the operation of the system within the State.

As has been so well pointed out by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], in any State in which the Governor himself should become of the opinion that he would like to have the Federal Government operate, that one official, regardless of whether the millions of inhabitants of his State and the legislature of the State might prefer otherwise, would have the power vested in him by this bill to permit the Secretary of Labor to continue indefinitely the operation of the employment service within such State. There was nothing of this kind whatsoever in the Wagner-Peyser Act. Nothing even remotely to that effect was contained in the bill passed in 1933, or in the law as it was in existence on January 1, 1942.

The only provision in the Wagner-Peyser Act with respect to violations of the rules, regulations, and plans was that which I have already read, under which the Director might revoke any existing certificate or certificates. He might cut off the money and thus prevent the State from further breaking the regulations or upsetting the plan. But nowhere does the Wagner-Peyser Act permit the Federal Government, either by action of the Congress, by action of the governor, or by the action of anyone else, to operate in the State the employment service within its bounds.

The referral provisions of the bill have been mentioned. I shall not undertake to go into detail on that subject. It has been sufficiently covered. It is provided that—

> No person shall be referred to a position * * * (c) if, as determined by the State agency, the position is one which does not utilize the person's highest skill, until and unless a reasonable effort has been made to place him in a position that does utilize his highest skill.

It is true, as the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] has indicated this afternoon, that he would be agreeable to an amendment by which the determination of whether or not a reasonable effort had been made should be vested in the State agency. It has been well pointed out, however, by the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] that under the power of prescribing rules and regulations, the power of retaining money, and the power, if necessary, of going into a State and taking possession of the system, obviously the Secretary of Labor may, notwithstanding even such an amendment as the Senator from Minnesota is agreeable to accepting, have the power to determine whether or not a reasonable effort has been made to place the individual in a position which utilizes his highest skill.

Someone may ask, How is that provision of any importance? Let me give an illustration. Take the case of a young man working on a farm in the State of Wisconsin. He goes to Milwaukee and becomes employed there, not on a farm, but in shipbuilding, and develops that as his highest skill. At the conclusion of the war, there being no longer any shipbuilding in progress at Milwaukee, or certainly not enough to employ everyone who had been previously employed, suppose the State then determines that inasmuch as he has become skilled in some operation connected with shipbuilding, that is his highest skill. What, then, is a reasonable effort to place him in a position to utilize his particular skill? There is nothing in the bill to prevent the Secretary of Labor from saying that such a person shall draw unemployment compensation for the full period. Under the bill as it is now written, it would be within the power of the Secretary of Labor to expand the period beyond one which you, Mr. President, or I might deem to be reasonable, and to permit certain persons to remain without employment, drawing unemployment compensation, for a number of months, merely because they could not be placed at work building a ship, under conditions such as those to which I have referred.

So, Mr. President, in connection with the recapture clause to which I have alluded in section 9 (b), the referral standards are two instances in which the committee amendment does not give the services back to the States in the same way in which the services were transferred by the States to the Government.

There are other particulars which I might mention, but I shall mention only one, namely, that the commitee amendment, by legislative enactment, places back into the hands of the Secretary of Labor, the supervision of this system, in so far as the Federal Government shall supervise it. Mr. President, what was the condition on January 1, 1942? As has been pointed out this afternoon, at the outset of these services the Department of Labor was the branch of our government which had charge of this particular type of activity. Later, certain transfers were made, and under the Reorganization Act of 1939 this particular branch of the work of the Government was transferred to the Social Security Board. Thereafter, there was, first, a transfer to another organization; and, finally, under the War Powers Act, by the medium of a directive issued by the President, this particular type of work was transferred to the Department of Labor. Therefore, at the time when these services were transferred to the Federal Government on January 1, 1942, the condition which then existed was that the Social Security Board was in control of the services. Yet the amendment proposed by the Senate committee undertakes to return these particular facilities, not to the Social Security Board, but to the Department of Labor. I take it that a reasonable construction of the law would be that, in the absence of the amendment proposed by the committee, upon the expiration of the War Powers Act these services should be returned, not to the Department of Labor, but to the Social Security Board. So, here we have a number of instances of very material, direct, and substantial changes being made by the proposed amendment from the condition under which the services were transferred to the United States Government on January 1, 1942.

The question whether the statutory freezing of this particular work in the Department of Labor is wise or unwise is one upon which the late President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, spoke most eloquently and clearly in a statement which he made some years ago. We may remember that today the unemployment-compensation phase of these matters is vested in the Social Security Board. If, however, the employment services are placed under the Department of Labor, there will be two departments dealing with precisely the same person, in many cases.

One of the purposes which is served by the employment service is to make certain that no person shall be able to obtain unemployment compensation if work of an appropriate nature can be procured for him through the employment service. So these two branches of Government—on the one hand, the employment service; and on the other hand, the unemployment-compensation service—are directly linked or connected. In effect, they are the two sides of the same coin. The late President Roosevelt recognized the situation. I now read what he said in his message transferring the United States Employment Service to the Social Security Board:

> I find it necessary and desirable to group in a Federal Security Agency those agencies of the Government the major purposes of which are to promote social and economic security, educational opportunity, and the health of the citizens of the Nation.
> The Social Security Board is placed under the Federal Security Agency, and at the same time the United States Employment Service is transferred from the Department of Labor and consolidated with the unemployment-compensation functions of the Social Security Board in order that their similar and related functions of social and economic security may be placed under a single head and their internal operations simplified and integrated.
> The unemployment-compensation functions of the Social Security Board and the employment service of the Department of Labor are concerned with the same problem, that of the employment, or the unemployment, of the individual worker.
> Therefore they deal necessarily with the same individual. These particular services to the particular individual also are bound up with the public-assistance activities of the Social Security Board. Not only will these similar functions be more efficiently and economically administered at the Federal level by such grouping and consolidation, but this transfer and merger also will be to the advantage of the administration of State social-security programs and result in considerable saving of money in the administrative costs of the governments of the 48 States as well as those of the United States. In addition to this saving of money there will be a considerable saving of time and energy not only on the part of administrative officials concerned with this program in both Federal and State Governments, but also on the part of employers and workers, permitting through the simplification of procedures a reduction in the number of reports required and the elimination of unnecessary duplication in contacts with workers and with employers.

So, Mr. President, I submit that in returning these facilities to the States under a condition by which the unemployment-compensation service now under the Social Security Board is to be matched by an employment service in the Department of Labor, we provide for a highly material difference between the condition which existed when these facilities were turned over to the Federal Government on January 1, 1942, and the condition under which they will be returned to the States at this time.

Therefore, I respectfully submit, first, that the transaction by which these facilities were turned over to the Federal Government on January 1, 1942, was a loan; second, the fact that it was a loan implies that the facilities shall be returned in substantially the same condition as that in which they were when they were so loaned; third, that the bill which is before us, namely, the House bill with the amendments proposed by the Senate committee, does not return those facilities in the same condition or in substantially the same condition, but imposes various restrictions and conditions which the governors of the States, by action in their conferences and individually, have indicated not to be wise or proper or consistent with the understanding had at the time when the transfer to the Federal Government took place; and, finally, Mr. President, I submit that the amendment which I now offer will properly cover the situation and will see to it that the services shall be returned to the States in the condition in which the services were turned over to the Federal Government on January 1, 1942, and also will recognize that in view of the fact that up to now the States have not been advised as to when they will get the services back, and thus have made no appropriations, they should be relieved until January 1, 1948, from the obligation of making appropriations under the Wagner-Peyser Act.

So, Mr. President, with your permission, I submit the amendment which I now send to the desk, and at the appropriate time I shall move its consideration by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I think the amendment which has just been offered by the Senator from Missouri is an illustration of the fact that it is not possible to write a satisfactory bill by means of offering offhand an amendment such as the one the Senator from Missouri has just submitted. The amendment omits some of the most important points which must be included in connection with a bill of the kind now being considered.

If the bill is amended as suggested by the Senator from Missouri some very important points will be entirely omitted. Of course, I have not had an opportunity to read his amendment carefully, and I may have failed to understand all that it contains; but I do not think it contains any provision for the transfer of the property or the facilities or the records to the States. Of course, that is the most important part of the transfer. If the services were returned to the States without giving them a number of employees and without giving them the records and the facilities and the whole organization, the result would be, as I tried to state earlier today, that the system would be in a most unsatisfactory condition. It would not be in a working condition. The organization which the States would thus receive would not be a working or functioning one. It would not be a working organization which would be handed over.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I invite attention to the fact that the amendment which I have proposed is to strike out only titles I and II and substitute other language. As I understand, the provision for the restoration of properties transferred by the States to the Federal Government is set forth in title III, and that provision would not be affected by the amendment.

Mr. TUNNELL. I do not so understand, but perhaps the Senator is correct. Is there any provision in the amendment, or in the bill as the Senator would have it amended, to take care of the subject of personnel?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, again I may say that that matter is covered in title III.

Mr. TUNNELL. And that is to be left unamended.

Mr. DONNELL. Yes. It may be, Mr. President, that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to title III, but at the present time the only amendment before the Senate is the amendment to strike out titles I and II.

Mr. TUNNELL. The Senator does not now know whether he is satisfied with title III?

Mr. DONNELL. No. I wish to give further consideration to it.

Mr. TUNNELL. Notwithstanding the present authority in the Wagner-Peyser Act, if a State refuses to operate an effective service the Secretary must cut off the funds to the State, close down the employment service, and thereby deprive the veteran of a means of being paid. Does the Senator's amendment have anything to do with the question of personnel?

Mr. DONNELL. My amendment has nothing to do with anything in the bill excepting titles I and II. It does not refer at all to personnel.

Mr. TUNNELL. Under the Wagner-Peyser Act, if the State services are not operated effectively and the funds are cut off, thereby depriving veterans of the means of receiving servicemen's readjustment allotments, and the payment of workers' unemployment insurance is affected, an inadequate service will be rendered. In other words, there are those who would attack the right of the Secretary to carry on the service for 3 months. They prefer that the Secretary should have his choice of either rendering service which would be a farce or rendering no service whatever. They object to the Secretary of Labor being given adequate power. Even though the Senator from Missouri has clearly shown what I contended a few minutes ago when the Senator from Ohio claimed that a great deal of additional power is proposed to be given to the Secretary, the Senator from Missouri has now shown that in the original act there was the power of regulation and that such power would continue to reside in the Secretary of Labor. However, the Senator from Missouri apparently objects to the Secretary having the authority to continue such service to men out of employment, even for only 3 months.

I cannot follow that sort of reasoning, Mr. President. If there is any necessity for this service, why should it not be continued? There is no doubt about the right of the Secretary to regulate. There is no doubt about his right to prescribe the conditions. If he now has the right to regulate and prescribe the conditions, why should he not have the right to correct the conditions for the benefit of those who are suffering and out of employment? That seems to be the particular object of attack, although the time is limited to 3 months, and the amount of money which could be spent throughout the whole United States, as stated by the Senator from Minnesota, would not be sufficient to support the service in the State of New York for 3 months.

I ask, Mr. President, What is the purpose in contending that no one should be authorized to continue the employment service? Do our friends object to such service? Do they not want unemployed veterans to receive employment? Why should it be said that the Secretary should not have the power to continue the service? The States are not furnishing the service. There is no question about the right of the Secretary to furnish it. If he cannot furnish it, who can furnish it? It is said by some, "Oh, no; the Secretary of Labor must not be allowed to perform this function for the benefit of the unemployed veterans. That would be a terrible thing. In that case the Federal Government would be taking over." Notwithstanding the fact that the Federal Government pays all the cost, it is contended by some that the Federal Government should not be given power to make sure that the service is properly regulated.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. Under the theory advanced by the opposition, mismanagement would be encouraged because there would be no means of restricting or controlling the operation, and it could be turned into a political football without any opportunity being afforded to cure the situation. Am I not correct in my statement?

Mr. TUNNELL. I think the Senator is correct, and I wish to follow his line of reasoning with the statement that the Federal Government would be furnishing all the money. It is said that the Federal Government should not exercise any regulation. The State government cannot regulate. It has no power, and does not furnish any money. The Federal Government furnishes the money, but it has been argued that the Federal Government should not have the right to regulate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The statement has been made that the Federal Government furnishes all the money. Originally, under the Wagner-Peyser Act, there was a matching arrangement.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I have gone over that matter.

Mr. TAFT. When the Social Security Act was enacted it provided that a tax of three-tenths of 1 percent would be levied against the employers in the States. That tax was paid by the employers in the State, and it was used for the purpose of defraying the costs of the unemployment-compensation offices. It is now used for the purpose of paying employment officers, and $700,000,000 still remains as the unused portion of the tax of three-tenths of 1 percent which was paid by the employers of the various States. So it is hardly fair to say that the States do not put up any of the money. The reason that the matching arrangement was abandoned was that the new tax of three-tenths of 1 percent was levied on the employers of each State, and it was used for the purpose of defraying the costs of the unemployment offices. Is that not a correct statement?

Mr. TUNNELL. I do not believe so. The Federal Government levied a tax which was in the nature of an excise tax. The Senator proposes that the Federal Government shall spend that money in the States without any supervision or regulation being exercised either on the part of the State or Federal Government.

Mr. TAFT. The tax was levied on the employers of the State for a particular purpose; namely, to help provide employment. I am not dealing with the question of what kind of restrictions we should apply.

Mr. TUNNELL. The Senator did deal with that matter in his speech.

Mr. TAFT. I am perfectly willing to have the Federal Government prescribe some general rules, but I am opposed to granting total power to issue rules with the right to change them every day, and control the State officers just as though they were Federal officials. Whenever in the past we have granted Federal aid to States, it is true that we prescribed some general regulations. But unless we leave to the States some degree of discretion—none is left in this bill—there is no purpose in having a State system. We might as well have a Federal system. I believe that the Senator's argument in behalf of a Federal system is not a good argument for imposing all kinds of restrictions on a State-aid system.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, I heard the Senator's argument when he made it on a previous occasion, and I have heard it just now. It is an argument that there should be no regulation. The Senator has now gone still further and has stated that inasmuch as the money has been collected from the citizens of the State, the Federal Government should not have any further control of it. That may be a good argument, but it is not the way I look at it. The Federal Government is expecting to pay 100 percent of the cost, and it has to take the money from some fund which it collects from citizens of the United States. Whether it is a tariff, an excise tax, or whatever it may be, it is something which comes from the people of the United States.

It is merely a quibble to say that it is taken for a particular purpose. It is not taken to be thrown away without supervision, and that is what would result from the method suggested, without regulation. In fact, so far as I can see, that is the whole ground of this great argument for the State-controlled organization.

I am willing to go along with that for the reason that I believe that a majority of Congress favor it. I do not believe it is better, and I do not think anyone can take the record of the testimony we heard and conclude that it is better. But since we are to do it, for heaven's sake let us have some regulation by somebody of these political employees. Let it be a regulation by the Federal Government, or give somebody in the State government the power. Do not turn it loose and lose all pretense and pretext of its being a legitimate transaction.

There are approximately 26,000 men affected. They are to be turned over to the States as employees. They have to qualify, under the bill, according to some fair regulation and prescription of methods. There must be something done by the State authorities to show that people are qualified to take the positions.

If we take the suggestion of some of those who have spoken in opposition to the bill this afternoon, and merely return the services to the States, we return them to the States without men, property, leases, or anything else. This has no political significance; those in a Democratic State are just as likely to want to take the employees as those in a Republican State, but it is argued that the State should have the power to say who are to work and who are not to work, regardless of qualifications. It should have the right to say what is to become of 26,000 employees. Are they to be thrown out of jobs without even a chance at their positions? Are they to be thrown on the mercy of the political organizations of the various States? If that is the purpose, let us say so.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the Senator mean that when the employment services are turned back to the States the employees will not even be under the Hatch Act? Would not the Hatch Act apply to them?

Mr. TUNNELL. I should say not. It will apply to them so long as they are Federal employees.

Mr. McMAHON. So long as there are some Federal funds?

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. That is what I wanted to make sure of.

Mr. TUNNELL. We do not know what amendments are to be offered or what they will provide. Thus far the funds would be those of the Federal Government. I think, though, that seems to be questioned. The Senator from Ohio seems to think they would be State funds. If these 26,000 persons are to be turned over to the tender mercy of those who have no interest in their continuation as employees at all, then this is a bigger proposition than some of us have been considering it.

The bill provides that they shall have an opportunity to qualify, and I am told that practically all these employees have come from the States and the civil-service registers. But that is not satisfactory; there must not be any regulation which would give these employees an opportunity for their jobs.

At a time when we are trying to prevent unemployment, we are saying to the Nation, "We have no interest in these 26,000 people any further. We are turning them over to the State political machines in the 48 States and 3 Territories. We are no longer going to consider them as an organization, Nation-wide, so as to furnish them insurance against unemployment in the way of jobs." We are saying, "We are going to change this into 51 different organizations, and we are going to turn those people loose so that those who employ may or may not employ them."

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. I wish to get back to the Federal tax question again, because the argument made against the bill seems to me to be fallacious. As I understand, the money is to come from a payroll tax levied on employers throughout the United States to maintain the system. Everyone knows that any tax levied on an employer is passed on in the cost of the business, just as an excise tax on a pack of cigarettes is passsed on to the consumer. So it is like any other excise tax, and it then becomes Federal money. It is not separated in the Treasury, but goes into the Federal Treasury for redistribution. How could we say that the excise tax must be paid in the State of North Carolina, or that any money must be spent where it is collected?

Mr. TUNNELL. I wish again to refer to the contention of the opposition. They do not object that under the present law regulations must or can be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor. What they want in the new bill is that there shall be no regulation. What does that indicate?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNELL. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I think the Senator misapprehends the amendment I have suggested. It simply goes back to the law as it was, which, as I pointed out, gives to the Department of Labor the right to prescribe the rules and regulations.

Mr. TUNNELL. I know what the Senator said about that. I have not seen the amendment except at a distance, and I presume he is correct. But I was talking about the general argument which has been made this afternoon in opposition to the bill. The opponents even object to the proposition in section 10:

> In carrying out the provisions of this act, no person shall be referred to a position (a) without due notice to the applicant, if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lock-out, or other labor dispute.

What is there unfair about telling a man before he takes a job whether he is getting into a fight, or what it is?

Then there is subdivision (b):

> If the wages, hours, or other conditions of the work offered are substantally less favorable to the individual than those prevailing for similar work in the locality, except upon request of the applicant.

Should a person be denied the benefits of employment under the bill because he refuses to take a job which is less favorable to him than other work prevailing in the neighborhood? Is there anything wrong with that? I cannot see anything wrong. There is nothing in the argument, so far as I can see, that in this bill there is an attempt to put something over on employers, the general public, or the employees.

Subdivision (c) provides:

If as determined by the State agency the position is one which does not utilize the person's highest skill, until and unless a reasonable effort has been made to place him in a position that does utilize his highest skill.

Oh, it is said, who is to determine that? There are many laws in the country about which it might be said, who is to enforce them? Here is something with which the Secretary of Labor has something to do. The Federal Government has something to do with it yet. But the opponents of the bill want to compel a person to take a job as street cleaner when perhaps he is a chemist. They want to give him the most menial of positions and say, "You have been offered a job. You should have taken it. You did not take it, and you have not any argument. You have no rights under this bill."

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, going back to the first point, it is provided in subdivision (a):

Without due notice to the applicant, if the position offered is vacant due directly to a strike, lock-out, or other labor dispute.

There are numerous cases in my State, until the State director got hold of the matter and stopped it, where, for instance, a veteran would apply for employment and would be referred to a plant in which a strike had been declared. When he would fail to go to work he was automatically cut off from the provisions of unemployment compensation granted to him as a veteran.

Mr. TUNNELL. In other words, the person unemployed, because of the action of the State organization, would be put in the position of being a strikebreaker.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes.

Mr. TUNNELL. Which, at least, is uncomfortable—maybe.

We find this language in paragraph (c):

As determined by the State agency, the position is one which does not utilize the person's highest skill.

The Nation is entitled to have the unemployed person placed where his skill is highest. Not only is the individual entitled to that but the State and the Nation are entitled to it. This language simply puts into written law the proposition of being fair to the unemployed. Why all this hubbub in opposition to it? Who is going to be injured by treating the unemployed fairly? I have not heard any argument which would show why that should not be done. All I have heard is that such language is not in the old law, or perhaps it is giving too much power to someone. Where is the power that it gives anyone if it gives only justice to the poor man who is trying to support his family, who perhaps has been in the service of and has done everything he could for his country, who perhaps has come home wounded and less capable than he was when he went away?

Now, when a bill comes before Congress in which an attempt is made to try to make it possible that such an individual shall get employment, we hear all sorts of technical objections and statements as to somebody being given too much power. Someone ought to have some power to help that man as a good citizen to be placed where he can use his talents and use them to the best advantage.

I have heard a number of objections made this afternoon. Perhaps some of them may be good, but I have not found many which I thought were good aside from what I have just stated. It was suggested by one Senator that it might be well simply to write one line, as follows:

The services are turned back to the States.

In that event, Mr. President, who is going to look after the unemployed? Who is going to look after the various rights to which they are entitled, and to see that the duty which the American people owe to the returned veterans is fulfilled?

I hope that the bill will not be defeated by reason of a spirit of indifference. I hope that no legal technicality will be permitted to interfere with the rights of these returning boys. I hope that no craving for patronage will be permitted to become the dominating factor in the determination of their rights. Let us be fair to the boys who are unemployed. Let us be fair to America. Let us get employment started. Let us not be carried away by imaginary objections which are raised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FULBRIGHT in the chair). The Clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after the word "than", it is proposed to strike out "June 30, 1946", and insert "December 31, 1946."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, is it the purpose of the Senator in charge of the bill to conclude discussion of it and to have a vote on it this evening?

Mr. TUNNELL. I have no desire to stay here until we are all exhausted. I am perfectly willing to follow the suggestion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. Perhaps I had better withhold a suggestion. I understand the majority leader is on his way to the Senate floor. I cannot think of any better way of utilizing the time than for the Senator from Delaware to continue his discussion of the bill.

Mr. TUNNELL. I always recognize a leader, and I do not always stop to inquire who he is.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. May I inquire whether the amendment I offered, which would strike out all of titles I and II and substitute certain language, will be voted upon first, before the committee amendments incorporated in titles I and II?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments will take precedence over the Senator's amendment or any other amendments offered. The Chair will say to the Senator from Missouri that his amendment will be voted on after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. DONNELL. I understand that my amendment will be printed without formal request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has already been ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, unless some Senator desires to continue the discussion, I see no reason why the Senate should not recess.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, while we are waiting for the majority leader, in order to determine what is to be done after he returns, I may say that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has favorably reported some nominations which are on the Executive Calendar. Why can we not consider the Executive Calendar while we are waiting?

(Mr. BARKLEY entered the Chamber.)

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I see the majority leader has come to the floor now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Delaware the present status of the bill that is pending? I have been necessarily engaged elsewhere.

Mr. TUNNELL. I will say to the majority leader that I think there is no probability of getting through tonight in any reasonable time, and I for one would be glad to have the Senate recess at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Has any suggestion or proposal been made with reference to fixing any time for a vote or limitation of debate?

Mr. TUNNELL. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the Senator prefer to have the consideration of the bill go over until tomorrow?

Mr. TUNNELL. Yes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6056) making appropriations for the Department of State, Justice, Commerce, and the Judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. RABAUT, Mr. HARE, Mr. GARY, Mr. STEFAN, and Mr. JONES were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. THOMAS of Texas, Mr. COFFEE, Mr. D'ALESANDRO, Mr. PLUMLEY, Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, and Mr. PLOESER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FULBRIGHT in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. CHAVEZ, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

SELECTIVE SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the selective service.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the selective service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE NAVY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James L. Kauffman, to be vice admiral in the Navy, for temporary service, to rank from April 3, 1945.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the nominations on the executive calendar.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I notice on looking at the executive calendar that there are a great many nominations in the Selective Service. We do not know from what States they come. Would it not be possible to have the name of the State placed opposite the name of each nominee? On page 3 we find the name William Green de Rosset. He is a records analyst, Selective Service, national headquarters. From what State does he come?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not certain that in the nomination papers sent to the Senate the address or home State of the appointee is given, but they are not included in the executive calendar.

Mr. McMAHON. I assume that it is not simply a formality to send these nominations to the Senate. For all I know, it is not so. I would be very much surprised if it were so. De Rosset, Flagg, Gallagher, and Holmes might be from my State, and there is no way of my knowing it.

Mr. BARKLEY. That ought not to disqualify them.

Mr. McMAHON. No; it really would add to their qualifications. That is why I should like to see the State designation of the nominee. If it were the fact that they were from my State, I should like to see it emblazoned on the calendar for all the world to know.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would enhance their ability to serve their country with distinction.

Mr. McMAHON. That is why I want it written down.

Mr. BARKLEY. And on the assumption that they do come from Connecticut I hope the Senator will not interfere with their confirmations.

Mr. McMAHON. I am not suggesting that I wish to interfere. I suggest that in the future it would be a good idea that the States from which they come were placed opposite the names of the appointees.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it would be advisable hereafter for the nomination papers to give the addresses of the appointees. We are all interested to know where the nominees come from, especially if they come from our bailiwick.

Mr. McMAHON. That is correct. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the President be immediately notified of all nominations this day confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be so notified.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed consideration of legislative business.

AMENDMENT TO THE NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is a very important bill on the calendar, Senate bill 2341, Calendar No. 1542, which ought to be acted upon, because the provision it deals with expires on June 30. I will read the report, which is very brief. It is as follows:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2341) relating to the insurance of existing construction under the National Housing Act, as amended, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill as reported provides for preserving the authority of the Federal Housing Administration to insure mortgages on existing construction which would otherwise expire and terminate on July 1, 1946, and removes the limitation which would otherwise prevent the insurance of such mortgages if the aggregate amount thereof should equal or exceed 35 percent of the total amount of insured mortgages.

The committee believes that the continued authority of the Federal Housing Administration to insure mortgages on old or existing houses as well as on new construction is important and necessary to the housing of those in need and to the success of the entire housing program.

The provisions of this bill are identical with those of section 308 of the General Housing Act of 1946 (S. 1592), which was passed by the Senate on April 15, 1946, but which may not be acted upon by the House of Representatives in time to prevent the expiration of the authority of the Federal Housing Administration on July 1, 1946.

For this reason, prompt action on the bill as reported is believed by the committee to be desirable.

In other words, we did this in the general housing bill which has not yet received consideration by the House. In order to preclude the possibility of the expiration of this provision, the Senate committee has reported this bill, which is identical with part of the original bill now pending in the House.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to ask the able majority leader if the report of the committee was unanimous.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it was. I do not recall any opposition to it. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] is a member of the committee.

Mr. TAFT. The report was unanimous. It is important that the FHA should insure existing houses, just as much as new houses. A man may be able to build a new house if he can sell his old house to someone who can finance it. The power of the FHA originally extended only to new houses. Then it was extended to old houses, but the power expires on a given date, which is July 30. That is the necessity for this bill. So if we wish to have the FHA continue to insure old houses and remove the percentage limitation, which is wholly unnecessary, it is essential to pass this bill by the 30th of June.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the House had acted upon Senate bill 1592, which we passed a month or so ago, this legislation would not be necessary, because it is included in that bill. But in view of the doubt about final action in the House, this bill is necessary, and I hope it will not be objected to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I have made such inquiries as I could among the minority members as to their attitude toward the bill, and I can report that I find no opposition to its passage.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 2341) to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered, to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 203 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out the second and third provisions and by striking out the colon at the end of the first proviso and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 25, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 24, 1946

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite God, the creator of life, in exultation, we praise Thee for Thy benevolent purpose. In this spirit we rejoice in Thy overruling providence. Thou whose might holds the planets in their place, whose tenderness guides the sparrow in its flight and marks its fall, help us to discern Thy footsteps in the events of human life. Be Thou the refuge from whatever may threaten us, and deliver us from faint-heartedness. Where there is division, we ask for unity; where there is confusion, we ask for serenity; and for discord, we ask for harmony. O may divergent paths lead to a larger way of widening vision and distinctive service. Help us to be patient, faithful, and trustful, believing that all things work together for good to them that love Thee. In the name of Jesus the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, June 21, 1946, was read and approved.

UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND REHABILITATION ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a letter from the President of the United States to the Speaker of the House, with an enclosure, which I think should be read for the information of the House. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the letter and the enclosure.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter from the President and the enclosed memorandum.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 21, 1946.

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE:

In accordance with the recommendation in paragraph B of Public Law 262, Seventy-ninth Congress, I have, through appropriate channels, taken steps to advise countries receiving UNRRA assistance of the desire of the United States Government that the admission to those countries of properly accredited members of the American press and radio be facilitated in order that they might be permitted to report without censorship on the utilization and distribution of UNRRA supplies and services.

I am advised that satisfactory arrangements are in effect to permit American press and radio representatives to report without censorship on the UNRRA programs in all UNRRA receiving countries except the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. There is attached a translation of a communication dated March 12, 1946, to the Secretary of State from the chargé d'affaires of the U. S. S. R. with reference to the situation in that country, which, in effect, states that the censorship rules in force for all correspondents in the Soviet Union will be applied to correspondents desiring to report on the utilization and distribution of UNRRA supplies.

I am also advised that accredited representatives of UNRRA have been given necessary facilities for observing and reporting on the distribution of UNRRA supplies in all receiving countries including Ukrainian and Byelorussia Soviet Socialist Republics, and have submitted extensive and detailed reports.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

[Translation]

The chargé d'affaires of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics presents his compliments to the Secretary of State, and with reference to the note of the Acting Secretary of State of January 8, 1946, has the honor to communicate the following:

Inasmuch as special commissions of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration will be sent to the Ukrainian S. S. R. and the Byelorussian S. S. R., American official circles and the public will have the possibility of receiving information of interest to them concerning the utilization and distribution of the supplies and services of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration through these commissions.

With reference to the request of the State Department for granting representatives of the American press and radio the possibility for full and free execution of their functions in accordance with the desire expressed by the Congress of the United States, representatives of the American press and radio on the territories of the Ukrainian S. S. R. and the Byelorussian S. S. R. should be guided by the rules in effect on all the territory of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and for that reason the establishment of any special rules regulating the activities of representatives of the American press and radio on the territories of the Ukrainian S. S. R. and the Byelorussian S. S. R. is not contemplated.

EMBASSY OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS.
WASHINGTON, March 12, 1946.

PROTECTION OF TRADE-MARKS

Mr. LANHAM submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 1654) to provide for the registration and protection of trade-marks used in commerce, to carry out the provisions of certain international conventions, and for other purposes.

REMODELING AND REDECORATING HOUSE CHAMBER

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the Members that the special committee appointed by the Speaker with reference to the remodeling and redecorating of the House Chamber is today filing its report. The plans are on display in the office of the Architect of the Capitol and will be there for 2 weeks. Any Member who wishes to see these plans may do so. It will be appreciated if any Member who so desires will offer any criticism or comment that may be helpful.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman contemplate that this repair work will be done within the course of the next 2 years or 4 years?

Mr. LANHAM. The work certainly cannot be done at present and will not be done until the situation is better with reference to labor and material. No contractor at present would enter into a contract to do the work. But there is a great deal of preliminary work to be done in the preparation of the plans.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

AMENDING EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 675, Rept. No. 2323), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (R. R. 6477) to amend section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and section 3 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act, as amended, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

THE HOUSING SITUATION

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to protest about the administration of the housing program in this country. The veterans are unable to get housing and yet I read in one of the Washington papers where a priority was granted for an $800,000 construction job here which would include enough material for 800 units for veterans. I also read in the paper here, Mr. Speaker, that liquor stores, cabarets, and night clubs, and bowling alleys, and many other unnecessary and nonessential projects are given priorities. Yet De Ridder, La., is unable to get a priority to build classrooms for the Sunday school of a Baptist church in my district.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LARCADE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, to include in each instance a copy of an address by Mr. Frank A. Godchaux, chairman, Louisiana State Rice Milling Co.

Mr. WASIELEWSKI asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances in the RECORD and to include an editorial in each.

Brown, chief engineer of the Missouri State Highway Department, together with a resolution passed by the Mississippi Valley Conference of State Highway Officials at their annual meeting in Chicago on March 16, 1946.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the conclusion of special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 30 minutes tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

REFERENCE OF BILLS

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from further consideration of the bill (S. 1564) authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Shadrick Ponca, the bill (S. 1566) authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Wilma Brandon Irving, and S. 1695, authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to Louis Runs Above, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

TOLLS ON SAN FRANCISCO-OAKLAND BAY BRIDGE

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 3565, an act to authorize the charging of tolls for the passage or transit of Government traffic over the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the amendments?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, there is a provision affecting certain military and naval and some other Government personnel. It relates to the Oakland-San Francisco Bay Bridge. This adds the Coast Guard along with the military and naval personnel. It places them on a parity with the military and naval personnel.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a statement, and in the other a letter.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a newspaper article and in the other some remarks made by the gentleman on the flour situation.

Mr. WILSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include copies of a radio broadcast made over two radio stations.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include editorial comment in tribute to a great philanthropist, Mr. Henry C. Lytton, of Chicago, who on July 13 will be 100 years old.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an address by General Devers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GROSS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

[Mr. LANDIS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXPORT OF AUTOMOBILES

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, the other week when I was home I visited with a friend of mine who has served with the marines for 2 years in the Pacific. This boy is now farming. He could not even secure a second-hand automobile, nor could his wife secure an ordinary ice box. When I see this picture of United States automobiles going to South America, which shows eight brand-new cars being loaded at one time to go down to Peru and also when I see the notation, "Freighter Santa Olivia makes ready to sail from New York to South America with a cargo of automobiles, trucks, tires, and refrigerators," I wonder if it is not about time to pay some attention to this marine and his wife sitting on that farm back there—an American citizen who has fought for his country—rather than to be too kindly disposed toward foreigners.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GRIFFITHS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a letter from the mayor of Zanesville, Ohio, to Wilson Wyatt, Housing Administrator.

Mr. McMILLEN of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Mattoon (Ill.) Daily Journal Gazette of June 7, 1946.

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two letters from constituents.

Mr. MASON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the significance of the Nebraska election and to include therein an editorial from the Omaha World-Herald.

Mr. SHORT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement recently issued by a former colleague.

Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include the weekly bulletin of the Leather and Shoe News, captioned "Where do we go from here?"

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WIGGLESWORTH addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ELLIS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

THE BRITISH LOAN

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHWABE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a week ago yesterday in the Sunday edition of the New York Times appeared an advertisement by a British manufacturer of a popular-make automobile. Various body styles were offered for immediate delivery f. o. b. New York. Four-door sedans were priced at $1,581.42. Another was designed to sell for $1,350, and so on.

Now we are glad to see our friendly competitor across the Atlantic prosper, and we are even glad to purchase some of their products, including automobiles, but it does surprise us to learn that while we are unable to get our own factories producing cars for domestic consumption, England is able to make them and ship them for sale abroad. All this they are doing without the benefit of a $4,000,000,000 loan.

What surprises are in store for us should this loan be consummated?

Authoritative word also comes that Czechoslovakia, another country whose application for a loan is pending, is now prepared to export cars to this country. By means of so-called loans which really amount to gifts, we are financing our competitors to put us out of business in the postwar era.

A MEMO FOR PEOPLE WITH SHORT MEMORIES

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, if I were to give a title to these remarks, I would call them a memo for people with short memories. I refer especially to people in Congress and in the White House who at the time of the railroad and coal strikes spoke courageously, acted dramatically, and voted patriotically, but who now appear to have entered into a pact by common consent to say nothing, do nothing, remember nothing, and anticipate nothing, insofar as strike legislation is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, regardless of whether it is a case of short memories or political expediency which has brought about this stalemate in labor legislation, I think the time is now abundantly here when this House should take action on the Truman emergency labor legislation, which the President personally requested at a joint session of Congress, which the House promptly passed, which the Senate subsequently amended and passed, and which the newspaper people now tell us is to be permitted to die on the Speaker's desk without even the courtesy or distinction of being officially killed or publicly buried.

I urge all Members of Congress who recognize with me that we are just precisely where we were before the railroad and coal strikes took place to join in an effort now to get action on the Truman labor proposal. Should the House fail to act on this legislation which is now appartly being shelved by high authority and should the Maritime Union then call its strike on September 30, the bitter words of "too little and too late" will have an ugly new significance for all of us.

Please keep this in mind: The President came to Congress on May 25 to ask for emergency strike legislation. The House acted favorably on May 25. The Senate acted favorably, with amendments on May 31. The Senate asked for a conference on June 3. Up to this minute the House has failed to join in a conference, no conferees have been appointed, and the legislation is still on the Speaker's desk. Mr. Speaker, it is time for somebody to take action. We must not permit this important matter to die from the disease of political expediency.

THE PROPHET OF SCARCITY

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, Saturday afternoon I had occasion to go into Brentano's book store, and I saw there, and bought a copy of a comparatively new book by Mr. Chester Bowles, called Tomorrow Without Fear.

I am glad to give the book this much advertising, and to say that it is published by Simon and Shuster, and that the price is $1. I have no doubt that this is the ceiling price.

I rise to call to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the appropriateness of the title. No man in the United States has caused so many citizens to go without the things they might have had, than has Mr. Bowles, with his bright young men in the OPA. As Mr. Churchill would have put it, "Never have so many been confused by so few."

Instead of putting the power of the Government back of production, in the face of evidences of what this country can do, when given a chance, and as we saw it in the war, Mr. Bowles and the OPA have constantly emphasized scarcity, handicapped production, and caused the people to go without.

I can only add that if this estimable gentleman is actually going to resign, as the papers announce, so that production may be released, and inflation may be fought, instead of continuing his hysterical outbursts over the radio and in the papers, and trying to run for office, any office, then I think there may be some hope of the people looking forward to a tomorrow with less fear than now, if not entirely without fear.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. LUCE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include several newspaper editorials on atomic legislation and also a resolution passed by the American-Hungarian Congress last week.

Mr. ARNOLD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article on health.

Mr. McKENZIE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject Sound Economics Like Charity Should Begin at Home.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered I may be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered today I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO SECOND WAR POWERS ACT, 1942

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 5716, to amend the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended, with Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SUMNERS of Texas, HOBBS, and HANCOCK.

UNITY OF NATIONS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, when a nation proposes to the world that it is ready to lay in the scales for peace its supremacy in a great field of military weapons if only all the nations of the world will agree to international control within those nations to make sure nobody can possess such weapons, it becomes hard indeed to understand how another nation can criticize such proposal on the ground that the nation making it is trying to dominate the world. The only way I can understand the Russian comments against the American proposals for control of atomic weapons is that they got mixed up and read their own proposals instead of ours, and were talking about them when they were making their remarks. For the Russian proposal would leave each nation still completely independent of any sort of real control; it would leave the whole matter to the promises of nations; it would do nothing to allay the suspicion and distrust that now plagues the world and which could be dispelled under the proposal of the United States.

America would be foolish indeed to destroy her bombs or share her knowledge unless and until in so doing she can bring other nations into an effective international control strong enough, complete enough, so that our people can be assured that no nation, no agency in the world, except only the international authority can possess or produce atomic weapons at all.

America's offer is bona fide, it is statesmanlike, it is the one road to certain peace.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. DOUGLAS of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial on the OPA and an article.

Mr. RABAUT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. ROWAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the daily Chicago Sun.

Mr. PITTENGER (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include excerpts and newspaper articles in each.

CRITICS OF OPA PLEASE TAKE HEED

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, production is at a record high. Therefore, charges that ceilings cripple industry cannot be substantiated. The zero hour for OPA is approaching. Its fight for existence is recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. There will be found listed: its champions, and its enemies. The determination of the friends of the agency is to continue OPA until the country's economy is on an even keel. No one has ever demanded that it should become a permanent organization, and that the free enterprise system should be abandoned. OPA is administered by human beings and human beings are subject to error, and the agency has made many errors.

NATIONAL PRODUCTION

The measurement, as to the effects of OPA, is national production and can best be ascertained from a study of statistics. In the first quarter of 1946, the gross national production was at the rate of $183,000,000,000 per annum. Please note that during that period there were some upsets between labor and capital. This did not equal the peak period of the second quarter in 1945, when the rate during the war was $206,000,000,000. But the production of the first quarter of 1946 was by far the largest in the peacetime history. It topped the banner year of 1941 by over 50 percent when the total was $120,000,000,000. It was twice as great as 1939, when the total was $89,000,000,000. And the often referred to prosperity of 1929 with its production figure of $99,000,000,000, it almost doubled. The answer is price control has had no crippling effects, and should be retained until supplies more fittingly meet the demand.

OPA

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, during the past 4 years, OPA and its food subsidies have cost the American people at least $6,207,168,000 in direct Government expenditures. This would be enough $20 bills to reach from coast to coast 10 times. It also means an average of $171 added to the bill of each income taxpayer.

This figure includes only direct expenditures from the United States Treasury. It does not include indirect expenditures such as interest or cost of administering subsidies.

Nor does it include the billions of dollars paid by consumers for inferior quality merchandise at ceiling prices, black-market overcharges, and cost of higher-priced alternatives after standard brands had been driven off the market.

The total includes:

Total losses and direct subsidies paid by Reconstruction Finance Corporation	$3,369,643,000
Losses on price-support programs and subsidies paid by the Commodity Credit Corporation	2,186,950,000
Administrative expenditures by the Office of Price Administration	650,575,884
Total	6,207,168,884

This total does not include expenditures for administration of subsidies by the following agencies: Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Metals Reserve Company, Defense Supplies Corporation, Rubber Reserve Company, Foreign Economic Administration, United States Commercial Company, and War Production Board, nor the cost of operating the Office of Economic Stabilization.

To this total also should be added the interest that has been, and will be, paid by the Government in the future for this money, most of which figures into the national debt.

HOUR OF MEETING MONDAY, JULY FIRST

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House convenes next Monday it convene to meet at 11:30 a. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6496) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SHEPPARD, THOMAS of Texas, COFFEE, D'ALESANDRO, PLUMLEY, JOHNSON of Indiana, and PLOESER.

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND THE JUDICIARY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1947

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6056) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and the Judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. RABAUT, HARE, GARY, STEFAN, and JONES.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DAVIS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Dr. Marshall Wingfield.

Mr. MUNDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper editorial.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, the OPA has been hit and hit hard and has not been cooperated with one iota by the majority of this House. The same is true of the Senate. I heard the gentleman just now speak of the cost of subsidies. How much does the tariff cost the American taxpayers? And is not the tariff a subsidy?

COMMUNISIM AND THE ATOMIC BOMB

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with what the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] said a while ago, I desire to say that so far as I am concerned I am in favo. of leaving the secrets of the atomic bomb in the hands of the military leaders of this Government for at least 5 years.

We know that communisim throughout the world is dedicated to the overthrow of this Government. We know its object is world revolution.

While we have the power to control the atomic bomb, while we have the bombs already made and the planes prepared to handle them, while we are sitting on top of the world and in a position to command peace, let us stay where we are and not throw that chance away and encourage Communists to continue their program of revolution throughout the world.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE CEREMONIES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from a commission:

JUNE 21, 1946.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Due to the illness of Mrs. Fernandez, which has confined her to the hospital as a result of an emergency operation this week, I am compelled to tender my resignation from the Commission selected to attend the Philippine independence ceremonies at Manila, July 4.

I sincerely appreciate the honor conferred on me by this appointment and regret that these circumstances make it impossible for me to go, much as I would like to do so.

Sincerely yours,

A. M. FERNANDEZ.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 414, Seventy-ninth Congress, the Chair appoints as a member of the Commission to represent the United States at the ceremonies to be held at Manila on July 4, 1946, in celebration of the independence of the Philippines, to fill the existing vacancy thereon, the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

ATOMIC BOMB TEST

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I desire the RECORD to show that 10 Members of the House are away at the present time on official business in connection with the atomic bomb test. They are the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NORRELL], the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES], the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON], the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. GILLESPIE], the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], and the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD].

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. MCMILLAN], chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ALLEY DWELLING ACT

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill, S. 2218, to amend the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934, as amended, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does this bill do?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. It extends the law for 1 year, to July 1, 1947.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the reason for the extension?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. The purpose of the bill is to move up this date to July 1, 1947, so that it will not be unlawful for people to live in alleys in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is because of the congestion that exists in the District at the present time?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. That is right.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the resolution provide for any increase in rent in the District?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. No. That is left to the discretion of the Administrator.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how many people in the District reside in alleys?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. I do not know the exact number.

Mr. RICH. How many people in the District want to live in alleys?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. I do not know of any who would like to live there.

Mr. RICH. I think the quicker we get the people out of the alleys in the District, the better off they will be.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. RICH. We hope that we do not have to extend this any further than this 1 year because that is just 1 year too long.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. May I say to the gentleman that we are trying to get the slum clearance bill through which I believe would relieve the situation as soon as they can get the material and labor.

Mr. RICH. I appreciate that that has held things up, but the quicker we get the people out of the alleys in the District the better it will be. We ought to make the District of Columbia a place where all the people have good homes and if there is any opportunity to do that, it ought to be done. It ought to be done right here in the District first.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 (b) of the act known as the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"(b) On and after July 1, 1947, it shall be unlawful to use or occupy any alley building or structure as a dwelling in the District of Columbia."

SEC. 2. That section 6 of such act, as amended, be further amended by striking "1946" and inserting in lieu thereof "1947."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENDING DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA EMERGENCY RENT ACT

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2219) to extend for the period of 1 year the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, approved December 2, 1941, as amended, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. The purpose of this bill is to extend the Rent Control Act for the District of Columbia and try to keep rents under control for another year.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is just for 1 more year?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Yes; the committee is unanimous in reporting the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate rents in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved December 2, 1941, as amended, is further amended by striking out in section 1 (b) thereof the figure "1946" and inserting in lieu thereof "1947."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 6506) was laid on the table.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, that concludes the business from the District of Columbia Committee for today.

COLLECTION AND PUBLICATION OF STATISTICAL INFORMATION

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ALLEN] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5857), to provide for the collection and publication of statistical information by the Bureau of the Census.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5857, with Mr. DAVIS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on June 6, the first section of the bill had been read and is now open to amendment.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FULTON: On page 1, line 8, strike out the year "1947" and insert in lieu thereof "1946", and also on page 1, line 8, strike out the word "fifth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "second."

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the Members this is simply changing the bill back to the way the manufactures census was handled from the year 1920 through the year 1939. During that period of time the Government every 2 years took a census of manufactures for the benefit of business. Beginning after that year, this census was taken, but it was not made public because of security purposes. Now the war is over and we are in the reconversion period. We come up to the question of taking a census for business, to help business out. I say we should do just as we did from 1920 to 1939 and not follow the committee bill. My position is embodied in the minority report of the committee. If we follow the committee bill we will have a census of manufactures only every 5 years. As you know, the census is running behind, so that unless we come up with these figures every 2 years we will not have figures that are worth while.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. The gentleman's amendment saves quite a little money, does it not?

Mr. FULTON. It will be just the same cost as previously, because we are going to continue the practice they followed before the war and require them to come up with the figures every 2 years.

Mr. PITTENGER. What does the committee bill require?

Mr. FULTON. The committee bill would require them to come up with the figures every 5 years. We who have taken statistics and studied the subject a little bit know that you just do not make figures as you need them for a report, but you come up with a figure and have a cut-off point. You study the figure just the same but come up on a cut-off point every 2 years, to make the cut-off worth while to business.

I have had many comments made to me as a member of the Committee on the Census, that by the time the figures are received after the time the changes and the migrations have taken place and come and gone for years, the figures are of no use.

I yield to my good colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from Minnesota asked the question, whether your amendment would make it more economical. I would like to hear your answer on that because I am positive it is going to cost a whole lot more money to take these censuses every 2 years. I personally cannot see what good it is going to do. We have had so many censuses taken in the last 10 or 15 years on practically everything under the sun. It is about time to give the business people of this country a rest. They are sick and tired of making out all these reports.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. I am interested in having the question answered also, but, of course, the gentleman has not gotten around to it.

Mr. FULTON. That is correct. I was saying that the method of taking the census would not be materially altered but the time of coming up with the figures was going to be altered because we are going to have them give us the figures every 2 years as a cut-off point rather than every 5 years, as this bill proposes. May I say to my good colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], of the Republican delegation of Pennsylvania, that it is not increasing the cost of taking the census because we have done it right straight through from 1920 and we have all felt it has been necessary.

Mr. RICH. I would like you to explain how you are going to get any economy by taking the census every 2 years rather than taking it every 5 years. It is against my business judgment. That is the reason I am not in sympathy with your amendment.

Mr. FULTON. I will be glad to answer the gentleman further but I must first yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I am curious to know just who wants these censuses.

Mr. FULTON. I shall be very glad to answer that. The Department of Commerce of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania wants these censuses and is very anxious to have them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That is a Government agency. I wonder what private interests are concerned about these censuses.

Mr. FULTON. I might say to you that the Department of Commerce of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is in very close touch with the industries of Pennsylvania. They have advised me that our Pennsylvania industries want this in order that they may be more quickly advised as to what business developments are because if you come up with figures beginning in 1947 instead of 1946, the business figures for this reconversion period will not be available for business until about the year 1953. And what good are figures for the year 1946 going to be to a businessman in the year 1953?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I might be more or less in sympathy with your proposition there, but these censuses cost us so much more and more all the time just as the various other governmental agencies are spending more and more. I cannot see that this is really helping business a great deal.

Mr. FULTON. If you checked in your own home State and found through the Census Office there, as I did in my home town of Pittsburgh, that businessmen use these censuses quite a bit. Along that line, if you will give me the opportunity, I would like to read three statements by outstanding organizations and people as authority on why a 2-year census is necessary.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I was at one time a member of the Census Committee and had occasion to make something of a study of this problem. I came to the conclusion then that these censuses were more of a political nature and more for political purposes, really, than for industrial purposes.

Mr. FULTON. Well, I am a new Member of Congress and I still think the Government is run for the purposes for which it is set up, and that the bureaus perform functions for which they are established. Might I ask the gentleman this question: During the time you were on the Census Committee, did you vote for these manufacturers' censuses every 2 years from 1920 to 1939?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I did not if there was any more cost attached to it.

Mr. FULTON. There was certainly a cost, so you therefore disagreed with the majority of your own committee.

Here is a letter to me dated January 15, 1946, from Mr. Floyd Chalfant, secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Department of Commerce. He says:

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Harrisburg, January 15, 1946.

Hon. JAMES G. FULTON,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN FULTON: An expansion of employment in manufacturing and processing industries is of vital importance to this State.

A knowledge of current trends in this respect is essential for sound promotion of such development. We in the department of commerce depend upon the Bureau of the Census for information that reveals the condition and trend in different areas of the Nation.

In H. R 4781, introduced by Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana on November 23, 1945, provision is made for such a census for 1947 and thereafter at 5-year intervals.

This is not adequate to our needs, and we urge that you secure amendment of this bill, to provide that a census of manufactures be taken in 1946, to cover 1945 operations, and that provision be made to repeat this census at 2-year intervals.

Your aggressive support of this revision will be much appreciated.

Sincerely yours.

That is the position of the department of commerce of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, which has a Republican administration, and is a statement by the present administration on behalf of 10,000,000 people.

Let me tell you what Dr. Catherwood, of the department of commerce of New York, said in his statement:

Nothing but a comprehensive census of manufactures taken every 2 years can produce the results which we (in New York) deem essential.

Not only have these departments of commerce of the two major business States of the Union seen fit to back the position taken by this amendment, but the pamphlet Business Action for June 24, 1946, has a letter from the National Chamber of Commerce urging that the census of manufactures be continued, as it looks as if they might be discontinued at present.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, repeating, in the pamphlet Business Action to which I have just referred, there is a letter from the National Chamber urging restoration by the Senate of the appropriation for the census of manufactures and business:

These censuses are the only complete source of information on production and distribution. They contain detail obtainable from no other source for specific kinds of industry and for specific geographic areas.

The entire business community—manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers—depends on information derived from these censuses in planning production and marketing.

Changes which have taken place since the latest censuses of manufactures and business, which covered the year 1939, make it imperative that the information be brought up to date to serve business needs in this particularly crucial period.

Wartime postponement of the census was understandable, but it is difficult to understand present denial of informational tools on which business has long relied, particularly at a time when full utilization of business resources is so vital to the national economy.

We hope most sincerely that the funds requested for the census of manufactures and the census of business will be restored.

May I sum up my position as follows:

Great changes have been wrought in the geographical location of our manufacturing industries during the war. Still greater changes impend as a result of technological developments, new industries based thereon, and industry's plans to push our national income to levels higher than those ever attained before. Unusual importance, therefore, attaches to the statistical evidence of the number, location, character, employment, and production of our manufacturing industries. At no time in the past has it been so important to have comprehensive information promptly compiled and promptly published on a subject so vital to the future of this country.

It is therefore submitted:

First. That a complete census of manufactures comparable to those taken biennially from 1919 to 1939 should be taken immediately and published promptly.

Second. That for perhaps the next 10 years we shall continue to require comprehensive information of this sort collected and published at no less than biennial intervals.

Third. The greatest importance attaches to information concerning manufacture. Other economic activities—trade, construction, mining, and the service industries—are directly affected by the location of manufacturing establishments and the volume of manufacturing employment and pay rolls. Manufacturing is of primary interest. Censuses of other business activity are of a secondary order of importance in planning for the economic development and the expansion of employment opportunities. Other admittedly sound interests should not be allowed to prevent the taking of a comprehensive biennial census of manufactures as soon as possible.

Fourth. Nothing short of a complete, comprehensive census will satisfy our needs for statistics which will show the geographical migration of industry and the relative rates of growth of specific industries in different parts of the United States. This is of the greatest importance to the individual States in their preparation of plans for the economic development of their own resources. Sampling techniques applied to industry will produce valid results for only a limited number of statistical ratios and averages and these are of only minor importance in the programs for economic development. Nothing but a comprehensive census of manufactures taken every 2 years can produce the results deemed essential by the Department of Commerce of two of the major industrial States of the country, the State of New York and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

I am, therefore, advocating this and stating that, if we go back as we have previously, to the way we took it between 1920 and 1939, we will vote for these amendments. These are amendments that put into effect what the committee had stated previously over a period of 20 years to be necessary for the development of our country for manufacturing.

I hope that my friends and all people in the manufacturing States will help us get this amendment through as the figures for business are not worth while taking unless they are current figures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania presented his amendment to the committee—rather it was presented to the committee. He was not present that day but in kindness to him I advised the committee of his position. The committee was not interested; as I recall there was not a single member of the committee who was in agreement with the gentleman's idea. My young friend from Pennsylvania likes this bill, he likes it so well that he wants the census taken every 2 years. I submit that would defeat the very thing we are trying to do. We are trying to get away from a 2-year census. The census of manufactures at present is taken every 2 years and the census of business presently is taken every 10 years. We want to combine these two censuses into one every 5 years beginning in the year 1947.

The Census Bureau told us very frankly that once in 5 years was as often as they could take this census and do a real job. We are trying to get away from a 2-year census. If you were to take it every 2 years you would hardly get through taking it one time until you would have to start right in again. It takes a good long time to take the census and then it takes a good long time to collate the information so the general public can use it. With due regard to my splendid young friend from Pennsylvania I think he is in great error in insisting that this be taken every 2 years.

May I say to the committee that we discussed this fully not only with the Census Bureau but we discussed it fully with businessmen; and, as I recall, outside of some people in Pennsylvania and maybe one or two businessmen elsewhere the great bulk of the businessmen wanted it every 5 years. We feel that it should be taken every 5 years beginning in 1947. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] asked something about the cost of this. The thing the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON] is trying to do would increase the cost. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is entirely correct.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman give us the figures?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. The present census of manufactures is estimated to cost $10,930,000, on the quinquennial basis. That appears on page 18 of the hearings. Business and distribution is estimated to cost $23,800,000, making a total of $34,730,000. Under the present plan those two taken separately will cost $36,125,000. The gentleman can readily see if you repeat that every 2 years, instead of lessening your cost you will make your cost about two and one-half or three times more than you have now and, in my opinion, you will not do as good a job doing it every 2 years as you will under the 5-year plan.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman know of any people in business clamoring for the information that would be given through a census every 2 years, and did those business people come before the gentleman's committee?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. May I say, answering the gentleman's question, that the business interests of the Nation want this information and they want it very badly, but most of the business people who testified felt that a 2-year census was entirely too often. Another thing, the Census Bureau would hardly get through one census until they would have to start back on another one. We felt, the Census Bureau felt and the business people felt that 5 years was often enough. Of course, there were some exceptions. Certain people in Pennsylvania, maybe one or two businessmen elsewhere, felt that we ought to have the information every 2 years, but it is not practical to take a complete census of business and manufactures every 2 years.

Mr. RICH. May I say as a Pennsylvania businessman, not as a Member of Congress, that when we get requests for these censuses every 2 years it is too much red tape and too much work to fill out all these reports. We are not anxious to have them, so far as our business is concerned, and I have never been able to fathom why it is necessary to have them every 2 years. In my opinion, 5 years is often enough.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. We are trying to make the reporting burden lighter on businessmen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. How long after these censuses are taken do the figures and the facts derived therefrom become available for use of business and industry?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I do not think I can answer that exactly. The gentleman knows from his own experience that it takes a right smart while. It will take several months at least to collate that information.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Does the gentleman say several months or several years?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I would say several months at least. I would not say several years.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Does the gentleman, as a member of the Census Committee, know of any time in which a business census taken in recent decades has been available for public distribution and used under 2 years after it was taken?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. In answer to the gentleman's question, let me say to him that that is due perhaps to the fact that the present business census is taken every 10 years along with population and everything else, and it does take a long time to get all of this information in form so that it can be given to the public. However, if we take only the censuses herein named every 5 years, a smaller census, not undertaking to take population and everything else, we will be able to give this information to the public in a much shorter time than is possible when we take the large decennial census.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I want to say to the gentleman, to the House of Representatives, and to the country, that I have on my desk at the present time a second request for a census report from the little printing business which I operate in Ohio, together with a blank containing some six or eight pages, asking questions which my auditors tell me will cost from $1,000 to $1,500 in order to obtain all the information. I expect to give the Census Bureau of the United States the information I have available and if they are not satisfied then I am asking publicly that they prosecute me if they have any law or authority under which to act, because this is all a lot of damnable nonsense, and the quicker we stop it and let business and manufacturing get back to business and manufacturing and to production the quicker we will get this country out of the situation which it now finds itself in.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I am sure that the gentleman would not take the position that business does not need this information. I think in his own business he wants this information.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No, but by the time you receive this information from the Census Bureau it is absolutely obsolete and of no benefit or worth to any one for use.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. If you undertook to do it every 2 years you would be going around in a vicious circle.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I do not want to do it at all. I want to stop a lot of this monkey business.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. My position agrees with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN]. If it is taken at such long intervals and then takes 2 years to come up with the information, even though they do say it is a 5-year census, it, in effect, makes it a 7-year census, and on a 10-year census it would be over 12 years, and because it has been combined with the population census and taken so far back it is hard to come up with figures. Of course, it costs money. These business agencies are able to get it from companies because they get it currently, but when you go back and ask the auditors and accountants of companies to come up with things clear back in past history, of course, that costs money. These things should be kept currently, and if they are, it would be much less work and much less expensive.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentlemen will yield further, I would like to say this: that if in taking the census they would ask questions that were really pertinent to the functions of the business and questions that are necessary for the Federal Government to know what is being produced, and questions that in my judgment are really sensible, they would not ask so many foolish things that would take them 2 or 3 years to compile. That is the trouble with it. The census is too comprehensive, and they ask about a whole lot of things that are useless.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I agree with my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], but if they would do it efficiently and on the right issues involved, we could do it every 2 years.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I submit, with all fairness and frankness, Mr. Chairman, toward my young friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON], that his amendment would practically kill the bill. We do not want his amendment at all. Business does not want it, except a few people. The Census Bureau does not want it and the committee did not want it. Business wants this bill, if it becomes a law, to be effective. Business wants a bill which will get the job done. It is thought that this bill will call for fewer reports and will also make for efficiency. We want to provide business with real information at proper intervals, and we think a 5-year interval is often enough. This bill was largely worked out by businessmen who have made a long and careful study of the problems and they say that this bill is necessary, will serve the Nation, and the committee presented it to you for your consideration.

Therefore I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania be voted down.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if what I have to say is not pertinent to the bill under consideration, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, what we need now more than a census of business is a census of black markets to find out what is happening to the meat, flour, butter, and other farm products. The radio yesterday announced that the housewives up in Detroit last week broke the show counters of the merchants trying to get what little meat there was there.

What I am trying to say is this: I hope that the conferees who are considering the OPA bill will pay some attention to what the House membership and the Senate membership did in connection with the extension of OPA, and not get scared by the babblings of Bowles and other high-pressure groups. Just last week, you will remember, the press reported Bowles said he was in conference with labor leaders and with the President trying to make a trade with them; that if they would agree not to strike for a year, he would agree to see that prices on agricultural products remained frozen, regardless of the cost of production. Have not things come to a pretty pass in this country if one man can call in a favorite group and sit in the office of the President of the United States and fix the prices of the producers of this country without even consulting them about it?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That kind of an agreement will not work, because the members of the labor unions neither produce the food nor process it. The farmers do that. The gentleman might tell that to Murray and those fellows.

Mr. RIZLEY. Yes; and the farmers have been producing and they are going to continue to produce if they are let alone so they can produce; but they cannot produce without farm machinery, and they cannot produce without a lot of the other things that the OPA, by the restrictions now imposed, prohibits them from obtaining.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Those unions are on strike in the J. I. Case Co. and the other companies producing farm machinery so that the farmers cannot get that machinery. How are you going to produce a crop without a drill, a binder, or a combine?

Mr. RIZLEY. You are not going to get food without those things. Where is the meat? It is in the black market. Where is the bread? The executive branch of this Government has used the Second War Powers Act as a means of handling the wheat situation and said to the millers, the elevator people, and the farmers, "We will tell you how much you shall sell and when you can sell and to whom you must sell." Consequently, we have no bread.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The Government is acting under the Second War Powers Act? I thought the war was over a year ago.

Mr. RIZLEY. But the Second War Powers Act is still in full force and effect. If we adjourn this Congress for 6 months, which we are talking about, I think we ought to bring up some of the bills now pending to declare the war at an end. I have one of my own pending since last October but the committee thus far refuses to report it. There may be some things in the act that we need to continue. If so, the Congress may continue them without continuing the full War Powers Act.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the subject before the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was given permission to speak out of order.

The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. RIZLEY. I think it is very much in order. We are talking about taking a census here. We ought to take a census of the fool things this administration is doing and has done toward confusing confusion. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota who apparently was not listening when I obtained permission to speak, that instead of being a "yes man" for everything some bureau wants to do, he should be trying to help the farmers and producers get rid of some of the red tape, OPA restrictions, and thus enable his consumers in Minnesota to be able to get some meat, bread, butter, and other food products on a legitimate market at less than present black-market prices.

Mr. RICH. We do not need a census for that, if we would just act.

Mr. RIZLEY. In all seriousness, what I really got up here to say is that I hope the conferees of the House and the Senate—I have no reason to suspect them—will stand up and not get the Bowles jitters or "Bowlesitis." As the elected representatives of the people this House passed on the question of OPA extension and the Senate passed on the question. These bills represent the views of the Congress and there is just no occasion for the conferees to get excited because Mr. Bowles and Mr. Porter and numerous others "blabbers" over the radio have been telling the American people that the whole world is going to cave in if we do not extend OPA strictly in conformity to Mr. Bowles' prescription.

It should be remembered in this connection that in the early days of the first consideration of price control, that a bill was offered in the House which a considerable number of us supported for a straight across-the-board control program to be effected during the war, which would have frozen prices on agricultural products and consumer goods and wages; but the administration opposed such a program and refused to permit wages to become a part of a price-control program.

The late President Roosevelt said, in substance, in respect to such a program, that the Congress could write a price-control program that would affect everyone except labor, and that he would handle the labor situation. Some of us believed then that such a program would never work, that unless you controlled wages, which is one of the principal costs of agricultural commodities, as well as consumer goods, that the whole program would break down and that any such so-called price-control bill would be nothing more than a "price fixing" bill. I think it is fair to say that our predictions have come true.

We used to hear a lot of talk about holding the line, but the line has been broken "again, and again, and again" by the Government's appeasement policy made with a few favored labor leaders.

Each succeeding day this whole policy of appeasement and the policy of those who are in charge of our Government points more definitely to the thing that agriculture fears and dreads, namely, that the planners and the regimentaters may not intend to ever get rid of controls; that they intend to make as a part of our permanent philosophy a subsidy program for agriculture, whereby the taxpayers pay into the Public Treasury and it in turn pays out the taxpayers' money to pay the grocery bills of a favored group, and that the farmer must rely upon political subsidies rather than a fair price for his products in the market place.

Each day this program more strongly indicates the very thing that some of their group have been honest enough to admit that they expect to make OPA a part of our permanent economy, and thus attempt to replace supply and demand with a policy of controls politically administered.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment that has been offered by my good friend from Pennsylvania, although I dislike to oppose anything that he proposes, but I do so because I feel that a census of business every 5 years and a census of the population every 10 years is sufficient.

When I think of the operation of this Government and what the gentleman said here a few moments ago about getting rid of a lot of bureaucrats in this Government, I say that this is one way to do it, that is, take the census every 5 years rather than every 2 years. The trouble is that we have had so many things for the Government to do that it has created so many jobs the Government is top-heavy.

When I came to Congress we had less than 500,000 Government employees.

Today we have 3,000,000, not withstanding the fact that we have had people promise, in order to be elected President of the United States, that they would consolidate departments and eliminate a lot of bureaus. We are just top-heavy. What we have to do in this country if we want to be a frugal nation is to eliminate a lot of the things that the Government is doing. They have the people of this country worried. They have business people just sick and tired of filling out the reports that the Federal Government has been requesting. From my knowledge of business and from my knowledge of what we have been requested to do in filling out Government reports in the last 10 or 15 years, I know it is not necessary. If we take this census once in 5 years it will give us all the information we need and save the business people of this country a lot of time and expense and trouble. If you will look at the hearings on page 142 you will find this testimony:

The CHAIRMAN. The decennial census of business and the biennial census of manufacture, and taking the both every 5 years, we would save over a million dollars.

Now, your second statement is that if, instead of taking those two every 5 years, we were to take them every 2 years, it would double the cost——

Mr. GRIEVES. More than double it.

The CHAIRMAN. More than double the cost of the present procedure?

Mr. GRIEVES. That is right.

Dr. HAUSER. Mr. Chairman, a concrete figure that I think would help is that it would cost about $18,000,000 to do the combined, complete census of manufacture and census of business quinquennially. If you did that biennially, you would be spending that $18,000,000 five times a decade instead of twice a decade, and that is considerably in excess of what the current program costs, which runs approximately $3,000,000 annually.

If that is the case, I think by all means we ought to vote down this amendment and let the census be taken every 5 years rather than every 2 years. That would save a lot of expense to the Government and would prevent a lot of people from being put on the pay rolls to run around the country antagonizing business rather than encouraging and helping them.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as far as this census is concerned, I think there is only one problem that the businessmen of the country have now, and that is to get materials to manufacture goods. They want peace of mind and they want to know that when they have the materials, labor will work and work honestly and turn out the goods. The demand is unlimited. Aside from that, I want to say a word about this food situation. I was up in my district over the week end. I think if the President knew the farming situation and the food situation as I know it and as most of us know it, when Bowles and certain labor leaders met with him in the White House, to make a deal that if labor would not strike for a year, he, Bowles, would hold down the price of farm products. The President, out of respect for the farmers of the country, should have stuck with the farmer and kicked them both out. Now he cannot pass the buck. This administration is responsible for the food shortage. About 3 weeks ago—on one day the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Anderson, issued a statement saying the farmers should send 10 percent of their brood sows to the market or there were too many pigs for the feed that they were going to need. I have been a farmer all my life. I know the livestock game all around the clock. I never saw any livestock starve yet except once in a while in certain places in the country where feed is always scarce. At the same time Chester Bowles said we were going to have the greatest meat shortage in our history. On Saturday Anderson issued another statement saying that we are going to be short 2,500,000 fat hogs this fall. Now with all the confusion there is in the country and with all the bread lines and meat lines and every other kind of line and people going into the black market and paying $1 for butter and walking out feeling as if they were criminals when in a legitimate market they might pay 80 cents a pound for the butter and have peace of mind, if they could get the butter, and with black marketeers running all the markets in the East, the situation is very bad. I live near Lancaster, Pa., the biggest livestock market east of Chicago. That market is not handling any cattle with quality. What good cattle are coming to market are sold in the auctions where the fellows who used to be in the bootleg business years ago, studded with big diamonds and driving big cars, drive up to the auction, go through the pens with the auctioneer before the sale and decide who is going to get what and when. The cattle are driven into the auction ring, the fellows with the big bank rolls yell, "Ceiling." That stops the sale right there. The auctioneer says, "Sold to R. G." or whoever it is. He doesn't even tell what the price is or who the purchaser is He just says, "Sold to R. G." The result is, those cattle are killed in woodsheds, on trucks, in barns, and the meat goes to a favored few. All of the valuable byproducts that can only be utilized in a legitimate, licensed slaughterhouse are wasted.

In my home town they picked up 80 hides that were buried in the woods, about a week ago. In another place they dug 10 hides out of the river. Aside from all that, they lose all the blood and bone and all those things that make up our high protein feeds that go to make for poultry and for young livestock. Our insulin supply is about exhausted. The institutions of the country are begging for insulin, with a million diabetics in the country. Insulin is manufactured from the sweetbreads or the pancreatic glands of the cattle and sheep. That is exhausted because the cattle are killed in the black market. Seventy-five percent of our diabetics depend upon insulin. They must have it. Many of them will die in 10 days or a few months if the supply is exhausted. The big hospitals are telephoning to the packers for supplies. The packers do not have any. Omaha did not kill any cattle last week. Chicago killed about two dozen—the big packing houses of the world are closed.

The responsibility lies upon the administration, upon fellows like Chester Bowles, who set up these blockades and barriers and makes it impossible to do business; men like Clinton Anderson, who does not know what it is all about. He comes from the Southwest where he never saw a fat animal—talking about the meat supply of the country, issuing orders, telling us what to do. We have been feeding corn to cattle up in this country ever since we were a country. We know what it takes. First it takes a good animal, to start with. It takes good feed. It takes a lot of time. Yet, fellows like Bowles and Porter and Anderson think it can be done overnight. They think if they issue an order overnight that the cattle should revert back to the slaughterhouses, they think the meat is going to flow into the legitimate channels the next day. No matter what they think, it will take a good while. It will take good management. It will take a big house cleaning in Washington. If we must have orders let them come from men who know or at least who care.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

REORGANIZATION PLANS NOS. 1, 2, AND 3

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not imagine there is much left for me to say after listening to the remarks of the distinguished agricultural leader, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS]. I tried to ask him and also tried to ask his eloquent predecessor on the floor, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], a question as to this amendment, but they were too filled with eloquence to answer me. I did not get a chance to get in the question. I do not think the Secretary of Agriculture needs anybody to defend him, but probably if he has any trouble locating a steer out west my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS] will be able to help him out.

I wanted to ask if this proposed amendment took a census of the bureaucrats. If there is anything we need in this country right now it is a census of bureaucrats, because I do not believe the President has any accurate record. I think his predecessor lost count, and I do not believe he has been able to get any statistician that would improve the harmony of the horizon that overshadows us in bureaucratic Washington.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Of course, the present occupant of the White House has not been able to catch up. Does not the gentleman know that all of these companies which went into the production of munitions of war have not been able to get back to producing adding machines?

Mr. PITTENGER. I saw something about that and I would be inclined to think the gentleman's information is accurate. The thing that is wrong in this country is that those Government officials who were floating around in prosperity, in unlimited, arbitrary power during the war days, do not know the war is over. I think the American people will probably give them a jolt this fall so that they really will determine and decide that the powers which were to terminate 6 months after the ending of war are out of the window. I believe that the conditions that have been described here today as existing in agriculture are going to do a lot to bring that about. It is a terrific thing to consider the wrong policies that have been followed, the policies of burning up the pigs and plowing up the wheat when we need those products for our own people, to say nothing about needing them to carry out some of these blundering obligations that the State Department has taken on, where they assured the rest of the world that America would feed them without knowing whether they had the things to do it with, and without consulting these boys on burning up pigs and plowing up corn. The American people are fast becoming acquainted with this outfit and I think there is going to be a sad day of reckoning.

What I really wanted this time for was to tell you that the President's reorganization plans, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, came in here as House Documents Nos. 594, 595, and 596, as I recall, on May 16. Those plans are really something that are fearfully and wonderfully made. They are submitted with a straight poker face, pursuant to the act of December 20, 1945, known as the Reorganization Act. They were supposed to come in here and consolidate some of the departments and save the taxpayers some money. In my opinion they do not do either. Now there may be some good features in connection with those plans, but up to date I have found no one who can point out those features. Just so we can keep the record straight, the Members of the House are going to vote those plans up or down on Thursday, June 27. My resolutions, House Resolutions 151, 154, and 155, are highly privileged resolutions; they are so treated by the responsible leadership of this House, and we have been assured that next Thursday, June 27, this House will have an opportunity to register a vote for or against those resolutions. In my opinion, even though there may be some good things that can be said for those reorganization plans, they ought to be put over until next January when we can have more time to study them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment do now close.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment and wish to be heard on it.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Is that an amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. My amendment is to section 1.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. My request applies to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana that all debate on the pending amendment do now close?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-two Members are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAVIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 5857, and finding itself without a quorum, he directed the roll to be called, when 263 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he submitted herewith a list of the absentees to be spread upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Committee will resume its sitting.

The Committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to section 1?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Ohio: Page 2, after line 6, insert the following new section:

"The Director is directed and authorized to take, compile, and publish the census of manufactures, of mineral industries, and of business or distribution, including the distributive trades and service establishments, for the purpose of determining whether such industries or businesses want such a census taken. This census shall be taken in 1947."

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am not offering this amendment facetiously, but in good faith. This is perhaps the first time since I have been in Congress during my nearly 8 years of service that I have offered any legislation that involved any expenditure. This would involve some spending of money. I think it is a very worth-while project. If the census provided by the amendment passes I am sure it will show that business is overwhelmingly opposed to taking the census to which it applies. If that should develop this census should be discontinued. This might be a pattern to get rid of a large part of functions of the Census Bureau and save us a lot of money. The amendment ought to pass.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MASON. It is my firm opinion and conviction that the merchants of America, the small businessmen of America, want goods on their shelves to sell and not advice or facts or statistics coming from Federal departments.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. As the statistician thinks so the bill clinks.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this would completely kill the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That is what I want.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I appreciate the gentleman's frankness, but under this amendment those who want to have the census taken would have it taken and would give the information, and, of course, the contrary would follow, that those who do not want it would not have it taken and would not give the information. The result would have no value. The result is you would not get any census at all. It would not be worth a dime to anybody.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "business", strike out the remainder of the line.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Director is authorized and directed to collect, collate, compile, and publish at appropriate intervals statistics and reports relating to marriages, annulments, and divorces based upon data from registration and other records of all States, Territories, and possessions of the United States, and their subdivisions, which records as determined by him provide such data in satisfactory detail.

SEC. 3. That the following sections of the act of June 18, 1929 (46 Stat. 21), shall apply to the censuses, surveys, and studies authorized by this act: 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, and 15, except that the Director may also authorize the expenditure of necessary sums for travel expenses for attendance at training courses held by the Bureau: Provided, That in connection with any survey or study conducted by the Director pursuant to section 1 (b) of this act, the provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the act of June 18, 1929 (46 Stat. 21), with respect to the answering of questions and furnishing of information, shall apply only to such inquiries as are within the scope of the schedules and of the type and character heretofore used in connection with the taking of complete censuses under the act of June 18, 1929 (46 Stat. 21), or in connection with an censuses hereafter taken pursuant to section 1 (a) of this act and the act of June 18, 1929: Provided further, (a) That section 10 of the act of June 18, 1929 (46 Stat. 21), shall apply to surveys and studies conducted pursuant to section 1 (b) of this act only after determination and certification by the Director with the approval of the Secretary that the information called for is needed to aid or permit the efficient performance of essential governmental functions or services, or has significant application to the needs of the public, business, or industry, and is not publicly available from governmental or nongovernmental sources; (b) that in the case of new surveys and studies said section 10 shall apply only after public notice given by the Director at least 30 days in advance that such survey or study is under consideration; and (c) that the provisions for imprisonment provided by said section 10 shall not apply in connection with any survey or study conducted pursuant to section 1 (b) of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 4, strike out "an" and insert "any."

Page 3, line 10, after "Secretary", insert "of Commerce."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That inquiries, and the number, form, and subdivisions thereof for the censuses and surveys provided for in this act shall be determined by the Director, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce. To the extent that the provisions of this act conflict with the provisions of any other act, pertaining to the Bureau of the Census, the provisions of this act shall control: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to revoke or impair the authority of any other Federal agency with respect to the collection or release of information.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in the 8 years I have been here I have never listened to such a desultory debate as has been carried on in connection with this particular bill. It has been of a character that I think the circumstances of the time perhaps have caused, due to the confusion that exists in everybody's mind on almost everything throughout the country. There are a few things in connection with this bill on which I should like to get some information, before I am compelled to vote on it. Right at the outset I cannot see how I can vote for any more census bills of any kind or character at this time. As far as I can understand this bill, I shall vote against the whole bill and get rid of it if the situation is as I understand it to be.

May I have the attention of the chairman of the committee? In your report on this bill you say that the bill has three objectives—"to combine the 2-year census of manufactures and the 10-year census of business and distribution into a 5-year census." The first question I should like to ask is this: If this bill is defeated, is there existing law that will authorize the taking of the 2-year census of manufactures and the 10-year census of business and distribution?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. So that if this legislation is defeated, the existing legislation would continue in force the 2-year census and the 10-year census referred to in your report?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. It will continue, as far as the statute is concerned.

Mr. KEEFE. The present statute provides for a 2-year census of manufactures and it provides for a 10-year census of business and distribution. That is existing law, so that if this bill is defeated, the existing law will carry on?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. KEEFE. You grant specific authority for the monthly, quarterly, and annual surveys which have heretofore been made under the general authority of the organic act of February 14, 1903. As I understand, there is some question as to the legality of the authority under which these reports are demanded by the Secretary of Commerce now. For example, a manufacturer in my district wrote me the day before yesterday and sent me a sample of a paper that is sent out by the Secretary of Commerce. They are sent out every month, I understood him to say in his letter. In it they ask a long series of questions about his business. He said that he normally filed the request in the wastebasket, but he thought I might be interested from the standpoint of the expenditure of public funds involved. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not there is any question as to the legality of this survey that is being made from time to time by the Department of Commerce which is referred to in subparagraph 2 on page 2 of your report.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I will say to the gentleman there are differences of opinion as to the meaning of the statute. I quote a part of the statute in question from page 1 of the committee report where it says:

He—

Meaning the Secretary—

shall also from time to time make certain special investigations and reports as he may be required to do by the President or by either House of Congress or which he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

We have been making these interim reports monthly, quarterly, and annually under that authority. The gentleman knows that as well as I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. The gentleman knows as well as I do that Members on his side of the aisle several times have made points of order against taking certain censuses predicated on that authority and those points of order at times have been sustained. Therefore, if we are to give to the business people and all the people of the Nation the information they want, we must have this statutory authority to do it. This bill seeks to give specific statutory authority to do it.

Mr. KEEFE. Then what you propose to do by this bill is to resolve the question of the statutory authority and to legislate that authority in the Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. We are trying to remove that doubt.

Mr. KEEFE. If this bill passes, then there will be no question but that the Congress is granting specific statutory authority to the Secretary of Commerce to call for these quarterly, monthly, and annual surveys that my constituent was complaining about the other day?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. That is right. That is one of the purposes.

Mr. KEEFE. That will give to the Secretary of Commerce, if this bill passes, the power by law to fine and imprison that manufacturer if he fails or neglects to supply the information which has been demanded. Is that not true?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. No; the gentleman is half way right.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, in what way am I half way wrong? Let us put it that way.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. If you read the bill I think you will find that we struck out the imprisonment penalty, but we did retain the fine which has been on the statute books a very long time.

Mr. KEEFE. Oh, so they would only have the power to impose a fine? They could not put him in jail because he did not answer these questions? But the fact is, if a manufacturer fails or neglects to fill out one of these forms that is sent to him monthly or annually or quarterly or as the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Wallace, demands, that a manufacturer under this bill may be prosecuted and he can be penalized by a fine. Is that correct?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. A penalty has prevailed since we have been taking censuses and it is true of the decennial census as well.

Mr. KEEFE. I will tell you right now I do not know whether it is true or not, but I know a lot of people who have received these things and thrown them in the waste-paper basket and they have relied upon the fact that they did not believe there was any statutory authority vested in the Secretary of Commerce to ask for this information. They have paid no attention to it and apparently the Secretary of Commerce has not seen fit to have the question of his authority settled in a court of justice. If we pass this law, and that is the point I want the Members of Congress to understand, if we pass this law, we are putting into the hands of Henry Wallace the power to ask questions of the manufacturers and the business people of this country monthly, quarterly, or annually, or as often as he sees fit, under regulations which he issues, compelling them to take their time to answer all the questions that he may see fit to ask; and if a manufacturer fails to respond, then, under the terms of this bill, Mr. Wallace has the right to take him into court and fine him as a criminal. I do not propose to support that kind of legislation.

I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. As a matter of law, if a man is haled into court and fined and is unable to pay the fine, he would at least be put in jail as a result of failure to pay the fine and he would be in jail after all.

Mr. KEEFE. I think that is true.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. Did I understand the gentleman is advocating that papers which are sent out by the Federal Government should receive the respect of being tossed into the wastebasket?

Mr. KEEFE. I did not say any such thing, and if the gentleman had been listening he would have understood it.

Mr. RABAUT. I was listening.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman interpreted my remarks in line with the manner in which he interprets everything—to suit his own convenience.

What I did say was that I had received a letter from a constituent who stated it was his common practice to file these requests in the wastebasket. I made no comment upon it whether it was right or wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes to answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. I used that as an illustration to ask a question of the chairman of this committee, to find out whether my constituent, if this law passed, would be subject to a fine or imprisonment for throwing one of these questionnaires that came from the Secretary of Commerce, Henry Wallace, into the wastebasket. I am not saying whether it is good, bad, or indifferent, but, so far as I am concerned, I have had enough experience, and so has the gentleman from Michigan had enough experience, to know that we have taken censuses, we have gathered statistics, we have had thousands of economists and analysts passing upon this question, with the result that the country has become more and more confused until nobody knows what the situation may be that faces the country in any 24 hours.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. When you refer to statistics, if we had had something when Hoover was President, we would not have been so badly off. We have had something since, in the line of statistics, which has helped us a great deal.

Mr. KEEFE. I admit you certainly have had something in the line of statistics. Think of the statistics that the Secretary of Commerce gave to the strikers and the automobile manufacturers up in Detroit when they had that wage dispute.

Mr. RABAUT. We will defend Detroit. We do not need to have it defended from the West.

Mr. KEEFE. Statistics which the Department of Commerce itself had to admit were absolutely erroneous and were, in my opinion, intentionally erroneous, intended for one purpose only, and that was to affect the outcome of that wage negotiation.

Mr. RABAUT. Variety of opinion makes horse races.

Mr. KEEFE. Variety of opinion makes horse races, but those are facts and have been admitted by your Secretary of Commerce. These are statistics of the New Deal, statistics that you have gathered and had interpreted by your economists to suit the convenience and purposes of the New Deal. As a result, you have brought confusion and chaos to the country instead of bringing order and justice into our economy. I think we ought to vote down this whole bill and give some measure of relief to our distressed constituents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] has again expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we may as well face the issue right now which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] has presented. The committee went into this question very thoroughly as to whether or not these monthly, quarterly, and annual reports should be mandatory. Everybody knows, of course, that reports are now mandatory. Under the 10-year census and the 2-year census they are mandatory. The question was presented to the committee as to whether or not we should make all of these reports provided for in this bill mandatory. We heard considerable testimony on that subject and I believe if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] had been present and had heard the businessmen themselves discuss that, he would have concluded, as did the committee, that if the census is to be effective you must obtain as full a report as possible.

You have to place something in there so you will know you will get results. If you leave it up to each person as to whether he will respond to the inquiry, the results would not be reliable. Some would report and some would not. Let me say parenthetically that there is nobody in the country who loves liberty more than I.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. In a moment I will yield.

Nobody loves liberty more than I. I hail from the deep South. We like liberty. We do not like compulsion. But we are faced with the proposition that if we are going to take this census and expect it to be effective we have to do it in such a way that businessmen and the public generally can rely on it being fairly accurate. If you make it optional with each person as to whether he will or will not give the information asked for you would have neither a full census nor even an accurate cross section. I think if business and the public in general need this, they need reliable information. If some give it and some evade it, who profits?

Now, if the gentleman from Wisconsin wants a part of the business world to escape giving the information while others give it, I submit that those who feel likewise should go along with him.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Just one further minute, please. But we are faced with the fact that if we expect this census to be any good, if we expect it to be of use to businessmen and the general public, if we expect it to be of a type they can rely upon, then we need the information from all. I do not see how else it could be effective and accurate. Of course, you could take a cross section, but his plan would not give a good cross section.

Let me give this illustration——

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to let me give him an illustration?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Let me proceed, then I will be glad to yield. If my time runs out I will try to get more time.

Let me give this illustration: Suppose we take a census of the automobile business and suppose that every manufacturer in the automobile business gave us information except General Motors. Then the census would not reflect at all the general trend in that business and the other automobile dealers could not rely upon the census because the General Motors is a big factor in the automobile business and the figures which you would get from the other dealers would not reflect facts encugh on which the public could rely. We are face to face with that. I do not like to require reports. But we are faced with the proposition that if the census is to be of value it must reflect true conditions and that can be done only if the reports are received from a given business very generally. Any great number left out would throw the figures out of line and make them valueless.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. We have made the penalty as light as possible; we took out the imprisonment feature that has always applied. The law has always called for a fine and imprisonment. We did that in the census of 1929 and right on down the line. As the gentleman from Wisconsin knows no prosecutions have been brought under the penalty features of the census law. I asked the Director of the Census if he had prosecuted people. I think he reported that no one had ever been prosecuted. But if we do not do the thing right then it is not worth doing at all. That is what we are faced with. Any census costs a lot of money, and this one will cost a lot, and there is no use to spend all that good money for something on which no one could rely for accuracy.

I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman no doubt is familiar with the work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, is he not?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I know something about it.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman, ever since I have been in Congress, has voted each year millions of dollars to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and he knows that that is the great fact-finding agency of government, to find facts upon which business, and commerce, and labor, and industry depend.

Does the gentleman know that in the procurement of facts and the information upon which the Bureau of Labor Statistics bases its cost-of-living index and all of the other things they send to the public, that that information is gotten entirely from voluntary sources? It is entirely voluntary. Every bit of information that the Bureau of Labor Statistics gets—and the information is what governs the conduct of labor unions, covers wage negotiations, covers wages, covers income, covers expenditures, covers cost of living—all of that information is obtained from voluntary sources. The gentleman asked me for an illustration. There is the biggest illustration in the United States. There is no compulsion in it at all, yet they have built up a system in America by which they get the information and they get sound and correct information that the gentleman relies upon and that I rely upon. The gentleman just wants to build up another great big outfit to go out and duplicate a great deal of the work that is now being done under appropriations of this Congress to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. When, in God's name, are you going to stop this spending of money?

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes; I am through.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Fine. Let me say to the gentleman, in the first place, that the Bureau of Labor Statistics gets a lot of information from other departments in the Government. It gets information from the Bureau of the Census and other places. Let me say further that this act will not alter the Bureau of Labor Statistics at all. We had that question up. To be frank with you, that is exactly why the committee voted to strike out section 5 of this bill rather than to have any controversy with the Bureau of Labor Statistics and others. Let me say further to the gentleman that the Federal Reports Act of 1942 was passed by us, and I expect the gentleman voted for it.

Mr. KEEFE. I did vote for it and I am in favor of it if it is properly administered. I am very familiar with that act too.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. We wrote a provision in this bill leaving the Federal Reports Act intact. We do not propose to change that act at all. We have a provision in here doing that very thing. Now, under that act the Bureau of the Budget goes out and screens all of the requests presented by the various agencies of the Government, all of the Government agencies, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Bureau of the Census, Education, and others. They present their requests to the Bureau of the Budget and the Bureau of the Budget screens them. We are not changing that situation one bit.

Mr. Chairman, the whole question resolves itself into the proposition of whether or not you want to do an effective job. It is not material to me. I have nothing at stake. Witnesses came from many parts of the country and said they wanted and needed this legislation. They also said they wanted it to be reliable and accurate, and they were pretty general in believing that from their experience and general knowledge the information should come from a given industry rather completely and not from just a few in an industry. I was asked to present this legislation. If you do not want it, all right, but it is a question of doing an effective job. If you do not want to do an effective job, then vote against the bill. Remember that your own friends and constituents asked for this legislation. Many veterans are wanting to go into business. They want information. The Census Bureau wants to be ready to give it to them.

If you want to do a job and give information to these veterans and all others, if you want that information to be reliable, then give the Census Bureau a law with which it can be reasonably expected to serve the public. They say this bill will do it. The committee offers it for your earnest consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That in carrying out the policy of Congress as expressed in section 2 of the Federal Reports Act, 1942 (56 Stat. 1078), the Bureau of the Census, departmental staff, and field organization shall be recognized as the central agency for the collection and compilation of general purpose statistics.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 7, strike out section 5.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAVIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5857), to provide for the collection and publication of statistical information by the Bureau of the Census, pursuant to House Resolution 643, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. FULTON. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FULTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Census.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FULTON) there were—ayes 60, noes 48.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further consideration of this bill be postponed until tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. I withdraw my point of order, Mr. Speaker.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 896) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended," approved January 24, 1942, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the act entitled "An act to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended," approved January 24, 1942 (Public Law No. 411, 77th Cong.), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. In the case of those who before the enactment of this act shall have been retired on annuity under the provisions of the act of May 22, 1920, as amended, or the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, the annuity shall be recomputed and paid in accordance with the provisions of section 4 of this act."

SEC. 2. Nothing herein contained shall be construed so as to reduce the annuity of any annuitant, nor shall any increase in annuity accrue under this act to any annuitant for any period prior to the effective date of this act.

SEC. 3. This act shall become effective on the first day of the second calendar month following the month in which this act is enacted.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, Senate 893 is a measure that has unanimously passed the Senate. The House Committee on the Civil Service has reported the legislation unanimously and a rule has been granted. This afternoon the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES], the ranking minority member of the committee, and I, and perhaps other members of the House Committee on the Civil Service, will take the necessary time to inform our colleagues of the purposes of this legislation. We believe that it is meritorious and should pass.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the measure is to provide for the recomputation of a limited number of annuities that were granted under the Civil Service Retirement Act before certain amendments were added to the act in 1942. The bill is brought here to remedy an existing inequality. The bill would extend to certain annuitants retiring under the Civil Service Retirement Act prior to January 24, 1942, the privilege of having their annuities recomputed under the new method which was contained in the act of 1942, if such computation would result in an increased benefit to the annuitant. The recomputation would by the terms of the proposal be effective on the first day of the second calendar month following the date on which the measure becomes law.

I think I should say to the Members that the January 1942 amendment guarantees an annuity equal to one-seventieth of an employee's highest average salary for five consecutive years, multiplied by the years of service, not exceeding 35. The provision to which I call your attention was not retroactive to benefit those persons separated prior to the date indicated. In previous amendments to the retirement law, that is, in 1926 and 1930, we made specific provision to include annuitants then on the rolls. That is what we would do in this legislation. We would embrace a certain limited number of annuitants. The number, I believe, is something in excess of 5,500. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] if that is correct?

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is correct; between 5,500 and 6,000.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The board of actuaries for the civil-service retirement and disability fund have advised the House Civil Service Committee that over a long period of years this would cost approximately $6,000,000. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas, who cooperated in this legislation, if that figure is approximately correct?

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is right. It is a little more than $6,000,000.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say properly to the House that as an example of the reason for this legislation let us take an employee retiring at the present time at a salary of $4,000 and with 35 years' service. His annuity on retirement would be $2,000. He would have contributed the additional deductions from salary over a period of slightly more than 4 years, amounting to about $850. An employee at the same salary and with the same term of service who retired just prior to 1942, when the amended law was passed, on an annuity of $1,200, has been denied the increased annuity of $800 per year for that period of 4½ years, totaling a sum of about $3,600.

That annuitant has contributed indirectly to the retirement fund through the denied annuity.

I think we should also direct the attention of our colleagues to the fact that the operation of the reemployment provision of the amendment of January 24, 1942, resulted in the fact that there are certain persons who have taken advantage of such provision, who retired before 1942, and who have obtained reemployment during the war. There is no requirement under the law as to how long a reappointed person must hold a position before he can retire under the 1942 amendment; hence, many have held such positions for very short periods, as little as 30 days, and then retired and been granted the increased annuity.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BEALL. May I ask the gentleman if this bill has provisions similar to those contained in the bill (H. R. 3054), which I introduced?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman is correct. The legislation he presented for our consideration is embraced within the bill brought here today. We appreciate his interest and efforts in providing an equitable annuity for these persons.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. Part of this group of Federal employees were not covered by other legislation which has been passed. Is that not correct?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman is correct. We do know that they made their payments just as these who are working today have made them, yet we feel that they have not received the benefits of a law which Congress intended not only to apply to those retiring today but those who retired prior to 1942.

Mr. SPRINGER. In other words, those who will benefit by this legislation have made their payments the same as those who have benefited, but these folks have not received the same benefits?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is an assertion which is correct.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ANGELL. Is it not true also that this is to rectify the mistake that we made when the law was passed in not making it retroactive at that time?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is true. It was an error in a previous act of Congress. That is the reason we believe that the Senate, and now we trust the House, will make this an equitable annuity for all concerned.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to cover the same ground the gentleman from West Virginia has covered, but in substance this legislation is intended to take care of an inequity that occurred whereby in January 1942 Congress passed an act by which it increased the amount of annuities to those retired from Government service after January 24, 1942. Congress increased the percentage of the amount allowed these retired employees on the basis, as the gentleman from West Virginia has pointed out, of the salary they received during the last 5 years of service. This legislation is to bring that comparatively small group of people under the provisions of the legislation passed in January 1942. The group comprises between 5,500 and 6,000 individuals of an average age of about 69 years. If an individual left the service, as the gentleman has said, prior to 1942 and was able to get back on the pay roll after January 1942, and a great many did, then they get the benefit of the 1942 act. If they were not able to get back on the pay roll even for a short period of time, they do not get the benefit of it. This will take care of that inequity.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Why do you start with $4,000?

Mr. REES of Kansas. It does not start at $4,000. That is just an example set forth in the report to illustrate how it would work. Suppose an employee retired at a salary of $4,000 after 35 years of service. His annuity on retirement would be $2,000. If he had retired before January 24, 1942, it would have been $1,200. That is just an example set out in the report.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Suppose a man is getting a salary of $2,000 and he only has 20 or 25 years of service. Would it cover that sort of case?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes, the other example was just given as a matter of illustration.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It would be covered?

Mr. REES of Kansas. It takes care of all of the case of those who retired prior to January 1942.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the ranking member of this committee, the gentleman from Kansas, the Honorable EDWARD REES, and also the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from West Virginia, the Honorable JENNINGS RANDOLPH, to a situation I do not want to be in the position of opposing this legislation, but every time this committee brings in a bill in connection with Federal retirement, then I wonder why in time it is that we have such rank discrimination against certain people who happen to get paid by the same Government.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. In just a moment.

Once again I call attention to the fact that men out in the rural areas, working for the Government on the agricultural programs like the Production Credit Association, Farm Credit Administration, the AAA, the Farm Security, and other farm agencies, do not even come under civil service, nor do they get any benefits whatsoever. You will say to me, "Why don't you introduce a bill?" My answer to that is that there has been bill after bill introduced to correct that situation. Is there anyone in this body who can tell me why a person who is working in one of the county offices for the AAA, the Farm Security, Farm Credit, FCA, or any of the other agricultural agencies, should work year after year—some of them to my knowledge working for 10 or 12 years—should not receive any civil service status? Should not these people be entitled to have any retirement provided for them when they finish their work for this Government? They are working for the same Government that the rest of these people are working for. They do not happen to be living in Washington, but they are working for the same Government and yet they do not have any protective retirement. I did not want to make any issue of it, but right on this floor, a few months ago this Congress provided that the boys who press the pants and shine the shoes down at the Naval Academy will come under retirement. However, this great group of people working in the agricultural regions on agricultural programs do not come under the provisions of civil service nor are they provided the civil service retirement.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. REES of Kansas. As I remember, the gentleman from Wisconsin went along on that 1942 act that was passed when we increase the amount of annuities for these many thousands of Government employees. Now the gentleman talks about the inequities of the situation. If that was wrong legislation, it passed this House. All this bill does is to put those people who happened to retire before January 1942 on the same basis.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I will answer my colleague by saying that how the gentleman from Wisconsin voted in 1942 or 1822 has nothing to do with the point I am trying to make. This committee year after year brings in legislation for Government employees, yet we have one large group of Government employees who do not receive any protection. That is the only point I want to make. I was careful in the beginning of my remarks not to make any reference to what you are doing in this particular bill. I do not know whether it is on the doorstep of the gentleman from Kansas or the gentleman from West Virginia or whose doorstep it is on, but the fact is that out in those rural areas year after year they do not come under the provisions of civil service or retirement. And I want someone to tell me why. Are not all Government employees entitled to the same legislative consideration?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I will go along with the gentleman on that proposition if they are not getting what they are entitled to.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I share the over-all objectives which are sought by my colleague from Wisconsin. I think the criticism that he directs at this committee should be realized not as a carping word but as a constructive word, and I take it in that manner.

The Civil Service Retirement Act does, by its terms, include all officers and employees in the executive branch of the Government not subject to another retirement system and not exempted therefrom by law or Executive order.

Recommendation has been recently made that employees of national farm-loan associations and production credit associations be brought within the purview of the Retirement Act, but it appeared from a report by the Civil Service Commission that such employees could not be legally considered as employees of the Government, belonging as they do either to a privately owned corporation or to an organization which will eventually become privately owned.

The words "in or under the executive, judicial, and legislative branches of the United States Government," appearing in section 3 (a) of the Retirement Act, has been construed by the Commission to include only persons who (a) are engaged in the performance of Federal functions under authority of an act of Congress or an Executive order, and (b) are appointed or employed by a Federal officer, and (c) are under the supervision and direction of a Federal officer and for these reasons are officers or employees of the United States Government.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The gentleman should know that.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I should say to him that I do believe the Civil Service Committee of the House has within the past few weeks, for the first time in the history of legislation in this body, be it the Civil Service Committee or any other committee, put a limitation, plus a reduction, in the number of employees who are to work for the Federal Government. For the first time, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Wisconsin and to all my other colleagues, your committee has acted not only to further improve the efficiency of the department and the type of work undertaken in the name of good government, but we have actually started to reduce the number of employees, and that is a part of the Federal Pay Act.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I will answer the gentleman from West Virginia by saying that is not the point as far as I am concerned. You can take off a million employees and it might be a desirable thing for the country. The point I am calling attention to is that many thousands of Government workers in rural areas who do not come under civil service obtain none of these benefits. It seems that we have no difficulty in coming here time after time and doing things for the benefit of a few of the civil-service employees, but I say it is time that these others were included.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

House Resolution 661 was laid on the table.

OUR FOOD SHORTAGE

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to make some observations regarding the food situation in our country. There are some matters of evidence in this very connection with which the people and the country are, perhaps, not entirely familiar, and it is my desire today to bring those matters to the attention of the people and the country. The people are entitled to know these things, and I intend to let them know insofar as I am able to do so.

Many years ago, Napoleon said, "An army travels on its stomach." More recently, Mr. Henry Wallace, the former Secretary of Agriculture, and now the Secretary of Commerce, who some years ago brought about the killing of some 7,000,000 little pigs and nearly a million head of cattle, and caused every third row of corn and cotton to be plowed under, said: "Food will win the war and write the peace." The latter statement is entirely correct and the same is literally true, but the question remains for every American to answer, "Has this administration adequately provided for the production of food?" The answer is "No." Otherwise we would have the available food which is so badly needed.

Mr. Speaker, our farmers produced the food which was so essential to the winning of the war. They accomplished this monumental task with but very little farm help because their sons were inducted into the Army, and their experienced farm help was either persuaded away to work in some war plant, at very high wages, or they were herded into some branch of the service. They faced the problem of attempting to secure farm machinery, or replacements, and this was a very serious obstruction. However, with all of these handicaps, and with the help of other members of their families—their wives and little children—they worked early and late, and they did a magnificent job. I cannot commend them too highly for this great accomplishment. They produced the food for war. Now, the war is over—the shooting has ended—and we face the question of food in time of peace. The statement to which I referred hereinbefore that "food will write the peace" is actually true.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Members of the House to an article which appeared on last Saturday, June 22, in one of the local papers in which its bold headlines set forth: "Supply of meat falls 90 percent here to hit new low. Neither beef nor pork available as end of ceilings is awaited."

This is quite an interesting article. As I scan through the article I notice it has one particular feature which relates to the closing of packing plants and this is what the article relates with regard to that feature:

Many packing plants and butcher shops are closed. Armour who can slaughter 220 animals an hour has not slaughtered a beef animal this week. The company which had an average daily slaughter of 3,789 hogs last year and 7,607 through 1944 obtained but 16 hogs on yesterday's market.

Reports from large cities across the Nation read about the same, little or no meat. In Pittsburgh the coal miners told Navy officers of the area coal mines administration they would not work unless they get more bread, more flour, and more meat.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Those are very alarming conditions and the serious thing about it is they are true. Yet, we have the OPA and have had it about 3 years. We have been importuned by letters and telegrams from people urging us to continue OPA as is without amendment. We see the OPA as it has been operating for the last 3 or 4 years and the condition it has brought the country to.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is entirely correct and I wish to thank him for that splendid observation.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GILLIE. Last week I received a call from one of my local butchers in Fort Wayne who also runs a locker plant. He asked, "When are you going to give us some meat down there?" I said, "We will probably give it to you next week because we will have the OPA up for some sort of decision next week." He stated that the big local yards had closed down and he cannot get any meat.

The packing plants are closing because they cannot get any meat. I notice in the paper this morning that the big plant at Wilmington, Ind., has closed. The situation is really bad and we will have to do something mighty quick, I think.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is entirely correct, and I wish to thank him for that observation. The same situation seems to apply all over the country.

I picked out this morning from one of the local newspapers a statement which to me is very alarming. It has a Chicago date line. The statement contained is, "Legal Packers Work at 10 Percentum Capacity." That means that the packers all over the country are now working at 10 percent capacity because in the legal operations they are unable to obtain the livestock. The OPA has certainly cut down those operators tremendously.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. That does not apply to the large packers, may I say to my distinguished colleague from Indiana. The same condition prevails as far as the small operator is concerned.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is entirely correct. It applies to the large producers and packers as well as to the small producers and packers.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. However, there is this danger. I think the gentleman from Indiana will agree that there is a tendency to get people in the frame of mind that just because an animal goes to a federally inspected plant or a big packer, that that meat never goes into the black market, whereas the small operator is liable to be accused of being an illegitimate packer. I do not think the gentleman believes that the small packer is any more illegitimate than the big packer.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. This is a situation that is country-wide. It is not confined to any one market, and it is probably the result of the fact that the animals are not being marketed; is that not it?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. That is really the reason.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the real reason.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The question is, Why are not the animals being marketed? Is that not it?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is correct.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman has recalled in his very able speech the difficulties under which agriculture has attempted to operate for the last 4 or 5 years. I well recall the numerous occasions upon which the gentleman joined with many of us in trying to show WPB, for instance, where they were making a very grave error in permitting the exportation of approximately one-fifth of our tractor output, while our farmers needed them so very badly. I also recall the gentleman joining us when we were trying to convince the head of Selective Service that they were stripping too much of the farm labor off the farms, and in that way endangering the supply of food of the Nation. I want to compliment the gentleman upon the efforts which he has constantly shown in trying to put a little common sense into the people who today are administering this Government.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to thank the gentleman for that statement. We have had serious difficulty with respect to farm labor. At the moment farm machinery is almost impossible to obtain. We find that the farmers have had almost every obstruction imaginable thrown before them which has hindered and delayed the production of the necessities of life.

In my own district I wish to cite from a newspaper article, the Connersville News-Examiner of date of June 20, last week, in which this statement appears:

New Castle predicts OPA probe of black-market lumber sales. Sales of thousands of feet of black-market lumber there in the past few months may lead OPA investigators to New Castle, the Courier-Times reports.

OPA enforcement officers are probing activities of truckers hauling lumber from Kentucky and other southern States to dispose of at exorbitant prices in Indiana, and New Castle has been one of the most profitable sales points for the motorized dealers in such building material, according to the Courier-Times.

"Established lumber dealers here," the paper continues, "are offered the black-market lumber periodically, most of it rough finished and unplaned, and much of it odd-sized cuts. But the dealers regularly turn down such offers, and as a result have little or no supply of building material on hand."

This article appeared in the Connersville News-Examiner:

A Connersville dealer, who has little to offer even the customers who hold priority ratings, said his firm has had offers of black-market lumber at a price higher than we could sell it for, and added that it was of very poor quality. He said that although a number of trucks have stopped at his establishment, they don't come here as often as they do to some other cities in the State, according to the reports he has had. It is, however, a general condition throughout the State, he said.

This is just a little touch on the lumber situation and the situation which the people are facing at this particular time.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. This lumber and building material situation is a rather baffling thing. In my own State it is almost impossible to get a stick of lumber or building material of any kind. In a new town that was recently started in my county 100 farmers have moved out there and are trying to complete the building of a schoolhouse. It has been impossible to get material to complete that building so that the kids can go to school this fall. May I point out to the gentleman, however, that yesterday evening about 7 o'clock, in company with another Member of the House, a neighbor of mine, we drove just across the Maryland line to a place they call Pinehurst Village, and there I saw under construction 15 or 20 brick houses. They seemed to have all the material they needed. The man constructing them told me that he has six new permits that have just been issued. Those houses are selling, according to what he said, for $29,500 each. To me, the plain thing is that apparently all the materials are available for the construction of these high-priced houses here in the shadow of the Capitol, while in my section of the country there are no building materials available. Anybody here can go out and see this Pinehurst Village. My neighbor, a Member of this House, said that about 4 weeks ago he was out there and the house next to the one we looked at, an exact duplicate of it, was selling for $24,500, but yesterday evening it was $29,500. The OPA might well look into some of the material situation around here to see what is going on.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I say to my friend from Oklahoma that at that fabulous price for houses the common people and the veterans would have no opportunity to purchase a house.

Mr. RIZLEY. Certainly not. We were told here for days and days and we heard over the radio night after night for hours at a time when the housing bill was up for consideration that all of this material must be preserved so that the veterans could build houses.

The veterans cannot pay $29,500 or $25,000 for a house.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to my friend the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I assume the gentleman saw the article in the press yesterday in the Washington papers where they granted a permit here to build a saloon building within a block of the Nation's Capitol. That is unnecessary construction. I assume he also saw the Legionnaire, which is printed here, with great headlines saying that this administration and the Government does not intend and does not desire the veterans to have housing. That is a speech in a paper printed here by the American Legion.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, during the past 12 months possibly 400,000,000 bushels of American wheat and corn have been exported to fulfill foreign demands.

In that particular connection I recently read a letter from one of my constituents in the Tenth Congressional District of Indiana which relates to just that situation. I thought it was a very powerful writing and a very powerful accusation. I want to read it. This is what the lady says. She is a farm housewife:

I am not opposed to feeding starving Europe. But they surely are getting ham, bacon, and the best, while we have to live on lunch meat and sausage that an animal would scarcely eat. I do not think it is fair to our country which has always been a land of plenty. Last week all there was in Lebanon was lunch meat, fish, and a little sausage. Of all the bungling administrations, we sure have it now. Surely there is a better way than this.

May I say I agree with the lady wholeheartedly.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentlewoman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. We in Massachusetts have been more discriminated against in the matter of feed than any other section of the country. We have suffered so much, especially in Massachusetts as well as New England as a whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. I agree with the gentlewoman because just recently I saw a picture in one of the local newspapers of a farmer up in your area who had no feed for his chickens and there was a photograph of 200 chickens that had starved to death because the farmer had no feed with which to feed them.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That farmer was in my own district. The Humane Society was appealed to because they thought the farmer had not fed the chickens properly. The farmer had letters from all over the country. He did not feed the chickens properly because he did not have the proper feed and he gave them a combination of different things. I inserted a statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Friday showing what he fed them.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the real cause of death of his chickens was the fact that he did not have the proper feed for them.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. That is right and that is why he tried to give them a substitute which contained no nourishment and, therefore, we have no poultry and no meat.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, there are many things that can be said about this question but because of the scarcity of time I must hurry on. I am constrained to say that these scarcities to which I have referred have largely been brought about by reason of the exportation of foodstuffs to Europe and elsewhere all over the world and by reason of the price ceilings of the OPA.

May I ask, at the outset, "What has this administration done, or is now doing, to help promote the program to produce the necessary food that will win the peace and stop the world from being taken over by the Communists?" The answer is, "Very little," because we find that those in power, and the bureaucratic agencies which it has created, fail to recognize that it requires experienced manpower, adequate machinery, and a proper incentive for the farmers of our country to produce the food and feed which is so essential here and elsewhere. We find that the many labor disturbances which now exist in some of the leading farm-machinery manufacturing companies are preventing production of necessary farm machinery, and this same condition has obtained for many months. Recently it was discovered that a rule, or order, was in the making—and it is probably in effect at this time—whereby this administration is to seize and require the shipment of 7½ percent of all tractors, made in this country, to Russia. That proposed requirement has been kept secret, but the farm-machinery manufacturers have at least disclosed this plan, and that the Civilian Production Administration now contemplates such action, which, if put into effect, will make some very serious inroads against the ability of our farmers to procure these needed tractors for our use in this country.

There is no good reason for us to send anything to Russia, because she has failed and refused to cooperate with us and other nations in international affairs. If and when Russia cooperates with us and the world, then if there is need for help—and we can aid her—we will come to her rescue, as will other nations. Unless something is done to aid in providing our farmers with farm machinery so they may go forward and produce the essential foodstuff, we may have a famine in the United States within the next 9 months. In the eastern portion of our Nation there are now wheat fields and hay fields that remain uncut, because there is no available farm help which can be secured to help save those crops. Yet, there are 3,000,000 people now on the Federal pay roll, at least one-half of that number are not needed at all, but the administration keeps them. The taxpayers have to pay the bill. On many occasions, Congress has cut down the appropriations in many of the departments in a good-faith effort to force a reduction in the number of the employees—but, in those instances, the administration now in power merely transfers those employees, for whom no appropriation was made, into another and a different department of government. Practically all of them are kept on the pay roll. Many of those needless employees now drawing fat salaries from our Government could be used, to a very great advantage, in helping to save the crops and the food. This outrageous plan of Federal spending the taxpayers' money, for needless things, must be stopped.

Mr. Speaker, one thing this administration can do, which it has failed to do up to the present, is to discontinue taking essential farm boys and farm workers from the farms in America and inducting them into the military service during peacetime. That is one act this administration can do to help in this frightful food and feed shortage. Yet no action is taken even to this late date. They continue to take the farm help, yet the war is over, and it is almost impossible to buy a loaf of bread, a piece of meat, a pound of butter, or a box of washing powder.

There is always a reason for such an unexplainable situation. What is that reason? Those in power in our Government, in Washington, have utterly failed to make any plans, after last year's abundant crops, to cover food and feed requirements and commitments for domestic and foreign consumption. The only policy they have adopted is the policy of scarcity. That policy has been promoted by Economic Stabilizer Chester Bowles, and that policy is now bringing our country face to face with the most serious food crisis in history. Commitments were made without any regard to our production, our reserves, or our own requirements.

Since VJ-day the Export-Import Bank has made foreign loans, without any congressional knowledge or sanction, aggregating $3,467,500,000, a large portion of which was spent for food in this country. Records of that bank disclose the following loans were so made—and this was lending the taxpayers' money—upon such security as those in power might determine: France, $1,912,500,000; Great Britain, $650,000,000; Netherlands, $300,000,000; Russia, $280,000,000; Belgium, $100,000,000; Norway, $50,000,000; Finland, $50,000,000; Greece, $35,000,000; Italy, $25,000,000; and to many others in varying amounts. Yet in the fact of all of that aid, almost every flour mill in our country was besieged with orders for flour from Britain and other countries, and they paid us cash—that was the same money we had loaned to them. This food acquired by foreign interests was purchased at OPA ceiling prices, and we have received authentic information that the foreign buyers of our food resold it to their own people, and in other countries, at a tremendous profit. That is certainly a new and a novel policy in dealing with hungry people. I am uncertain as to whether our people are generally aware of the fact that a large percentage of the food which is now being sent out of our country is being resold at fancy black-market prices to people in other countries. It is quite a problem to determine how the hungry people who have no money can secure any amount of food for their sustenance. We have ever been a most charitable people, and we have ever stood ready—and we now stand ready—to make great sacrifices to help our destitute neighbors, but we falter in our effort when we learn of the unthinkable things that are now taking place. For instance, Russia took all of the grain out of Poland after last year's harvest and now we are called upon to provide food for Poland. Great Britain is now trying to take credit for our American food shipped to Greece, Italy, and other countries. That is bringing international power politics into the distribution of food and the feeding of the hungry. Such a policy should never be countenanced.

Mr. Speaker, during the past 12 months approximately 400,000,000 bushels of American wheat and corn have been exported to fill foreign demands. Failure to plan properly last fall to meet export requirements of grains brought about the initiation of many uneconomic and unusual policies by the administration, which will seriously reduce our food supply for many months to come. Bread lines now exist in many parts of our country and meat formations are to be observed in many places. Flour mills are unable to buy wheat because the Government bought all that was available and gave a 30-cent bonus per bushel above the legal ceiling price. This attitude placed our farmers in a very serious situation because they could not buy and pay 30 cents per bushel above the legal ceiling price without becoming liable to prosecution for noncompliance with the price ceilings. The result was the Government secured the available supply of those grains, and our farmers who had insufficient grain to carry them through were compelled to sell their livestock. Now a new plan is proposed by the Government: When our farmers take a load of wheat to the mill our Government, by and through a bureaucratic order issued, seizes and confiscates one-half of that load, and the farmer can only rely upon one-half of his delivery for the benefit of himself and family, and his neighbors, for food purposes. Many mills have closed down and their employees have been thrown out of their jobs.

On the other hand, the Canadian mills are operating, and they are producing white flour, while we in the United States are forced to change from 72-percent extraction white flour to 80-percent dark flour. It has been reported that Canada has on hand sufficient wheat to allocate 9 bushels to every citizen, while we have a supply sufficient only to allocate six-tenths of 1 bushel to each citizen. Also our Government cornered the market on corn by making purchases of available corn, and it bought some 35,000,000 bushels at a black-market price of 30 cents a bushel above the legal ceiling price established by OPA. By reason of that "cornering process" the legitimate buyers of feed—and that includes manufacturers, dealers, and farmers, were unable to secure feed grains for dairy and beef cattle, hogs, and poultry. The fact is, we have lost about 700,000 tons of mill feed during the last 6 months because of the Government requirement that mills produce 80 percent extraction flour, and much more was lost when the Government refused, until quite recently, to sell or loan wheat to mills for grinding flour.

Mr. Speaker, when those in power seized the black-market purchases of wheat and corn, the OPA increased the ceiling price on corn 25 cents per bushel, and also made an increase in the ceiling on other feeds. This was done without making any compensatory increase in the ceiling price of beef, hogs, poultry, and dairy products. However, very recently dairy products were slightly increased. This policy throws feeding ratios out of balance, and under that plan our farmers will lose money when forced to pay higher prices for corn and other feeds.

I am constrained to say that the scarcities, to which I have referred, have largely been brought about by Mr. Chester Bowles, and his policy making group. I am convinced the people realize that fact, because they have followed this question very closely throughout the past. It is a man made or a group made scarcity. Under that plan of scarcity the needed food, and other essential commodities, have been withheld from the people. The fact is, Mr. Bowles and his crowd want to remain in power, even though this late war is now over, and they want to continue to control the lives, business, and destiny of every citizen in our land. Of course, this plan and policy is contrary to the American way of life.

Mr. Speaker, I propose a plan—which I firmly believe will be very helpful. This is my plan:

There should be an immediate readjustment in the price of hogs, cattle, poultry, and poultry products sufficient to compensate for the increase in prices of corn, and all other feeds. I am confident this would aid materially in encouraging production.

There should be an immediate cancellation of the 80-percent extraction order to save wheat and flour; this would also provide vast quantities of millfeed for domestic use.

Our flour mills, in this country, should be encouraged and permitted to operate full time and full capacity in producing flour for domestic use.

All Government black-market operations in grain, feed, lumber, and all other commodities, should be stopped. Government officials should be subjected to the same penalties for such offenses as our private citizens.

Our people should be encouraged to produce all the grain, food, feed, and civilian goods, including farm machinery, that can be produced, under which method the price controls can and should be removed. The age-old plan of supply and demand has never been found to be wanting in any particular.

It is evident to all of the people that the future solvency of our Nation depends, and will continue to depend, upon the reduction of all Government spending; this spending must be cut to the bone; this can and should be accomplished by a material reduction of all Government personnel, in every Department of our Government, to peacetime requirements. All bureaucracy which now exists in Washington, should be entirely eliminated, because that element seeks to destroy our liberty and freedom.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, we must keep our country strong. Strength cannot develop under a plan of scarcity—it can only develop under a plan of plenty.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAYS). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] is recognized for 10 minutes.

PEOPLE WHO ARE NOT LOYAL TO OUR GOVERNMENT SHOULD NOT BE EMPLOYED IN GOVERNMENT

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct your attention to some facts regarding the deplorable situation with respect to the policies and practices of the Civil Service Commission, during the past 5 years, with respect to loyalty investigations of Federal employees, and again renew my request for immediate House approval of House Resolution 667.

During the war, thousands of persons applied for Federal positions about whom some question arose with respect to their loyalty to the United States. These cases were investigated by the Civil Service Commission, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Intelligence Unit of the Treasury Department, the Secret Service, and other similar investigative agencies. However, in all cases the investigation was transmitted to the Civil Service Commission and a rating was made with respect to whether such applicants were loyal. This first rating was made by a Rating Board in the Investigations Division of the Civil Service Commission. From there the cases were transmitted to a higher board, consisting of Mr. Alfred Klein, who is now chief legal officer for the Commission, Mr. Farrar Smith, and Mr. John Q. Cannon, who is no longer with the Government.

It was at this higher level that the recommendations of the investigator and of the Rating Board of the Investigations Division were reversed time and time again in cases involving Communist and subversive activity of Federal employees. The evidence I have shows that in 75 percent of the cases involving Communist activities of Federal employees, this board of advisors to the Civil Service Commissioners, reversed the findings of the investigator who actually conducted the investigation and the decisions of the Rating Board.

It was because of this situation regarding the presence of persons in the Federal employment of questionable loyalty to our Government that I addressed a letter to the Civil Service Commission on May 24, 1946, exactly a month ago, asking that the Commission furnish legal justification for its refusal to reexamine these loyalty cases where the subject of the investigation is still employed with the Government.

I did not receive a reply until just a few hours ago a letter came by special messenger from the Chairman of the Commission. He quotes from a five-page opinion by Mr. Klein and reaches the conclusion that the Commission has no power to require the removal of employees as a result of reopening loyalty cases in which there was a previous finding of eligibility. In other words, the books are closed and sealed. He says nothing in reply to my request for permission, as a Member of Congress, to examine the files of employees occupying key positions in our Government.

I maintain that if there are persons employed in Government who adhere to communistic views or who belong to groups who advocate the overthrow of our Government by force, this Congress has a right to know it. Surely, if the record of any of them is questioned, we should have a right to examine that record. The Commission should, and I hope will, cooperate in doing it.

On numerous occasions, I have requested the Civil Service Commission officials, including Mr. Mitchell, the President of the Commission, and Mr. Moyer, Chief Examiner, to allow me, as a Member of Congress, to examine the Commission's files with respect to these loyalty cases. I have since asked Mr. Mitchell why a Member of Congress cannot inspect the records of the Commission. His refusal was based on his belief that the Attorney General had ruled that a Member of Congress cannot inspect the Commission's files in this regard. I consider the Commission's refusal, whether supported by an Attorney General's opinion, completely contrary to the interest of the public and the taxpayers who pay the salaries of the Federal employees and whom we as Members represent in the legislative branch of Government. I think that every person who works for the Federal Government exercises a public trust, and his past, present, and future history in all details should be open to the public. Certainly, officials employing persons whose views are contrary to our form of government, should be held accountable for their actions.

The purpose of my resolution provides, notwithstanding the refusal of the Commission to permit a Member of Congress to examine these records, to have a subcommittee of the Committee on the Civil Service fully investigate the decisions and interoffice memoranda which were the bases for the decisions made by the Commission in rating as eligible hundreds of Federal employees, who are more concerned in promoting a Communist doctrine than maintaining a strong America as we know it.

I have in my possession, much evidence upon this subject. I think it is well at this time to point out what I regard as some of the illegal, arbitrary acts of officials in the Civil Service Commission, who rated Communists as eligible for Federal employment. I have in my files, for example, the case of a person who was an applicant for an extremely responsible position as an assistant to a policy-making official in one of the most important war agencies. I should like to read part of the file which the Commission refuses to let the Members of Congress examine. In connection with this applicant's investigation, it was shown that he was a member of a half dozen Communist front organizations. In a statement concerning this investigation, Mr. Alfred Klein, whom you will remember I mentioned as the Civil Service Commission's chief legal officer, stated, "If I had to express an opinion as to whether the applicant is a Communist, my reply would be in the affirmative. However, I am constrained to recommend that the applicant be rated eligible." Mr. Klein stated in his confidential memorandum that the applicant had been a member of organizations which were noted for being characteristically aggressive as communistic.

I am advised that Mr. Klein is the official in the Civil Service Commission who wrote the Commission's legal opinion as to whether the Commission should review these loyalty cases in which he reversed the opinion of the Investigations Division time after time. In another portion of the memorandum regarding this case, other statements of Commission officials are as follows:

There was the loosest kind of control in this case.

And:

The Commission looks bad on this one.

And:

The reference is to the highly aggressive and rather militant type of person, who on occasion moves in and out of the Communist fringe.

In this particular case, Mr. Smith differed with Mr. Klein and stated:

On the record as a whole, I am inclined to believe that the conclusions of the Investigations Division are justified and should be approved, notwithstanding the fact that the CIO appears to be active and will contest any adverse action.

When the resolution, which I have introduced, is approved, I intend to place in the RECORD many other cases in which the Commission took similar action.

Before I leave this subject, I should like to call your attention to yet another case in which the applicant applied for an extremely responsible Government position. The investigation revealed that the applicant was a member of a dozen Communist-front organizations and actively participated in Nation-wide propaganda to keep this Nation out of war during the time Russia was allied with Germany. One of the responsible witnesses contacted who had outstanding knowledge of the foreign relations field in which the applicant was to work, stated that he would endorse the applicant with the qualification that the applicant would face conflict if the United States ever became involved with Russia.

The files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Office of Naval Intelligence, the Office of Military Intelligence, the New York City Police Department, all contained derogatory information. Yet, Mr. Klein, in his memorandum which was the Commission's ruling, decided that because there were a greater number of witnesses who testified for the applicant than in opposition, the majority rule would be observed and therefore the applicant was rated eligible.

I have always assumed that the Government in determining the eligibity for employment especially with respect to questions of loyalty, resolved all doubts in favor of the Government. I am convinced from evidence in my possession that the policy of the Commission is to resolve such doubts in favor of the applicant in loyalty cases.

I could develop this subject further and present to the Congress additional cases with respect to the policy of the Civil Service Commission. I mentioned these two examples just to give you an idea as to what is going on. Of course, if the Congress desires to approve and is in favor of such policy, the people should know it. I cannot subscribe to it.

My attention has been called to a recent statement by the Attorney General in which he expressed his opposition to the activities of Communists and Facists in this country. I suggest that the Federal Government is a place for him to begin in dealing with this problem.

Mr. Speaker, the situation is one which needs immediate attention, particularly in this hour in which true democracy is having its "trial by fire." I trust that we all will see the day when the administrative branch of the Federal Government will be frank, open and forthright and its relations with the legislative branch. I hope, too, that the day will come when the elected representatives of the American people will have a right to observe in detail the extent to which their policies as written in legislation are carried out by the administrative agencies. In this way only will a true cooperative sprit be developed between the executive and legislative branch.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia, chairman of the Civil Service Committee and who I am glad to say is interested in this problem that has been discussed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, before the distinguished gentleman from Kansas, the ranking minority member of the House Committee on the Civil Service, made his remarks I had the privilege of talking with him informally. I am sure he knows the views I have taken, not recently but over a long period of years in reference to any individuals who are employed within the Federal Government but are not Americans. We do not desire to classify people in Government service or beliefs but we do insist that they be Americans. Whether a man be a naturalized or native-born citizen is not important. The vital consideration is that he be an American.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is the message I have been trying to carry to the House this afternoon.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am constrained to believe that a Communist, or a person who advocates the overthrow of our Government, should not be on the Federal pay roll. It is that individual the gentleman from Kansas aims at, and I join him in the effort.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I appreciate the gentleman's statement because I believe and I know the gentleman from West Virginia is in accord with this view that the Government is the last employer that should give consideration to the employment of any individual who is not in accord with the American Government and the American way of life.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. GWYNNE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on July 15, at the conclusion of business on the Speaker's desk and after any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 1 hour on the subject of the Iowa centennial and that I may also have permission to yield to other Members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

GEN. BREHON SOMERVELL

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, one of the foremost officers that the American Army has ever produced, Gen. Brehon Somervell, commander of the Army Service Forces in World War II, has retired from active duty. As one who has had the opportunity to observe some of his unexcelled services to our country, I count it a privilege to give deserved recognition of his magnificent achievements in the most terrible conflict in all history.

On March 9, 1942, a Presidential directive reorganized the War Department of the United States Government. For four confused and unhappy months our Army had been trying to fight off our enemies at the same time it enlarged, trained, and equipped itself under a creaking peacetime structure. This structure was rapidly falling to pieces under the stress of war.

The new set-up divided the Army into Air and Ground Forces, Service Forces, defense commands, and overseas armies. The Air Forces were to train and fight in the air; the Ground Forces on the ground; the defense commands were to defend our coasts from invasion; the overseas armies were to train for service on foreign soil. Their duties and responsibilities were clear.

On the other hand, the task of the Service Forces was to be so immense, so involved, so far-reaching that even today most Americans are not familiar with its accomplishments. Never in history had so vast and intricate an organization been called for or created.

The Service Forces had to experiment, design, test, produce or procure, deliver, maintain, and in the end salvage all arms and ammunition, all tanks and trucks, radios, clothing, medical supplies, tents, bulldozers, small landing craft, smoke and gas, lumber and canvas—everything every soldier needs to fight and win the war.

They had to build the ports, the roads, and railroads, the hospitals and camp theaters, the posts themselves, at home and overseas. They had to feed the soldier, wherever he might be, shelter him, entertain him, transport him around the world. They had to act as his paymaster and banker, his lawyer and judge, his policeman and librarian, his telephone and telegraph company, his photographer, his bookkeeper, his landlord, his tobacconist, his preacher and his priest.

For every administrative and supply service, for every technical advance, the Army depended on its service forces. Ordnance, Signal Corps, Quartermaster, Chemical Warfare, Medical Department, Engineers, Transportation Corps, the Adjutant General's Department, the Office of the Judge Advocate General, the Provost Marshal, the Chaplains, the Education and Information Division, the Finance Department—all these were included in the stupendous organization known as Army Service Forces.

Our military leaders, having set up this immense and far-reaching division of our armed forces, asked themselves at once: Is there anyone in America who has the skill and experience, the military genius, the executive capacity, the administrative ability, the drive and the stamina, the intelligence and the passion for work required of the man who would head up this organization?

It was the Honorable Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War, who answered.

"How about this man Somervell?" he wanted to know.

He had been watching this man Somervell for several years, was impressed by what he saw. The Chief of Staff, Gen. George C. Marshall, and the Under Secretary of War, Judge Robert Patterson, agreed on the choice.

Somervell was given the job—the job that could not fail.

His appointment was greeted in some quarters by restrained enthusiasm. There were some old officers in the Army who feared that he would do just what he did do—clear out dead wood, put producers in crucial spots, throw the comfortable old cult of seniority out of the window and get results.

Somervell's military career had been both exciting and unconventional. He always seemed to have a peculiar genius for being at the right place and the right time to display those extraordinary characteristics which fitted him so well for his new job.

Graduating from West Point in 1914, he was on leave in Europe when Germany struck across Belgium to France. It was Second Lt. Brehon Burke Somervell, 22 years old, who organized the American tourists thus stranded in Holland, arranged for special trains, and got them safely to Paris ahead of the advancing war front. It was Somervell in Paris that same month who safely transported a million dollars in gold, packed in kegs, from the port of Brest to the American Embassy and who once more, at the direction of our Ambassador, fed the thousands of our stranded tourists, ran special trains to the ports, hired whole steamships and transported every last American who would come back to the United States.

A year later, this same young officer was helping make a survey along the Mexican border when Pancho Villa lunged at Columbus, N. Mex., and a then obscure brigadier general named John J. Pershing took out after him with his cavalry. A few days before Villa struck, there had been delivered to the post to which Somervell was attached the first motortrucks ever assigned to the Army. Most old officers scoffed. Tractors could not be trusted. Give them the Army mule every time. But, after a few days, the mules were not keeping up, and new records were being rung up in building the road that was Pershing's life line. The road made it possible to get the rations, grain, and water to Pershing and the general marked him down as a young man with a future.

Later, while serving in the Pittsburgh engineer office, as we entered the war in 1918, Somervell helped Gen. Edgar Jadwin organize an engineer regiment among the railroaders of that railroad city and went to France as its adjutant. There he built our first American railroad yard on foreign soil, patched up a leaky old brass-bound French locomotive, and took out our first military train. Then he built a laundry and a bakery and a casual camp. And building them, he broke all records for speed. That done, he got himself assigned to the front, and won the Distinguished Service Cross for gallantry on a scouting trip that took him through and behind the enemy lines.

After the war, when most Regular officers were settling down to the monotony of life on military posts, Major Somervell made an engineering survey of traffic conditions on the Rhine for the League of Nations, did it so well that he was sent to make the same kind of survey on the Danube. At about this same time, the new Turkish leader, Mustapha Kemal, decided that his awakened nation needed to know more about its own highway, rail, and waterway system, and Somervell was the logical man to make the survey. He spent a year at it.

When he returned to America he was put to work on the Mississippi River flood-control system, with headquarters in Memphis. After that came other challenging assignments, preliminary surveys on the proposal for the controversial Florida ship-canal project. When this was dropped, he was on his way back to the Mississippi River and was driving through the town of Gainesville, Ga., when that city was struck by a tornado which practically destroyed it.

He took command of rescue work, brought order out of chaos. Citizens were impressed by his calm efficiency. They demanded of the Federal Government that he be allowed to remain there and help rebuild their town. He did that job up to the hilt; he got impossible-to-get materials, he slashed red tape, he fought and beat the slow-moving processes of bureaucracy.

As he finished there, the Works Progress Administration was having a painful experience in New York. Half a dozen directors had come and gone in a year. Everyone from Tammany Hall to the Communists, from the labor unions to the old-line Republicans, were trying to get a finger in the WPA pie. The President assigned Lieutenant Colonel Somervell to the job, told him to again get order out of the chaos.

Somervell did just that. Almost at once the WPA in New York became an efficient business-like organization.

Then came the war emergency. Our cantonment program was breaking down. There were hints of scandal; there was a lot of marking time. Somervell got that job next. He drove it through to a triumphant finish.

That done, he was placed in command of the newly formed ASF. Had he not been so superbly fitted for this gigantic task, Brehon Somervell would have been one of our greatest commanders in the field. He could have led the armies victoriously against all our enemies, but no other officer in the United States Army had so completely the requisities for the doing of the nearly superhuman assignment entrusted to him.

As commander of the Army Service Forces, General Somervell faced a task of such magnitude that there were no rules, no blueprints, no precedent to guide him. He had to take vast chances. A score of times each day he had to make decisions on which the lives of thousands of Americans depended, yes, upon which hung the difference between victory and defeat.

He urged on the officers who worked under him, but never as hard as he drove himself. Those closest to him knew that he demanded results, that anything less than accomplishment was not enough. Because of his immense responsibility he could not permit personal likes or dislikes to influence his appointments. He dared not allow to continue in any vital spot any man who was not producing 100 percent, and then some.

This led to the legend that he was a ruthless commander. This was not a true picture of the man. Many a night he sat late in his office, girding himself for the unhappy task of telling some old friend that his work was not satisfactory, that someone else would have to take his job. Perhaps this was the hardest task he faced in his 4 years as chief of Army Service Forces. But he developed an organization that could be counted on to do its job, fully and on the minute.

The men around him evolved a slogan: "The impossible we do at once, the miraculous may take a little longer." It sounded like boasting. But it was the ringing truth.

The Germans and the Japanese had counted on the impossibility of our equipping, transporting, and supplying armies around the world. Their topmost military planners said positively that it could not be done. Somervell and the ASF did it.

Some of his critics have charged that he was reckless in the money he spent. But was he reckless—with the earth-shaking consequences at stake? Whenever there was a choice of saving a million dollars or saving the lives of young Americans, Somervell did not think twice. He spent the money. Yes, he spent a lot of money. At the height of the war, the ASF was spending $500,000,000 a week. And in spite of this astronomical sum, the instance of speculation, of graft, of favoritism in the expenditure of this money were astounding rare—less than one-thousandth of 1 percent.

The ASF at its height numbered a million soldiers and a million civilians—command of that large a force in itself is a task almost beyond comprehension. But it operated smoothly and efficiently, with little waste motion. Somervell put business into the business of war. He slashed red tape with a fine disdain that outraged many an old-time bureaucrat.

Under his leadership, American industry and American labor produced more goods than ever before in history; American transportation carried more freight; American farmers grew more food. With the arms, ammunition, and equipment furnished by the ASF, American soldiers fought and won the hardest war in history, farther from home than any war had ever been fought. So, as we look back on the results, World War II might not even have been won without him.

In numbering the heroes of this war, I hope that we will always remember with deep gratitude and appreciation the general who made victory possible by furnishing the sinews of war to the fighting men, who made a reality of the slogan: Enough, on time!

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HAYS. I have listened with considerable interest to the tribute paid by the gentleman from Tennessee to Gen. Brehon Somervell. He was a resident of my district when he was appointed to West Point, and the people of the city of Little Rock, in which he resided, have been very proud of his distinguished career. He is a remarkable administrator, a versatile officer, and his record in this war entitles him to the everlasting gratitude of the people of America. I thank the gentleman for having detailed some of the accomplishments of the Army Service Forces under the brilliant leadership of this distinguished former citizen of my State.

Mr. DAVIS. I thank the gentleman.

ITALIAN-AMERICAN WORLD WAR VETERANS OF THE UNITED STATES, INC.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, with the end of the war and return to their communities of millions of veterans, veterans' organizations are becoming most active and my attention has been called to the fact that due to peculiarities in the law and regulations many of these groups are denied rifles from the Government which they wish to use for ceremonial purposes.

It appears that unless a veterans' organization's name is actually in the law, or on an approved list, that organization is not entitled to any consideration in regard to these rifles, no matter how patriotic the services of its members during the war.

Veterans take great pride in their arms, their guards of honor, and firing squads, and it is my belief that if one veterans' organization is entitled to these guns from the Government, all of them are.

One organization which has not been able to obtain these ceremonial guns is the Italian-American World War Veterans of the United States, Inc. In order to correct this error, which I am sure is inadvertent, I have today introduced a bill which would add the name of this organization to the list of organizations which are entitled to receive these rifles. Those who can get these obsolete guns, by the way, pay $1 apiece for them, and there is a limit of 10 to each post.

There can be no question of the splendid patriotism of the members of the Italian-American World War Veterans of the United States, Inc., and the outstanding contribution that Italian-Americans have made in the winning of the war.

This organization at present has a membership of 32,000 in the States of New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Ohio, and is expanding all the time. The members are veterans of Italian extraction who have served under the American flag.

The fact that this organization, among many others, is not eligible for these rifles, was brought to my attention by Thomas F. Zaia, a veteran and attorney of Oswego, N. Y., who is a member of the Charles Crisafulli Post. This post, like many others, wishes to organize a rifle squad to function in military ceremonies, but is barred because of the law and regulations.

In my own district, the Thirty-fifth of New York, there are thousands of veterans of Italian extraction who served with honor and distinction in World War I and World War II. No group of Americans fought harder or more ably, and many gave their lives and their blood to preserve the Nation. On the home front members of their families were extremely active in all causes which advanced victory, and their purchases of war bonds and other patriotic endeavors were outstanding.

There is no question but that the Italian-American World War Veterans of the United States, Inc., are entitled to these rifles, and I urge upon the House the speedy passage of my bill, which will give them this very deserved recognition.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JUNE 25, 1946

(Legislative day of Tuesday, March 5, 1946)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, high and holy above all our thought, the path of prayer but leads us to an appalling sense of our own need and to a sickening realization of how far we have fallen short of the glory of Thy plan for us and for mankind. Yet apart from Thee our outlook for the future is clouded by apprehensions that haunt us and murder sleep; our minds are plagued with questions that we cannot answer as to how humanity with the dread secret of nature in its fumbling hands can live on this planet in peace and security. Our hopes of a united world, for which costly blood has been poured upon the anguished ground, seem ever to move into thin air from our eager grasp, like mirages of the desert. O God, the answers for which we gropingly seek in the darkness of our own devices are hidden in Thy heart.

Make us such men that Thou mayest speak to us and that to this bewildered generation we may be the broadcasters of Thy voice. So shall the world that ever surely climbs to Thy desire grow swifter toward Thy purpose and intent. In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

STATEMENTS OF CIRCULATION BY WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS—WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, on Friday, June 14, during my temporary absence from the Chamber, the Senate passed during the call of the calendar House bill 2543, requiring weekly newspapers to include a sworn statement of their circulation in their annual report of ownership to the Post Office Department. I had on a previous occasion interposed an objection to the consideration of the measure, and, that objection not having been waived by me prior to the time it was called up, I filed a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed by the Senate.

I desire now to state my reasons for that objection; and after I have stated these reasons I shall ask to have the motion to reconsider withdrawn, because I do not care to take the time of the Senate to fully debate the measure. However, I believe if the House and Senate had had full understanding of the principles involved neither body would have passed the bill.

The Post Office Department already has access to the actual number of papers which a newspaper circulates through the mail in the statements which are made to the local office for the computation of postage paid by the paper. This bill will provide no new information to the Post Office Department necessary for the proper conduct of its business.

The real intent of the bill is to police the circulation of newspapers, to give assurance to advertisers and advertising agencies of the truthfulness of circulation statements made by publishers. I have no toleration for the immorality practiced in a false circulation statement, and I am personally of the opinion that the weekly newspapers would profit in the end by a compulsory statement of sworn circulation. But it is not the function of the United States Government to police the circulation of a newspaper, any more than to require the newspaper publisher to pay his debts or to sweep the sidewalk clean in front of his office every morning. It is not possible to legislate morality into a man or a business. This bill, if it becomes a law, will be using the United States Government, through its Post Office Department, to perform a function for which there can be no just support. My objection to the bill has not been based on the objective rightly desired, but upon the perversion of the institution of the Government, and because of my growing objection to the Government sticking its nose into a lot of minor affairs of the people in which it has no legitimate business.

Mr. President, as I have stated, I have no objection to the purpose of the bill, and I have respect for the good intention of those who have been advocating it. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion to reconsider the vote by which H. R. 2543 was passed by the Senate on June 14, 1946.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF SENATE DOCUMENT NO. 206, ENTITLED "ECONOMIC CONCENTRATION AND WORLD WAR II"

Mr. MURRAY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 292), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ON EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT (S. DOC. NO. 209)

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document what is really a reprint of a document which I requested to be printed on September 15, 1943. It bears the same title. The subject matter has been brought up to date. The title of the document is "Questions and Answers on the Equal Rights Amendment" prepared by the research department of the National Woman's Party, Helena Hill Weed, chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNIFICATION OF THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask to have printed in the body of the RECORD a letter addressed by the President of the United States under date of June 15, 1946, to the Senator from Utah as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs on the subject of the unification of our armed forces.

I also ask to have printed following the letter from the President the joint letter of the Secretary of War, Mr. Patterson, and the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Forrestal, to the President under date of the 31st day of May last, on the subject of the unification of our armed forces; and following that matter the letter of the President to the Secretary of War, Mr. Patterson, and the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Forrestal, under date of June 15 last. All these letters are on the subject of the unification of our armed forces.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 15, 1946.

The Honorable ELBERT D. THOMAS,
Chairman, Senate Military Affairs Committee, Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: One of the most important problems confronting our country today is the establishment of a definite military policy.

In the solution of this problem, I consider it vital that we have a unified armed force for our national defense.

At my request the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have made a sincere effort to settle the differences existing between the services on this question. They have made splendid progress.

They have reached an agreement on eight important elements of unification, and with reference to the four upon which there was not full agreement, their differences are not irreconcilable.

On May 31, 1946, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy delivered a report to me of the results of their efforts. I have replied to them today stating my position on those points submitted to me for decision.

I enclose herewith a copy of the report of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, together with a copy of my reply to them.

You will note that there are now presented 12 basic principles upon which the unification of the services can be based. They are as follows:

1. SINGLE MILITARY DEPARTMENT

There should be one Department of National Defense. It would be under the control of a civilian who would be a member of the Cabinet. Each of the services would be headed by a civilian with the title of "Secretary." These Secretaries would be charged with the internal administration within their own services. They would not be members of the Cabinet. Each service would retain its autonomy, subject, of course, to the authority and over-all control by the Secretary of National Defense. It is recognized that the services have different functions and different organizations and for these reasons the integrity of each service should be retained. The civilian secretaries of the services would be members of the Council of Common Defense and in this capacity they would have the further opportunity to represent their respective services to the fullest extent.

2. THREE COORDINATE SERVICES

There should be three coordinate services—the Army, Navy, and Air Force. The three services should be on a parity and should operate in a common purpose toward over-all efficiency of the national defense under the control and supervision of the Secretary of National Defense. The Secretaries of the three services should be known as Secretary for the Army, Secretary for the Navy, and Secretary for the Air Force.

3. AVIATION

The Air Force shall have the responsibility for the development, procurement, maintenance, and operation of the military air resources of the United States with the following exceptions, in which responsibility must be vested in the Navy:

(1) Ship, carrier and water-based aircraft essential to naval operations, and aircraft of the United States Marine Corps.

(2) Land-type aircraft necessary for essential internal administration and for air transport over routes of sole interest to naval forces and where the requirements cannot be met by normal air transport facilities.

(3) Land-type aircraft necessary for the training of personnel for the afore-mentioned purposes.

Land based planes for naval reconnaissance, antisubmarine warfare and protection of shipping can and should be manned by Air Force personnel. If the three services are to work as a team there must be close cooperation, with interchange of personnel and special training for specific duties.

Within its proper sphere of operation, naval aviation must not be restricted but must be given every opportunity to develop its maximum usefulness.

4. UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS

There shall be maintained as a constituent part of the naval service a balanced Fleet Marine Force, including its supporting air component, to perform the following functions:

(1) Service with the fleet in the seizure or defense of advanced naval bases or for the conduct of such limited land operations as are essential to the prosecution of a naval campaign.

(2) To continue the development of those aspects of amphibious operations which pertain to the tactics, technique, and equipment employed by the landing forces.

(3) To provide detachments and organizations for service on armed vessels of the Navy.

(4) To provide security detachments for protection of naval property at naval stations and bases.

5. COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

To integrate our foreign and military policies and to enable the military services and other agencies of Government to cooperate more effectively in matters involving our national security. The membership of this council should consist of the Secretary of State, the civilian head of the Military Establishment, the civilian heads of the military services, and the Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, referred to below.

6. NATIONAL SECURITY RESOURCES BOARD

To establish, and keep up to date, policies and programs for the maximum use of the Nation's resources in support of our national security. It should operate under the Council and be composed of representatives of the military services and of other appropriate agencies.

7. THE JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF

To formulate strategic plans, to assign logistic responsibilities to the services in support thereof, to integrate the military programs, to make recommendations for integration of the military budget, and to provide for the strategic direction of the United States military forces.

8. NO SINGLE MILITARY CHIEF OF STAFF

In the opinion of the War Department, the Military Establishment should contain a single military Chief of Staff, who would serve as principal military adviser, available to offer advice when differences of opinion arise among the military heads of the several services. The Navy feels that the Joint Chiefs of Staff should be the highest source of military advice. The War Department is willing to omit the feature of a single Chief of Staff.

9. CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

To compile, analyze, and evaluate information gathered by various Government agencies, including the military, and to furnish such information to the National Defense Council and to other Government agencies entitled thereto. It should operate under the Council. An organization along these lines, established by Executive order, already exists.

10. PROCUREMENT AND SUPPLY

There should be an agency to prevent wasteful competition in the field of military supply and procurement through joint planning and coordination of procurement, production, and distribution.

11. RESEARCH AGENCIES

There should be an agency to coordinate the scientific research and development of the military services.

12. MILITARY EDUCATION AND TRAINING

There should be an agency to review periodically the several systems of education and training of personnel of the military services and to adjust them into an integrated program.

A plan of unification containing these 12 elements has my unqualified endorsement. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Staff of the Army, and the Chief of Naval Operations have assured me that they will support such a plan.

It is my hope that the Congress will pass legislation as soon as possible effecting a unification based upon these 12 principles.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

MAY 31, 1946.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Pursuant to your instructions, we have reviewed the major elements involved in establishing a greater measure of unification among our national security organizations, with a view to defining those matters upon which we agree and those upon which we differ. While we regret our inability to bridge completely the gap between us, we are pleased to be able to report a considerable area of agreement. Sincere efforts to expand it were made by both of us.

For your convenience, we outline below those matters upon which agreement exists and those upon which we are unable to agree. The order of presentation is not intended to indicate the relative importance of the various items.

I. Agreement exists on the following matters:

1. COUNCIL OF COMMON DEFENSE

To integrate our foreign and military policies and to enable the military services and other agencies of Government to cooperate more effectively in matters involving our national security. The membership of this council should consist of the Secretary of State, the civilian head of the Military Establishment (if there be a single military department), the civilian heads of the military services, and the Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, referred to below.

2. NATIONAL SECURITY RESOURCES BOARD

To establish, and keep up to date, policies and programs for the maximum use of the Nation's resources in support of our national security. It should operate under the council and be composed of representatives of the military services and of other appropriate agencies.

3. THE JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF

To formulate strategic plans to assign logistic responsibilities to the services in support thereof, to integrate the military programs, to make recommendations for integration of the military budget, and to provide for the strategic direction of the United States military forces.

4. NO SINGLE MILITARY CHIEF OF STAFF

In the opinion of the War Department, the Military Establishment should contain a single military Chief of Staff, who would serve as principal military adviser, available to offer advice when differences of opinion arise among the military heads of the several services. The Navy feels that the Joint Chiefs of Staff should be the highest source of military advice. The War Department is willing to omit the feature of a single Chief of Staff.

5. CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

To compile, analyze, and evaluate information gathered by various Government agencies, including the military, and to furnish such information to the national security council and to other Government agencies entitled thereto. It should operate under the council. An organization along these lines, established by Executive order, already exists.

6. PROCUREMENT AND SUPPLY

There should be an agency to prevent wasteful competition in the field of military supply and procurement through joint planning and coordination of procurement, production, and distribution. If there should be a single military department, this agency should be within the department.

7. RESEARCH AGENCIES

There should be an agency to coordinate the scientific research and development of the military services. If there should be a single military department, this agency should be within the department. The existence of such an agency would not remove the need for an over-all Central Research Agency.

8. MILITARY EDUCATION AND TRAINING

There should be an agency to review periodically the several systems of education and training of personnel of the military services and to adjust them into an integrated program. If there should be a single military department, this agency should be within the department.

As to the agencies mentioned in 6, 7, and 8 above, the War Department believes that these agencies will not be fully effective except as agencies within a single department. The Navy, on the other hand, believes that they will be more fully effective under a coordinated organization than under a single military department.

II. We are unable to agree on the following matters:

1. SINGLE MILITARY DEPARTMENT

WAR DEPARTMENT VIEW	NAVY DEPARTMENT VIEW
The Military Establishment should be set up as a single entity, headed by a civilian of Cabinet rank with authority and responsibility for the several services. The administration and supervision of the services should, however, so far as possible, be delegated to their respective heads in order that each service may have as much freedom of development as possible and in order that the traditions and prestige of each be not impaired.	The Navy favors unification, but in a less drastic and extreme form. It believes that serious disadvantages will result from combining the military services into one department. It would involve sacrifices of sound administrative autonomy and essential service morale.
(Only if there is this unity of structure, headed by an individual with power of decision, can we achieve action where there is now inaction, concerted policy where there is now disjointed policy, and economy of manpower, resources, and money where there is now waste of	The Navy recognizes the need for a greater measure of integration than now exists not only between the military departments but among all agencies of Government responsible for our national security. A single military department falls short of meeting these objectives.
	While the Navy feels that the measures upon which agreement exists, as set forth above, would fully meet the needs of present conditions, it sees certain advantages in them all. Any organization which does not facilitate prompt decision and prompt action thereon, totally ignores scientific development and the nature of modern war. The military security of the United States is a single objective. Accomplishment of this single objective with the greatest economy and efficiency demands unity of direction.)

WAR DEPARTMENT VIEW

NAVY DEPARTMENT VIEW

placing a Presidential Deputy with clearly defined powers of decision over specified matters at the head of the Council of Common Defense. From this as a starting point it should be possible to move forward such further measures of unification as become advisable, based on further experience.

The Secretary of the Navy recommends to the President, in view of the wide area of agreement which presently exists, that legislation be enacted at once giving statutory effect to those matters on which there is agreement. These steps will of themselves constitute a very substantial advance over our prewar, and even our present, organization for national security. If they are put into effect, it will be possible, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, to meet the nine specific objectives set forth in the President's message to the Congress on December 19, 1945. Further consideration and study can then be given to the remaining questions on which there is wide and general divergence of view between, and outside of, the military departments.

2. THREE COORDINATE BRANCHES

WAR DEPARTMENT VIEW

The Military Establishment should contain three coordinate branches—naval, ground, and air. Each should have a civilian head and a military commander. These officials should have access to the President, but not Cabinet rank since this would be in derogation of the position of the civilian head of the Military Establishment. As was stated above, the three branches should be given as much autonomy as possible. (Our experience in the last war clearly indicates that parity for the Air Forces and the operation of all three services as a team are essential to our national security.

NAVY DEPARTMENT VIEW

The Navy feels that our national security requires maintenance of the integrity of the Navy Department, headed by a civilian Secretary of Cabinet rank. Naval aviation, together with surface and subsurface components, have been soundly integrated within the Navy. The Navy feels that similar integration by the Army of its air and ground forces would be in the best interest of our national security.

However, if the alternatives were three military departments or one, the Navy would prefer three departments.

WAR DEPARTMENT VIEW

Everything that we know of the future points to an increase rather than a decrease in the decisive role of air power.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT VIEW

3. AVIATION

WAR DEPARTMENT VIEW

Responsibility for the development, procurement, maintenance, and operations of the military air resources of the United States should be a function of the Air Forces with the following exceptions, in which cases these responsibilities should be vested in the United States Navy: (a) Ship, carrier, and water-based aircraft essential to naval operations including those of the United States Marine Corps. (b) Land-type aircraft necessary for essential internal administration and for air transport over routes of sole interest to naval forces and where the requirements cannot be met by normal air transport facilities. (c) Land-type aircraft necessary for the training of personnel for (a) and (b) above.

(The Nation cannot afford the luxury of several completely self-sufficient services. The war demonstrated that they must be complementary — mutually supporting. With respect to landplanes, there are no purely naval functions which justify uneconomical duplication of equipment and installations. For example, the Air Forces already performs long-range reconnaissance for the ground forces and itself. The Navy's recognized requirement for the products of long-range reconnaissance can be effectively filled by the Air Forces. As regards anti-submarine warfare, it is the view of the War Department that the experience of the Army Air Forces in the last war adequately justifies the belief that landbased planes operated by the Air Forces can meet this requirement.)

NAVY DEPARTMENT VIEW

The Navy has no desire either to compete with, or to dictate to, the Army Air Forces. On the other hand, the Navy feels that its experience qualifies it to judge its own aviation needs.

One reason for the Navy's strong conviction against a single department is the continued efforts of the Army Air Forces to restrict and limit naval aviation. The Navy knows that these efforts, if successful, would seriously impair our sea power and jeopardize our national security.

To accomplish its fundamental purpose, the Navy needs a certain number of landplanes for naval reconnaissance, antisubmarine warfare and protection of shipping. Experience indicates that such landplanes, to be effective, must be manned by naval personnel trained in naval warfare. Lack of such aircraft under complete naval control as to design, procurement, operations, personnel, training, and administration might be disastrous to our national security. Similarly, the Navy must have air transport essential to its needs.

4. UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS

The Navy and the Army differ on the functions of the United States Marine Corps, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT VIEW

There shall be maintained as a constituent part of the naval service a balanced Fleet Marine Force including its supporting air component for—

(1) Service with the fleet in the seizure of enemy positions not involving sustained land fighting, and

(2) To continue the development of tactics, techniques, and equipment relating to those phases of amphibious warfare which pertain to waterborne aspects of landing operations.

NAVY DEPARTMENT VIEW

There shall be maintained as a constituent part of the naval service a balanced Fleet Marine Force including its supporting air component for—

(1) Service with the fleet in the seizure of defense of advance naval bases or for the conduct of such limited land operations as are essential to the prosecution of a naval campaign, and

(2) To continue the development of those aspects of amphibious operations which pertain to the tactics, techniques, and equipment employed by landing forces.

There is agreement upon the other primary duties of the Marine Corps, viz:

(1) To provide detachments and organizations for service on armed vessels of the Navy, and

(2) To provide security detachments for protection of naval property at naval stations and bases.

These matters have been explored by us with a sincere desire to comply with your wishes that the military services reach complete mutual agreement. Our failure to achieve complete unanimity is due to no reason other than that our respective views on the points of difference are as sincere as they are divergent.

Faithfully yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War.
JAMES FORRESTAL,
Secretary of the Navy.

JUNE 15, 1946.

The Honorable ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War.
The Honorable JAMES FORRESTAL,
Secretary of the Navy.

GENTLEMEN: I have read with care your joint report of May 31, 1946. It was also helpful to me to have the full oral presentation of the points involved, which you and the members of your departments made to me on June 4.

I am pleased and gratified at the progress you have made. I feel that we have come a long way in narrowing the zone of disagreement which had previously existed between the services. The full understanding reached on eight vital aspects of unification is a significant accomplishment. These eight elements are Council of Common Defense, National Security Resources Board, Joint Chiefs of Staff, omission of single Military Chief of Staff, Central Intelligence Agency, Procurement and Supply, Research Agencies, and Military Education and Training.

In addition to these eight points of agreement, I am advised also by representatives of both services that they are in accord in their attitude toward the provision in the Thomas bill, S. 2044, which provides for four assistant secretaries in charge of research, intelligence, procurement, and training, respectively. They believe that such assistant secretaries are unnecessary. I agree with their position that the presence of these four assistant secretaries is undesirable because they would greatly complicate the internal administration of the services and that such a plan would deprive the secretaries of the respective services of functions which are properly theirs.

Your report of May 31 listed four items upon which you were unable to agree. An analysis of your comments contained in your report, and in the lengthy discussion which we had, discloses that the services are not nearly so far apart in their attitude toward these points as had been reported. It is my firm conviction that the determination of these questions in the manner which I present herein will result in a plan which incorporates the best features offered by the respective services.

With reference to the points upon which full agreement was not reached my position is as follows:

1. SINGLE MILITARY DEPARTMENT

There should be one Department of National Defense. It would be under the control of a civilian who would be a member of the Cabinet. Each of the services would be headed by a civilian with the title of Secretary. These secretaries would be charged with the internal administration within their own services. They would not be members of the Cabinet. Each service would retain its autonomy, subject of course to the authority and over-all control by the Secretary of National Defense. It is recognized that the services have different functions and different organizations and for these reasons the integrity of each service should be retained. The civilian secretaries of the services would be members of the Council of Common Defense and in this capacity they would have the further opportunity to represent their respective services to the fullest extent.

2. THREE COORDINATED SERVICES

There should be three coordinate services—the Army, Navy, and Air Force. The three services should be on a parity and should operate in a common purpose toward over-all efficiency of the National Defense under the control and supervision of the Secretary of National Defense. The secretaries of the three services should be known as Secretary for the Army, Secretary for the Navy, and Secretary for the Air Force.

3. AVIATION

The Air Force shall have the responsibility for the development, procurement, maintenance, and operation of the military air resources of the United States with the following exceptions, in which responsibility must be vested in the Navy:

(1) Ship, carrier, and water-based aircraft essential to naval operations, and aircraft of the United States Marine Corps.

(2) Land-type aircraft necessary for essential internal administration and for air transport over routes of sole interest to naval forces and where the requirements cannot be met by normal air transport facilities.

(3) Land-type aircraft necessary for the training of personnel for the aforementioned purposes.

Land-based planes for naval reconnaissance, antisubmarine warfare, and protection of shipping can and should be manned by air force personnel. If the three services are to work as a team there must be close cooperation, with interchange of personnel and special training for specific duties.

Within its proper sphere of operation, naval aviation must not be restricted but must be given every opportunity to develop its maximum usefulness.

4. UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS

There shall be maintained as a constituent part of the naval service a balanced fleet marine force including its supporting air component to perform the following functions:

(1) Service with the fleet in the seizure or defense of advanced naval bases or for the conduct of such limited land operations as are essential to the prosecution of a naval campaign.

(2) To continue the development of those aspects of amphibious operations which pertain to the tactics, technique, and equipment employed by the landing forces.

(3) To provide detachments and organizations for service on armed vessels of the Navy.

(4) To provide security detachments for protection of naval property at naval stations and bases.

It is important that the basic elements of the plan of unification be stated clearly. The 8 fundamental points agreed upon and the 4 points which are herewith decided, constitute a total of 12 basic principles that should form the framework of the program for integration.

There is no desire or intention to affect adversely the integrity of any of the services. They should perform their separate functions under the unifying direction, authority and control of the secretary of national defense. The internal administration of the three services should be preserved in order that the high morale and esprit de corps of each service can be retained.

It was gratifying to have both of you and General Eisenhower and Admiral Nimitz assure me that you would all give your wholehearted support to a plan of unification no matter what the decision would be on those points upon which you did not fully agree. I know that I can count upon all of you for full assistance in obtaining passage in the Congress of a bill containing the 12 basic elements set forth above.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

OPENING OF MAIL AND PARCEL POST SERVICE TO ALLIED ZONES IN GERMANY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, all the world is watching the proceedings of the Big Four Foreign Ministers Conference in Paris.

One of the questions which is, of course, at stake is the ultimate outlook for the German people. When will they be able through our guidance and control to resume a proud, respected place in the family of nations?

Some months ago I addressed a communication to the commanders in charge of our troops in the occupied area of Germany in relation to mailing into that area parcels of food sent by Americans of German descent living in this country to relatives in Germany. That correspondence is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I have written an identical letter to the French, Russian, and British members of the Control Council of the Allied Control Authority in Berlin, respectfully asking that they open mail service between their zones in Germany and overseas, so that Americans of German descent in this country could forward parcels to the starving people of those areas. At the present time the American zone is open to mail service, but the foreign zones are not. I ask unanimous consent to have a copy of that letter printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
June 22, 1946.

FRENCH MEMBER, CONTROL COUNCIL, ALLIED CONTROL AUTHORITY, BERLIN, GERMANY.

DEAR SIR: I am respectfully addressing this inquiry to yourself and your Russian and British colleagues on the Allied Control Authority in order to urge the opening up of mail service between the United States and the British, French, and Russian occupied zones in Germany.

The purpose would, of course, be to enable American citizens to forward relief parcels through the mails to their friends and relatives in the afore-mentioned zones, just as relief packages may now be sent to the American occupied zone. I understand that at a meeting of your Council on June 14 of this month, final decision on this matter was delayed. May I humbly point out that each passing day is causing great anxiety in many American homes for the welfare of kinfolk abroad as well as much suffering, with which you are more familiar than I, in your zone.

I understand that the state of communications within your zone is still not entirely satisfactory, but I do not see this as sufficient reason for prohibiting mail service, particularly in view of the fact that the American occupied zone has, in spite of communication difficulties, allowed the resumption of mail. It seems to me, also, that each of the occupying authorities has an obligation to make provision for the necessary communications facilities in order to allow relief shipments to come in.

Back in January of this year, I addressed a letter to General McNarney urging the opening of the United States zone to mail service. Later I corresponded with General Clark in Austria along a similar line. Fortunately, our United States authorities saw fit to heed the appeal of many others and myself to allow the generous heart of America to forward supplies to the stricken people in the area under our control

Please be assured, sir, of my understanding of the difficulties of the problems faced by the Allied Control Authority. However, those difficulties will, in my personal opinion, be complicated and aggravated in the event that mail service is not resumed. The date at which the German people may resume a proud, respected place in the family of nations will be further delayed by failure to open mail service in all zones.

In the light of all the above, may I earnestly ask if you would advise me at the earliest possible date as to the facts in this matter regarding your official position on this subject, and may I fervently ask that you personally take the necessary actions to fill this humanitarian need.

The conscience of the American people has been deeply touched by the want and misery among our former foes, just as we have been even more concerned with the desperate circumstances experienced by our allies, including, of course, your own people.

We have not forgotten the injunction to "do unto others even as ye would have them do unto you" and to "love thy enemy as thyself." We are waiting with deep anxiety to be allowed to fulfill this creed through your action along the above lines and through other measures of famine relief.

In view particularly of the present strained state of Allied diplomatic negotiations over the peace settlement, it seems to me that Allied unity on this point of resuming mail service in Germany would be an encouraging and inspiring sign to both the Allied and former enemy people. Looking forward to hearing from you as soon as possible, and with my thanks for your consideration of the appeal, I am,

Sincerely yours,

ALEXANDER WILEY.

Mr. DONNELL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. I submitted yesterday an amendment which I intend to propose, under which all of titles I and II of the bill would be stricken out, and the paragraph which appears in the amendment upon Senators' desks would be substituted. My parliamentary inquiry is this: If we proceed in the course we are now pursuing, with the committee amendments being acted upon first, will I then have the opportunity, after the committee amendments shall have been acted upon, to present my amendment in the nature of a substitute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will have that opportunity.

Mr. SMITH. Before the amendment is acted upon I should like to say a word in this connection, because I find myself in a somewhat embarrassing situation. As a member of the Committee on Education and Labor I voted to report the bill to the Senate, but with the reservation that I might offer amendments on the floor. I desire to make it clear that in voting to report the bill I still reserved the right to present any matters which might come to my attention before final action was taken on the bill.

I immediately sent copies of the proposed measure to the Governor of my State. Gov. Walter E. Edge, and to Mr. Frank T. Judge, acting executive director of the Unemployment Compensation Commission of New Jersey, and asked the opinions of those gentlemen on the pending legislation as affecting the situation in my State of New Jersey. I received yesterday from Mr. Judge a telegram which I want to read to the Senate because it raises an important question so far as my State is concerned.

The telegram is as follows:

Understand H. R. 4437 order of business Senate this p. m.

This telegram was sent yesterday.

Proposed Senate version H. R. 4437 provides changes in Wagner-Peyser Act. Opinion of chief counsel, New Jersey Unemployment Compensation Commission, is: "Any changes in Wagner-Peyser Act affecting substantive rights or obligations of State of New Jersey under original arrangement would require new legislative action by New Jersey Legislature." Informed that 19 other unemployment compensation agencies take substantially the same position. Therefore, operation of employment service by State under proposed Senate revision H. R. 4437 would have to be postponed until State Legislature passed enabling legislation. This agency urges immediate enactment of appropriation bill H. R. 6739 followed by enactment of House version of H. R. 4437.

Mr. President, I read that telegram into the RECORD in connection with this discussion because it discloses an embarrassment in which I find myself respecting my own State, in supporting this legislation as it is now presented to the Senate.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BALL. On the point the Senator has raised, he will recall that it was raised by Mr. Bane, secretary of the Council of State Governments, in the full committee and afterward the committee added a proviso to section 4 which permits the States to accept the provisions of this act. The proviso, which appears on page 7 of the bill, is as follows:

Provided, That until the expiration of 1 week after the close of the first session of the legislature of any State which begins after the date of enactment of this proviso, such State shall, whether or not it has complied with the foregoing provisions of this section and all of the provisions of the other sections of this act, be entitled to obtain the benefits of such appropriations if the Secretary finds that such State is complying with the requirements of this act to the extent permitted under the law of such Sate.

The proviso was inserted to take care of the situation which might occur in a few States where the old statute accepting the Wagner-Peyser Act might not apply to all the provisions of this rewrite of that act. I think it would cover them until 1 week after the close of their next legislative session.
